"As far as I can find out, no one has considered the college question from the student's point of view. Of late years it has always been with regard to the effect on the college or university that all questions have been decided. The aim seems to have been to take in as many men as possible, no matter how many drop out and do not graduate. In other words, it is numbers and endowment, and the extent of the course of study that have been considered, rather than the results on the individual student for his after work. Formerly when our colleges were small affairs the professors knew the individual students, who were under their personal supervision, and whose whole life was known to the Faculty. Today, of course, this is impossible. A report of Harvard's Faculty shows that of the whole year of her average student, only 5 per cent. is spent in the class or lecture room, which is almost the only point where the student and professor come together. The college world has three influences, the pedagogical, the community life, and the home life. The community life of the college is like that of the world. We come in touch with people for the moment, but we know nothing about each other's real life, and the influence is, in consequence, not great. The pedagogical influence occupies but a small space of time after all, so that the great influence is the home life. At college that means frequently the fraternity life. You send three boys, A, B, and C, to the same college, and you get totally different results according to the influences of the places where the men live. To-day too much emphasis is laid on the college as a whole. That is, it is Harvard, Yale, or Princeton. In olden times the colleges were not valued except as they developed the individual. That is what we should turn over our attention to. It is what we do for the individual student to turn him out a good and useful bread-winner and citizen that counts. When once we have a man in college, we should not want ever to get him out, but should keep him in and make something out of him. As I have said, the college home life, whether or not it be the fraternity life, is to me the great determining influence for the future, and therefore it is at that end that we must get hold of the student."

"How do you think that can be done?" I asked.

"That is fully discussed in my book, but one way is by keeping the alumni more fully in touch with their college fraternities and have them know what is going on, and, as far as possible, responsible for what is going on."

This is certainly an interesting and original point of view, and Mr. Birdseye has given us much food for thought.

Mr. Birdseye has made an exhaustive study of student conditions in the older colleges, and has set them forth so that we may see how present conditions have changed, and of how little value the older methods are at the present time. He has also shown how different is the world into which the college student now steps out, and how he should have a correspondingly different training.

BOLTON HALL is an Irishman, but he has been in this country ever since he was a lad, and is a graduate of Princeton University. He is a very big man, with a kindly face. He is apparently much more interested in what can be done for humanity than he is in either the legal or the literary profession. He has a law office on Pine Street, and is engaged in practice, but I fancy much of his legal work is done out of the goodness of his heart, and is not always remunerative. He has a saying about the legal profession which I believe has enraged many of its members. It is this: "The law is a game, played by us lawyers under complicated rules, made by ourselves for our own benefit, and at the expense of our clients."

"How did you come to take up the law practice?" I asked.

"Oh, first I went into business, but I made a big failure of that. Then I had to do something, so I studied law. About the same time I became quite interested in the land cultivation question and wrote about that."

"Will you eventually give up the practice of law?" I asked.

He seemed to consider for a moment, and then he smiled and said: "I think I will have to give the answer that my little boy sometimes gives me when I ask him a question, and that is, "Do I have to decide that now?"

It is to be hoped that Mr. Hall won't give up his legal profession just yet, for he seems to have many good ideas of things that might be done to improve that profession. Mr. Hall has written several books. His new one which has been brought out is entitled "Three Acres and Liberty." The writing of that book is due to the interest he took in the so-called "potato patch plan" of the Mayor of Detroit, Hazen Pingree. It seems that Pingree was put up for office by the Republican Party at one time, but merely as a figurehead, and when he went about and stumped for himself and was triumphantly elected his party was aghast. Among his many reforms was his potato patch plan. He noticed that there were many vacant lots in the city that were not being used, also that the city charity roll was very large and that the city had to give a great deal to its poor. He considered the relation of these two facts, and it suggested his scheme. He obtained the use of the vacant lots and divided them up, loaning to each poor person about a third of an acre. The people became self-supporting. That is, they cost the association only about $2.50 per head, and reduced the city pay roll 60 per cent. All this greatly interested Mr. Hall, and he has been instrumental in carrying on similar experiments here with the aid of the charitable organizations.

More Lawyers Who Write Books.

He says: "We have some land in the Bronx that is being used in that way. The Astors loaned the land, and last year 500 persons, or about 100 families, were looked after and made self-supporting in this way at a cost of only $10 per family. Then here is another good example of what can be done in the way of intensive cultivation. Last week I went to Stony Wold, a sanatorium for consumptives in the Adirondacks. They have a German gardener there. He has only between two and three acres to cultivate, but during the time from the 15th of May until the frost came he raised enough garden truck to support 150 persons for the whole season, and he also was able to lay by quite a lot for the Winter. This is just an example of what can be done along that line."

"Do you do much in that way yourself?" I asked.

"No, I am not personally practical that way. I have, it is true, between 200 and 300 acres of my own under cultivation, but I have others doing the work for me. I like to gamble in land. Everybody today has the craze for a piece of land of his own, and every one is buying farms, and it is well people should know how much can be done with a little land. It will not only support the person living on the land if it is intensively cultivated, but by cultivation it is all the time increased in value, so that the person is not only earning a living, but also has something of real value that others keep on adding to."

Mr. Hall in his new book shows how this intensive cultivation can be and is practically carried out. He says: "We are not tied to a desk or to a bench. We stay there because we think we are tied, but we can trot off if we will." In showing this Mr. Hall has certainly rendered a great service. He illustrates his great belief in intensive cultivation by the following story:

"One of my countrymen was dictating a letter which his mistress was kindly writing for him to the people in Ireland, and he said: 'Write, if you please, that I get mate twist a week.' 'Why,' said his mistress, 'you get meat every day.' 'Ah, sure, mistress,' said he, 'but they'd never believe that.'"

For the same reason I have said in my book much less than could have been said about the capacities of an acre. I am preparing another one which will give some exceptional instances.

THERE are few law books whose covers are ever opened by any one who is not a member of the legal profession, but Francis L. Wellman's book on "The Art of Cross-Examination" is an exception.

In an interview with Mr. Wellman the other day I was ushered into his private office and received with a cordiality that betokened a man of leisure rather than one of the busiest trial lawyers of the New York Bar. I tried to elicit from Mr. Wellman how it was he came to write his book on cross-examination, and Mr. Wellman finally replied: "I suppose if a man makes up his mind to write a book on any subject, he chooses one about which he imagines he has some knowledge, and as there had been no book written on that subject, and as it appeared to be one which was very little understood by the average trial lawyer in this country, it occurred to me that possibly some of the cases that I had tried myself would prove amusing to the profession and instructive to the younger lawyers at the bar, and as both my boys were studying law and were going to become lawyers, I thought it would be a pleasant little legacy to hand down to them."

"Have there been many editions of the book?"

"The book has sold far beyond all expectations of either the publishers or the author. Before it was published it was submitted to several lawyers for review, and they advised its acceptance. A thousand copies were printed, but they were hardly issued before they were all sold, and the first edition was printed over and over again during the first year, until at the end of eight months I was requested to rewrite it and enlarge it and issue a new edition. The publishers told me the book had had a wonderful sale, as it is read, if possible, more by laymen than it is by lawyers, and yet the largest law book sellers in the city claim that they have never had a law book which has sold so well."

"Are the cases cited in your book based upon your own experiences?" I asked.

"Yes," replied Mr. Wellman; "almost all of them. There is a very curious thing about it, though the book was reviewed all over the country. I have a large scrap book filled with these notices, but no reviewer has recognized that the author had taken any part in the examinations cited and many reviewers suggested that it was a pity that the author had given no personal experiences of his own. I made a special effort to suppress anything that might be personal in the cases cited."

It is the general belief that Mr. Wellman tries as many jury cases each year as the average lawyer tries during his professional career. He was graduated from Harvard College and the Boston Law School, and then taught at both the Harvard and Boston Law Schools. Finally he was admitted to practice in Boston, and gossip has it that he was too timid to conduct his first case alone, and called to his assistance the best jury lawyer in New England—ex-Senator Bainbridge Wadleigh. This was proved to be quite a cause célèbre, and at its conclusion Mr. Wadleigh sent for Mr. Wellman and offered him a third interest in his business if he would become his partner, saying: "You are sure to be a successful trial lawyer because of your ability to receive the most damaging evidence with a perfectly satisfied smile."

After several years' partnership with Mr. Wadleigh, Mr. Wellman was offered a position in the Corporation Counsel's office in New York City, where he defended the municipality for eight years in all of its principal jury cases.

His career in the District Attorney's office in the trial of Carlyle Harris, Dr. Buchanan, Dr. Meyer, and many other noted criminals is of so recent date as to require no mention.

I asked Mr. Wellman why he thought the character of the litigations was changing in New York, and why there were so many accident cases and so few contract and commercial cases tried. On this subject he seemed much interested, and said: "It is the law's delay, in my judgment, that prevents the more important business disputes from reaching the courts. I have become very much interested lately in the procedure in the English courts. It appears that in the English courts an important litigation can be commenced, issue joined, trial had, appeal taken, heard and decided all within ninety days, and this is largely owing to the system of masters which they have adopted in London. Before these Masters litigants appear, in the first instance, and their disputes are narrowed down to a few issues which are finally submitted for trial. No defense is allowed in cases where there is no merit, and the costs of litigation are so large as to discourage plaintiffs from litigating doubtful or worthless claims.

I asked Mr. Wellman if this system could be introduced into New York State, and he replied that with some modifications it doubtless could, and in his judgment it was the duty of some lawyer who had been successful and was able to retire from his profession to spend a year in England studying the procedure there, with a view to returning to New York and drawing the necessary bills to put through the Legislature amending our court practice, in order to do away with the curse of our American courts—the law's delays.

DAVID GRAY is a resident of Buffalo. It was there he was born and there he has spent much of his life. At one time he was a practicing lawyer, so I wrote and asked him how he came to take up that profession. I got the following reply:

"I studied law because it seemed eminently respectable and an easy road to affluence. I gave it up because I was a bad lawyer. I practiced three years, from 1899 to 1902, and during that time I mismanaged various important matters for my friends and aided the District Attorney of Erie by defending many of the criminals he prosecuted. I am glad to say as a good citizen that my skill and eloquence never succeeded in saving a guilty man."

Before quoting Mr. Gray further it may be well to say that a lawyer who does work in a criminal court is obliged as a matter of courtesy to defend a criminal when called on to do so by the Judge. Of course the criminal so defended is always a poor person and has no money with which to pay the lawyer. Therefore Mr. Gray's next remark is highly amusing.

"The defense of criminals while entertaining I found expensive, as most of them preferred the expensive grades of tobacco while languishing in jail, and all insisted on pocket money. Our partings after trial were also somewhat affecting."

In answer to my inquiries about "Gallops" and how he came to write it, he replied: "I began writing 'Gallops' partly because I was seduced into it by the blandishments of a literary friend, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer; for the rest I suspect it was my fate, who troubles my conscience when I contemplate becoming a stock broker or a horse dealer. Why am I not allowed to pursue one of these pleasurable professions instead of literature I do not know, but my demon is decided about it. * * * I have written a few little stories that reflect some of the happiness of being young and on a good horse, but whether I am ever going to learn anything about life and find the right way of telling it, I don't know. I haven't even an opinion as to what I shall accomplish. However, this thing that they call the literary art is all I have ahead of me and the eyes and health that make it possible for me to labor at it seem to have returned after seven years of eclipse. If I had the altruism of my better moments, I should devote myself to lecturing on that mysterious life destroyer, eye strain, and the amazing feats of one Chalmers Prentice, M. D., who seems to have found a way to relax it in refractory cases. Writing plays and short stories is an unimportant matter compared to relieving people whose lives are wrecked by a cause so obvious that no one pays attention to it."

Mr. Gray's last story, "The Honor of the Escort," was the result of his investigations in the Philippines. He says: "I went out in 1902 to look for literary material and to gather anti-imperialistic ammunition. I found much literary material, but, unfortunately, it had already been made up into stories by Mr. Kipling. As for the anti-imperialistic data, they were so noticeable by their absence that common honesty compelled me to revise my convictions and conclude that, although the Filipino insurrection was a frightful blunder, wholly avoidable and chargeable to McKinley's lack of decision, nevertheless our conduct of hostilities and the pacification of the Islands were all that could be expected from any Government."

Not realizing that Mr. Gray was not practicing, I asked him if he thought it possible to carry on two professions at the same time, to which his reply was:

"Doubtless it is within the scope of many intellects. For myself, I know that it is impossible. An art, I take it, is analogous to a wife, demanding incessant and never satisfied, yet duly yew may be but the close confusion of enforced bachelorhood for one is my answer."

KING RICHARD III. AS A MOLLYCODDLE

The Latest Historical Research Makes Out the Last of the Line of Plantagenets a Paragon of Virtue—Sir Clements Markham's New Book.*

FOR the last century and a half a doubt or a protest has been uttered now and then by students of history as to the villainous reputation which the last Plantagenet King has borne. But Sir Clements Markham, the most recent delver into the original sources, has not only rehabilitated his character, but has made out for him such a list of goodly qualities as makes his virtue fairly startling. Sir Clements finds that he was a good son, a devoted husband, and a loving father; that he cherished his relatives, was a kind and trusty friend, and an honorable and magnanimous foe; that he was liberal, open-handed, and generous; that his uprightness and good faith were relied upon by enemies and friends alike; that he was lenient to his enemies when the immediate danger was over, and generous without parallel in English history to the families of attainted rebels; that he was patriotic, sought the welfare of his people, wished to consult public opinion and be guided by it; that he was devout and religious, and a friend and patron of arts and letters and industry; that he checked corruption in the public service, strove to improve the morals of the people, and desired to reign in the hearts of his countrymen.

Out of the shades of history draw a jury of his peers—Henry VII., Henry VIII., Catherine de Medici, Louis XIV.—and try him before it on such a list of indictments as this and would they not contemptuously pronounce him a mollycoddle of the worst sort, stupidly unappreciative of his divine privileges and dangerous to the glory of royalty! It is not quite fair to these rulers of an earlier day to judge them by the morals and standards of our own time. To attempt to make the conduct of a Prince who ate with his fingers and never bathed square with twentieth century ideas shows a rueful lack not only of historical perspective, but of an ordinary sense of justice. Conscience in kings has developed coincidently with the evolution of the bathtub and the use of the fork at meat. Elizabeth was the first Anglo-Saxon ruler who possessed the latter implement, and hers was merely an admirable curiosity and not for practical use. And so Sir Clements has injured his case by too ardent a defense of his client. His frequent and admiring adjectives do "protest too much." The fulsome adjective, however admirable it may be in a private friendship, when sprinkled over the pages of historical research and critical discussion becomes as suspicious as the Greeks bearing gifts. If he could have imposed upon himself something of the cynical temper and cool judgment with which Horace Walpole, first of Richard's defenders, wrote his "Historic Doubts," his book would have been doubled in value to the general reader.

But notwithstanding his always laudatory attitude, Sir Clements has made a contribution of very great importance to the literature concerning the character and reign of Richard III. In every instance he has gone to the first sources for his facts and dates. While he has not succeeded in digging up much that was not known before, he has made logical sequences out of events and has contrasted facts with the assertions of chronicles in such a way as to make his argument always ingenious and often convincing. And without doubt his book strengthens very much the contention of those who believe that the young Plantagenet King was basely maligned by the early chronicles and by the later historians whose narratives are based upon these accounts.

The first half of the volume is given up to a résumé of the life and times of Richard, and gives a fairly full biographical account of him from his birth to his tragic death on Bosworth Field. The second half takes up and examines, one after another, the chief accusations that have been made against him—his deformity, the murder of Edward of Lancaster and of Henry VI., his treatment of his wife, Queen Anne Nevill, and of the Countess of Warwick, the death of his brother of Clarence, the murder of the two little Princes, the sons of Edward IV.—and finds him not guilty upon every point. He also devotes a chapter to an examination of the authorities responsible for the charges, and shows that most of them are not worthy of the credence they have enjoyed. Another analyzes the actions of Henry VII., as concerned with his predecessor, and his character, in order to make these throw as much light as possible upon the question at issue.

With regard to the two little Princes whose alleged fate has moved the hearts of so many generations, and whose taking off has been looked upon for four centuries as the crowning villainy of the cruelest tyrant that ever sat upon a throne, Sir Clements makes out a very strong case. By evidence from the accounts of the royal household he shows that there were in the household of the King children of such high rank as makes it impossible for the reference to be to any other than the offspring of Edward IV., and that they were there until the Spring of 1845, almost two years after the date of their alleged murder, and within a few months of Richard's death and Henry's accession. His conclusion is that Richard maintained his nephews in his own household in comfort and honor until the breaking out of the insurrection made it necessary for them to be sent to the Tower for their own safety. He further concludes, and enforces his conclusion with much ingenious and plausible argument, that it was Henry VII., a year after his accession, who murdered the little Princes and caused the charge to be made by historians in his pay that the deed had been done by Richard III. As contributory evidence, and it is certainly very strong in his favor, he shows that in the Act of Attainder which followed immediately upon Henry's seizure of the throne, Richard is accused of many acts of cruelty and tyranny, but among them the murder of his nephews is not mentioned. He points out that Henry got possession of the Tower at once, and that if the two Princes had been missing he would not have overlooked the opportunity of adding such a heinous count to his long list of accusations. But nothing was said about their death or disappearance until years afterward. If Sir Clements could have found in the accounts of the royal household any items concerning maintenance for the little prisoners for the year he thinks them to have been so held after Henry's accession his case would be irrefragible. But he does not make known whether or not he even looked for it.

The final chapter is devoted to an examination of the views concerning Richard III. of Mr. James Gairdner, the foremost authority upon the life and reign of the last of the Plantagenets. Although Gairdner rejects as unworthy of credence many of the stories about Richard and believes his character to have had many admirable qualities, yet he holds the King to have been guilty of the worst of the charges against him. Sir Clements takes up the arguments upon which Mr. Gairdner bases his belief and examines them in the light of his own findings. The result is that he confirms himself in his previous convictions. But he has not been able, he admits, to convince Mr. Gairdner that he is right.

The book contains an admirable index, genealogical tables of Richard III., Anne Nevill, and Edward IV., a map of the battle of Bosworth Field, and a portrait of Richard taken from the picture in the National Portrait Gallery.

Reform and Ridicule.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In reading "The Warden," written in 1855 by Anthony Trollope, I find the following comment by one of his characters on Mr. Popular Sentiment's writings. This is so applicable to our present-day methods that I thought it might be of interest to some of your readers:

"In former times great objects were obtained by great work. When evils were to be reformed reformers set about their task with grave decorum and laborious argument. An age was occupied in proving a grievance, and philosophical researches were printed in folio pages, which it took a life to write and an eternity to read. We get on now with a lighter step and quicker. 'Ridiculum acri Fortius et melius magnas plerumque secat res.' Ridicule is found to be more convincing than argument, imaginary agonies touch more than true sorrows, and monthly novels convince when learned quartos fail to do so. If the world is to be set right, the work will be done by shilling numbers."

BOOKS ON BIRDS.

A New Edition of Mrs. Wright's "Birdcraft"—"Birds That Every Child Should Know."

MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT'S "Birdcraft," (New York: the Macmillan Company) has attained its seventh edition, sufficient proof both of the capable manner in which the book is written and the popular interest in a subject the literature of which is now increasing with astonishing rapidity. The work is described as a "field book of two hundred song, game, and water birds, with eighty full-page plates by Louis Agassiz Fuertes." A "field book" is the best possible description of the volume of 300 pages. It is to the ornithologist what an elementary botany might become to the lover of wild flowers, with the addition that the technical portions of the work are interspersed with descriptive passages revealing some literary skill on the part of the author and a genuine appreciation of nature. The book is, so to speak, a guide to the realm of bird-land, well composed and arranged.

"In Bird-Land with Field-Glass and Camera," by Oliver G. Pike (New York: A. Wessels Company, 60 cents), is illustrated with eighty-three photographs taken directly from nature by the author. The book is in its second edition and is more in the form of a record of personal observations than a technical compilation. The author treats his bird subjects in a more personal manner and is almost as much interested in describing methods of investigation and photography as in summarizing the habits of the feathered flock. The work is divided into four parts, dealing respectively with the inhabitants of the woods, fields and hedgerows, streams and their banks, and the bird-people of Norfolk. Almost every photograph has its history of a day spent out of doors, and every illustration has thus a special and local significance. The songs of the different birds are described or imitated; their manners, their customs, and, so to speak, their temperaments—for the winged people have as many contrasting temperaments, jolly and melancholy, as human beings. Now and then a bit of sunshine philosophy gratefully and gracefully creeps in, so to speak, between the leaves of the trees and the less perishable pages of the book.

However, a more fascinating book for the average reader who pretends to no exact knowledge of ornithology and has no ambition to become an expert, than either of the foregoing is a brand new volume issued by Doubleday, Page & Co. and entitled "Birds that Every Child Should Know," by Neltje Blanchan. This volume of 375 pages (issued at $1.20) is concerned exclusively with the birds of the Eastern parts of the United States, bringing the subject delightfully near home. As you read you can readily imagine yourself traveling through field or forest, holding some small brother sister by the hand, and seeing nature beautified with a touch of childish mystery. You have the sharp eyes of the little child to help you see more clearly than you might see with your own book-worn vision, and the enthusiasm of the child to spur you on and inspire you with a sense of the freshness of things.

This bird book, though a good, sound example of investigation, is lightened with a touch of fantasy and brightened with a quaint and suppressed sense of humor. If only people would write for grown-ups as charmingly as some of them write for the younger member of the family! We find the crow, blue jay and Canada jay classified in a separate chapter under the head of "rascals we must admire." Our five common woodpeckers come in another chapter, bearing the solemn title of "Non-Union Carpenters." And a half-humorous interpretation is immediately put on that chapter headed "The Ill-Assorted Blackbird Family," which tells about the similarities and differences of such birds as the bobolink, cowbird, redwing, meadow lark, orioles and blackbirds.

The pictures, though perfectly veracious, also have this charming sense of nature-humor. The row of six "half-grown little green herons on dress parade" is enough to delight the heart of the most sophisticated "human." The birds are not personified, for the work is too much expository to permit of such stretches of the imagination. But, following the rambling descriptions of the author, who writes as the reader fancies he must talk, the little people of the air take on distinct personalities and have an almost human interest. We have funny sidelights on the way they build their nests and rear their young, on their Winter and Summer customs, and on their means of finding a livelihood. The reader who peruses this volume may turn later to more technical works, but many days will pass before he will forget this original inspiration as the incentive to his later investigation. One feels that it would be fine to make the personal acquaintance of the author—and that is saying much. Here is an author who knows the calls of the woodland as a man might know his multiplication table.

A NOVEL OF SENSATION

THE ADVENTURESS

"The Adventuress" is a novel of sensation. If you like a book that fairly bristles with action, bubbles with incident, that seethes with all the good points of the story teller's art, by all means read "The Adventuress."

LONDON LITERARY TALK.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1907.

LONDON, April 5.—The autograph letter by Charles Dickens which has just been unearthed for a provincial museum by some jubilant person, is one which the novelist without doubt would most heartily have preferred had been kept eternally buried. It is a reply sent his never-do-well brother Frederick, who had asked a loan of £30. Dickens's refusal, despite its signature, "Affectionately, C. D.," reads like a communication from a cold and unsympathetic acquaintance. We are told that the erring brother deserved no kinder treatment. Whatever the rights of the case may be, though, it is certain that Dickens would view with much annoyance the discovery and publication of the letter some fifty years after it was written.

Great men's letters have often met fates of which the writers would have disapproved, as was the case with the Brownings' love letters. Perhaps the best plan is for a great man to keep constantly before him the idea that his letters will probably be published some day, and therefore remember to conduct his correspondence with appropriate grace and discretion.

SUCH indeed is the plan followed at the present by one distinguished literary man, whose name, for obvious reasons, it would be ungracious to mention. For example, this gentleman, whenever he feels he has achieved a letter which would look well on the pages of the "Life and Letters" which he foresees in his mind's eye will appropriately perpetuate his memory, appends to it a note requiring the person who receives it to preserve it with all care. His friends are amused, to be sure, but when the letters come to be published it is safe to suppose that there will be among them no ugly little notes like that of Dickens to his impecunious brother.

MRS. SELLAR WITTY, an old lady, an aunt of Andrew Lang, is bringing out a volume of reminiscences with Blackwoods. The book will include personal memories of Tennyson, Carlyle, Browning, Turgenieff, and George Eliot, and promises to be extremely entertaining. The same first still continues patiently to announce Quiller-Couch's volume on George Eliot, which has been promised for the last five years. It is whispered that the blame for the non-appearance of the book lies entirely at the door of Quiller-Couch.

The Modern English Writers Series, to which it will, when published, be the concluding volume, has been an unlucky one. Mrs. Craigie, who was to have written "Froude," and Henley, who was to have written "Dickens," both died before their tasks were accomplished.

JOHN LONG announces, under the rather discourteous title "The Fool Hath Said," a reply to the Rev. R. J. Campbell's famous new theology. Grant Richards announces "Love and All About It," by the well-known humorist, Frank Richardson, and the Duckworths are to publish Vols. V. and VI. of "The Dawn in Britain," which will complete Charles M. Doughty's tremendous epic poem.

GALBRAITH.

A HISTORY FROM JAPAN.

AN elaborate and seemingly official exposition of Japanese national policies and activities comes from Japanese of high standing, and promises to be an important historical publication. The book, to be issued this month by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. under the title "Japanese Rule in Formosa," is by Yosaburo Takekoshi, with a preface by Baron Shimpei Goto, Chief of the Civil Administration, and translated by George Braithwaite. A timely purpose of the book will be to give light on the possible question of Japan and the Philippines.

Zangwill Stories.

A new volume of Zangwill's short stories under the title "Ghetto Comedies," will be published within the month by the Macmillan Company. Along with this will appear his "Thay That Walk in Darkness," republished under its old title, "Ghetto Tragedies."

BOSTON NOTES.

More Novels by Well-Known Writers —Other Books to Appear This Month.

MR. CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS'S "Haunters of the Silences," soon to be published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co., has four colored drawings by Mr. Charles Livingston Bull, but the dominant impression left by the book is put into words in the title. The comparatively noisy forest and marsh, echoing and repeating the movements of their denizens, make the background for some of the stories, but they are not so real to the reader as the untracked air, the ocean's depth in which sound may be neither made nor heard, the rayless burrow, and the wide stretching snows, haunted by creatures compared to whom the great desert cats are heavy footed. The touches by which the effect is produced are delicate and fine, and the stories are so arranged as to make a genuine climax, artfully heightened by a really sinful bit of temporary deception in the last, "The Cuttlefish and the Whale." The reader of experience thinks that he is offered a story of hidden treasure with dying pirate, map, and all the rest of the apparatus complete, and he wags his wise head, saying: "This lack of originality is painful," and he reads carefully that he may not lose a single pang, and finds himself fairly overwhelmed by terrors vast enough to make a third of a million in gems rather small pay for facing them. "The Haunters of the Silences" is a greater book than its forerunners.

This month Messrs. Page & Co. will also print a third edition of "The Fair Land Tyrol," to which "The Italian Lakes," by the same author, Mr. W. D. McCracken, has drawn renewed attention, and they will publish a new illustrated edition of Mr. Arthur Morrison's "The Chronicles of Martin Hewitt," with six full-page drawings by Mr. W. Kirkpatrick.

Many a time has the mirror been held up to genius not yet entered into its kingdom, but never to quite so many types at once as in Ellis Meredith's "Under the Harrow," which Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. are publishing this week. The possible artist, the possible actress, the possible novelist, playwright; the actual lawyer and doctor, lacking nothing but clients and patients; and the musician, who is still second violin, meet under one roof and work, criticise, and dispute until good fortune comes to all of them, not fortune too good to be true, but such as any honest worker may reasonably expect. The interest lies less in the end than in the talk, which is intelligent and vivacious and written for this country and this day, and worth the reading of every struggling genius, of whom there must be some millions in this land of multitudinous schools and libraries.

Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. are to be the American publishers of the King's Classics, to be henceforth issued in London by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, who have bought the series of its originators, the Delamore Press. May 1 Messrs. Luce & Co. will issue "The Fortuna Filly," by Mr. Howell Scratton. As its title indicates, this is a racing novel, but does not presuppose such a profound acquaintance with the usages of the English turf as to be unintelligible to home-keeping Americans.

To expect a limited edition is to understand the feelings of the printer of Franklin's time when nothing was certain but death and taxes. The Howell letters which Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. intended to publish to-morrow, are delayed by some piece of special precaution, but the other books announced for that date will come in due course. Mrs. Davis's "The Price of Silence," Mr. Carleton Noyes's "The Gate of Appreciation," Mr. Ross's "A Theory of Pure Design," and "The Cause and Extent of the Recent Industrial Progress of Germany," by Dr. Earl Dean Howard, professor in the Wharton school of finance and commerce, University of Pennsylvania.

April 17 will bring Mr. Charles Francis Adams's "Three Phi Beta Kappa Addresses," a new edition of Mr. Azel Ames's "The Mayflower and Her Log," and the limited centennial edition of "The Hanging of the Crane." The first fourth of the thousand copies printed will have Mr. Arthur Keller's thirteen photogravure drawings printed on India paper, mounted and colored by hand; the remainder of the edition will be bound in blue boards, with the pictures on Japan paper. As is well known, this book is the literary link between Longfellow and Mr. Aldrich, dear friends in life now no longer divided. Prof. Francke's German "Ideals of Today," and Mrs. Wiggin's "New Chronicles of Rebecca" will appear on the same date, but Mrs. Wiggin sails for Europe next Wednesday, leaving her book to the eager readers and also leaving a charming new photograph.

All the newly discovered Garrick letters of which some parts have appeared in recent numbers of The Atlantic Monthly, will be published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in the Riverside Press Series of Special Limited Editions. The letters make a two-hundred-page octavo, printed in the Oxford style never before used in a Riverside Press book. Garrick's spelling and abbreviations will be followed, and the volume will include thirty illustrations from original sources, among them portraits, reproductions of manuscript, and views of theatres. The frontispiece is to be a photogravure, the other pictures heliotypes. The editor, Prof. George P. Baker of Harvard has set the letters in a continuous narrative, thoroughly annotated, and were it ever so plainly bound and printed, the book would attract all who care for the days of Johnson and Burney and for Garrick himself. The title is to be "Some Unpublished Correspondence of David Garrick."

The title of "Lorenzo of Sarsana," Miss Elizabeth Lewis's novel, published this week by Mr. Richard G. Badger, seems to presage a tale of sword and cloak and dagger, with possible poison and abduction added for makeweight, but it is really a tale of modern Genoa and modern Americans and Italians, among the latter a charming old artist, who worships the superb city and her memories with all his heart. As for Lorenzo's self, he is an American or an Italian, as one chooses to take him, and he takes himself as almost anything, according to circumstances.

At the Merrymount Press Mr. Updike is preparing a second edition of his grandfather's "History of the Episcopal Church in Narragansett, Rhode Island," including a History of Other Episcopal Churches in the State." The editor, the Rev. Dr. Daniel Goodwin, has revised and enlarged the work, and has retained the original appendix containing the Rev. James MacSparren's "America Dissected," extremely rare in 1847, when the history was first printed. This appendix also contains a transcript of the Narragansett Parish Register from 1718 to 1774, copies of other old papers, and many genealogical and biographical notes.

It will be remembered that Dr. Goodwin was the editor of The MacSparren Diary which came from the Merrymonnt Press in 1899, and that he was formerly rector of St. Paul's Church, Narragansett, and has been as enthusiastic a student of the social and ecclesiastical history of Rhode Island as Wilkins Updike, the author of the "History."

Originally this work contained 500 pages; the present edition includes nearly twice as many, and forms two volumes which will resemble The MacSparren Diary in size and form. The list of subscribers to the original edition might be summerized as all the qualified voters of Rhode Island; nearly half of the second edition is already taken. An entirely new attraction has been given to the book by the publisher, who has for some years occupied himself in collecting matter enitable for use in this edition, and has enriched it with some forty full-page portraits after originals by the best artists of the time. Copley, Stuart, Lawrence, Smibert, Malbone, Peale, and Trumbull are among them, and very stately were the worthies they painted and very sumptuous the lace and jewels of the ladies.

Novelists and writers for boys if in search of a new species of hero might very well consider the case of Mr. C. F. King, Jr., and his "A Boy's Vacation Abroad," which, making no attempt at literary merit, declared by its warmest encomiasts to have none, and published in the last wild weeks of the "Christmas rush," finds itself at Easter with its fifth thousand complete and its author with a pretty check for royalties by way of an Easter gift.

Mr. Stratemeyer's "Dave Porter's Return to School," published this week by the Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, is a wonderful chain of accidents from which the hero so regularly recovers that after the first halfecore or so one can see him tumble out of or off of any conceivable vehicle without caring whether he falls on one side of his head or on the other; he does not seem able to fall on any other part. He brings robbers to justice and rescues some of his schoolmates from its operation, for a reprimand is the severest punishment of which the modern descendant of the Puritans can read with approval, and he plays football under difficulties, and is a good boy. His syntax is bad, but no worse than that of his teacher. STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston April 5, 1907.

Mr. John Corbin's Plans.

It seems to be good news that Mr. John Corbin, the author of "The Cave Man," will devote all his time hereafter to writing books and magazine articles. He will retire from daily journalism this Spring.

THE CENTURY CO.

THE EQUITABLE UNION CONCERNS EVERYBODY, as it is world wide in its principles and application. This inspired Book presents a broad and equitable basis for settling all vexed questions, both religious and secular. The revelation for a universal Brotherhood and Sisterhood of Trio Man, with one Spirit Father, amazes and delights the clergy and many others. Moses, John, and Jesus are presented in a new and charming light. Its methods for Equitably distributing wealth, securing general intelligence, and abolishing poverty and crime, are far in advance of the Karl Marx and Henry George theories.

A million of this matchless book should be distributed within the near future. Price, $1.50. All dealers. The Equitable Union Publishing Company, 419 Lafayette Street, New York.

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

W. W. Jacobs's New Collection of Short Stories—A Social Progress Series.

THE welcome news of a new volume of William Wymark Jacobs's clever short stories comes from Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons. They will be published this Spring under the title "Short Cruises." Mr. Jacobs has kept to his familiar humorous themes. Despite the publishers' prejudice against books of short stories, Messrs. Scribners will issue another volume of them, this from the pen of Winfield Scott Moody. His stories will be of two enthusiastic collectors of antiques and their various experiences. The title of the volume will be "The Pickwick Ladie, and Other Collectors' Stories."

Palmer Cox's famous "Brownies, Their Book," has been sent to press for the twenty-first time. This book appeared in 1887 and has continued in steady demand ever since.

The Macmillan Company is about to begin the publication of a series of books devoted to various phases of present-day social progress, under the title "The American Social Progress Series." The general editor is Samuel McCune Lindsay, Professor of Sociology at the University of Pennsylvania and Professor-elect of Social Science at Columbia University. The first book in the series, to be published in a few weeks, is "The New Basis of Civilization," by Prof. Simon N. Patten of the University of Pennsylvania. This will be followed shortly by "Standards of Public Morality," by President Arthur T. Hadley of Yale, and "Legislation and Administration for Social Welfare," by Prof. Jeremiah W. Jenks of Cornell.

Two new medical books are published by Messrs. Macmillan—Dr. Charles A. Ballance's "Some Points in the Surgery of the Brain and Its Membranes," Dr. William Aldren Turner's "Epilepsy"; also, a new edition of "Anaesthetics and Their Administration," by Dr. Frederic W. Hewitt, who has condensed many chapters and added new ones. The same firm announces a book entitled "Individual Training in Our Colleges," by Clarence F. Birdseye.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. publish "A Hunting Catechism," by Col. R. F. Meysey-Thompson. The subject is fox hunting.

"Papers of a Pariah," by Father Robert Hugh Benson, the clerical member of the three literary Benson brothers, is issued to-day by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. The volume is a gentle treatment of religious and homely thoughts, written in the first person, that person being a supposed chance acquaintance.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. will publish this month a book by Lady Bell, entitled "At the Works," a study of a manufacturing town. The same house is ordering a new printing of the first volume of Sir Ian Hamilton's "A Staff Officer's Scrapbook," with some revisions. There has been a big demand for this work.

The Macmillan Company will publish next week "Vancouver's Discovery of Puget Sound," by Prof. Edmond S. Meany of Washington University, consisting largely of Vancouver's journal and other contemporary documents, and Prof. Walter S. Rauschenbusch's "Christianity and the Social Crisis."

While the American edition of George Moore's "Memoirs from My Dead Life" is having a moderate sale, large orders are received here for the English edition, which is unexpurgated.

Messrs. Baker & Taylor Company publish to-day "German Cookery for the American Home," by Ella Oswald, and a noteworthy book on the Irish patriot, "Daniel O'Connell, His Early Life and Journal, 1795 to 1802," by Arthur Houston, an 8vo, at $3.25.

Dion Clayton Calthorp's illustrated history of "English Costume," which has been appearing in parts, is being published in a single large volume by the Macmillan Company.

Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons published this week "The Friends of Voltaire," by S. G. Tallentyre, and Sir Leslie Stephen's "Studies of a Biographer," in four octavo volumes, and "English Literature in the Eighteenth Century," in one volume. The latter books complete the set of Leslie Stephen's essays. As Messrs. Putnam first have had the enterprise to publish these different works uniformly, they have had a steady demand for the volumes even from England.

Messrs. E. P. Dutton will publish next week "George Crabbe and His Times; a Critical and Biographical Study," by Rène Huchon, translated by Frederick Clark. The work makes a fat 8vo.

Frank M. Chapman, Associate Curator of the Ornithological Department of the American Museum of Natural History, and author of "The Warblers," who this week by Messrs. Appleton, and several standard books on birds, has been pursuing his natural researches in Florida, and has now gone to Bermuda for the same purpose.

Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. issue to-day Harold Begbie's "The Penalty," and Albert Kinross's "Davenant."

A new serial by Eden Phillpotts, entitled "Mother," will run in The Bookman, commencing in the May number. The universal and uncopyrightable attributes of the word of his title, lately and familiarly employed by Maxim Gorky, may relieve the author from the charge of plagiarism.

The advance orders from Canada for Robert W. Chambers's "The Younger Set," exceed even the record advance sale of this book in Australia.

A volume of poems by George Sylvester Viereck will be published this month by Messrs. Moffat, Yard & Co. Somewhat over a year ago a collection of Viereck's verse was issued in Germany. The poet writes in English as well as German.

The Macmillan Company announces cheap editions of two color books, "Paris," by Dorothy Menpes, with pictures by Mortimer Menpes, and "Ireland," by Frank Mathews, with pictures by Francis S. Walker, and a re-issue of Lord Avebury's "Municipal and National Trading."

The J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, will publish during May a new Italian romance by Antonio Fogazzaro, who is recognized as the greatest living writer of his country. He is the author of "The Saint," "The Sinner," and "The Patriot," all of which have met with great success throughout Europe and the United States.

From the Century Company comes the announcement for this month of a new story by Jean Webster, author of "When Patty Went to College."

Messrs. Harper issued this week Katherine Cecil Thurston's new novel "The Mystics," and a popular treatment of astronomy by Martha Evans Martin called "The Friendly Stars." The same house has issued another large edition of Mark Twain's recently published book on Christian Science.

Thomas Whittaker has issued an American edition of the Rev. W. J. Sparrow-Simpson's lectures under the title of "The Christian Doctrine of God."

The Funk & Wagnalls Company is arranging to bring out at an early date a translation of J. Grasset's "Demifous et Demiresponsables," which, in the French edition, has already attracted attention in this country.

The publication from Messrs. Revells this week has been Franklin Welles Calkins's "The Wooing of Tokala," a story of Indian life as it is to-day.

A STORY OF CRIME.

THE BRASS BOWL. By Louis Joseph Vance. Illustrated. Pp. 380. 12mo. Cloth. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company. $1.50.

BURGLARIES, assaults with intent to kill, breakneck rides in cabs and automobiles, and other matters of the same kind suffice to keep attention upon the alert in this decidedly melodramatic story. It is unusual in the very few characters employed, and in the fact that the time consumed from start to finish is only about thirty-six hours. To reveal a plot is a questionable proceeding upon a reviewer's part, and we have not the least intention of committing that indiscretion. The scene is in New York and in a country place somewhere upon Long Island, and the larger part of the action occurs by night. The unwary reader who permits himself to become entangled in the intricacies of this plot will not be satisfied until he has straightened them out. Such a reader may protest, be may resent the undue strain upon his sense of probability, but he will be tolerably sure to follow the story to its end. As in most tales of crime there is a detective, who, in this case is no Sherlock Holmes, but a particularly slow-witted fellow, who serves as a foil to the cleverness of the men with whom he is associated. The sketchy descriptions of the city by night are vigorous and effective.

PROF. GOEBEL'S FAUST

HENRY HOLT & CO. will shortly publish a new edition of Goethe's "Faust," edited with introduction and commentary by Prof. Julius Goebel of Harvard University. The edition, which will embody the results of many years of study and labor on the part of the editor, aims to be a contribution of American scholarship to the commemoration of the coming centenary of the first publication of the great world-poem. Prof. Goebel has made a number of most important discoveries concerning the origin of the Faust story, Goethe's literary sources, &c., and it is expected that his edition will throw new light on many questions, the treatment of which have hitherto [illegible]

BARRY AND WASHBURN.

MESSRS. Moffat, Yard & Co. announce "The Events Man," by Richard Barry. This is a book of odd conception, being the story of one war correspondent written by another. Stanley Washburn was correspondent for a daily newspaper in Manchuria while Mr Barry represented Collier's Weekly. The two were trench companions, so to speak, during many days of waiting for active hostilities, and Mr. Washburn delighted Mr. Barry with tales of his many dangerous experiences as correspondent. The adventures not only had narrative interest, but it seemed to Mr. Barry that his companion's accomplishments typified the enterprise of American journalism. He therefore obtained the permission of Mr. Washburn to retell the stories, and this he has done, writing in the first person in the new book.

COLORS OF EMOTIONS.

JOHN LANE COMPANY announces the publication of "Man Visible and Invisible," with a new series of color plates from the London Theosophical Society. This is a book on a phase of Theosophical investigation that has not been generally recorded. The author's thesis is that the properly sensitive, appreciative qualities of character, moods, and emotions in any given individual and at any given moment produce a stimulus to the color sense. The trained observer, accordingly, is conscious of a penumbra of colors surrounding the person of the individual under observation, the colors varying in extent and brilliancy, and the scheme of color being dependent upon the emotional state of the individual at the moment. This psychic phenomenon was given popular currency by Kipling in his remarkable story entitled "They," in which he refers to it under the name "The Egg."

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must be prepared to await their turn.

E. JULIAN.—Can you tell me who is the author of the following book, "Pen and Ink Sketches." By a Cosmopolitan. To which is added, "Chatterton: A Romance of Literary Life." Boston, 1845. In an introduction to this book the author says there is a second series to appear shortly. Was this published? Do you know of any other books by the same author?

John Dix, alias John Ross, wrote both of these works. He was a native of Bristol, England, and a surgeon. His "Life of Chatterton," published in 1837, was the subject of severe criticism. He came to America about 1845. He wrote, under the initials "J. D." and "J. D. R."; also under the pseudonyms of "A Cosmopolitan," "A Looker-On," and "A Middle-Aged Man." He wrote, among other works, "Lays of Home," "Local Legends of Boston," and "Pen Pictures of Distinguished American Divines," Boston, 1854, which possibly is the second series in question. Some critics treated him as a literary forger.

F. DARR—I want a copy of Chambers's "Mad World and Its Inhabitants." Where can I get it?

The book was published by D. Appleton & Co., 438 Fifth Avenue, New York. You can obtain a copy at that address.

W. H. JOHNSON—Can some of your readers locate for me a poem on the island of Capri, "Isola Bella," published a few years ago in one of the magazines, if I remember rightly?

Two poems were published in The New England Magazine for April, 1903, entitled "Capri at Dawn" and "Capri at Sunset," either of which may be the one you seek.

ELIAS MAJADALANIS—About a year ago I received a circular of a book to be published—I think it is called "Be Your Own Lawyer"—giving general points on law and business. Please let me know where I could get such a book.

"Everybody's Law Book; or, Every Man His Own Lawyer," is published by the Hitchcock Publishing Company at 49 Eighth Avenue, New York. Price, $2.50.

S. D. R.—I am told that copies of "The New England Primer" are rare, and that they have a money value. Can you tell me if this is true?

It is true. There are some forty editions of this book, and the rare ones command high prices.

C. HARRIS SCOFIELD—Will you kindly advise me through your Saturday book supplement where I can obtain a copy of "My Lady Nicotine," by J. M. Barrie?

This book is on the list of a number of publishers, and can be obtained from Page & Co., Boston; T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York; Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago, or H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia, and at any good book store.

C. C.—Will you give me what information you can on the following matter: My grandfather was with Napoleon in his Egyptian campaign, fought under him from that time on, and when Napoleon was exiled to St Helena was chosen one of the twelve who constituted his bodyguard. After Napoleon's death, he (my grandfather,) was decorated with the Medal of St. Helena. The papers which accompany this medal simply state the fact that it is authentic, but do not tell why it was conferred.

Napoleon died at Longwood, St. Helena, May 5, 1821. By a decree of 1833 the French Government, desirous of honoring by special distinction the soldiers who fought under the banners of France in the great wars between 1792 and 1815, granted a commemorative medal to all the survivors. The medal is of bronze. On one side it bears the image of Napoleon, and on the other side this inscription: "Campaigns of 1792 to 1815. To his companions in glory, his last thought. May 5, 1821." The medal is worn as a boutonnière, suspended by a very narrow green and red ribbon.

J. N. W.—I have bound in one volume "Handy Andy," written and illustrated by Lover, twenty-four illustrations on steel, published by Frederick Lover, Aldine Chambers, Paternoster Row, and Richard Groombridge, London, 1842, and "Jack Tench; or, Midshipman Turned Idler," by "Blowhard," published by W. Brittain, Paternoster Row, London, 1841. Are these of any value? Are they first editions? Who was "Blowhard"?

Each of these is a first edition. The Augustin Daly copy of "Handy Andy" sold at public auction for $40. The Lighthipe copy sold in 1906 for $18. "Jack Tench; or, The Midshipman Turned Idler," by "Blowhard," 8vo, London, 1841, sold for $3.25 at auction in Philadelphia in 1906. Another copy sold for £1 11s. in London in 1896. The identity of "Blowhard" does not seem to have been discovered yet by book cataloguers.

LIBRARIAN.—Can you inform me in regard to the following question: What is "The Middle English Bestiary," and who was the author of that book?

"Bestiary" is the name given to written books of the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries describing the animal world, particularly wild animals, with drawings, symbolical explanations, and mythical legends, both in prose and verse. They were written in many languages besides English, French, and Latin, and reprints of the originals are not at all rare, and may be found in the public libraries. The "Middle English" thirteenth century Bestiary will be found, along with the Latin text of Bishop Theobald in Morris's "An Old English Miscellany," published by the Early English Text Society in 1872. "Le Bestiaire Divin de Guillaume, Clerc de Normandie," has been translated from the original French into English and has also been reprinted in the Altfranzösisches Bibliothek, Vol. XIV. Information in relation to bestiaries may be found in the encyclopedias under articls "Physiologues."

Answers from Readers.

WILLIAM RAMSAY.—The lines quoted by Miss Mary Allen are from "The Lover's Address to His Coy Mistress," by Andrew Marvell, 1620-78. Marvell's poems and satires were republished in two volumes by Lawrence & Bullen about ten years ago.

A. J. BROWN, Somers, N. Y.—On Dec. 8 S. C. Talbot asked for poem "When Shall We Three Meet Again?" I find it in a scrapbook made many years ago cut from The Tribune and prefaced by a note to the editor asking its author. The elm referred to is in Dartmouth College grounds. In "The Chime," a church notebook of 1858, by V. C. Taylor, the music is given to the hymn (?) "When Shall We Meet Again, Meet Ne'er to Sever?" I shall be glad to send copies on receipt of address.

G. A. F.—If the inquirer using the initials G. A. F. will send her address to the editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS copies of the Jacobite verses she sought will be mailed her.

RICHARD THOMPSON—"When this old flag was new" may be found in R. H. Stoddard's poems, or bound volume No. 43 of Harper's Magazine. It can also be found in "Sheldon's Fifth Reader," by E. A. Sheldon, published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

ANON.—The verses asked for by M. K. H. recently are known as "Bachelor's Fare." The song had much vogue in the London music halls many years ago, and was brought over and sung by Tony Pastor perhaps forty years ago.

A copy of the verses asked for has been sent to this office and will be mailed to M. K. H. on receiving her address.

T. G. T.—To enlighten H. F. D., would say that William Maziere Brady, born in Dublin, 1823, wrote: "The Episcopal Succession in England, Ireland and Scotland," 1868; "Annals of the Catholic Hierarchy in England and Scotland, 1400-1875," 1883, and "Anglo-Roman Papers," 1890. There should be an extended notice of him in some of the early volumes of the forthcoming Catholic Encyclopedia. (Robert Appleton Company, New York.) there is a brief biography in the new International Encyclopedia. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

M. E. P.—L. A. W. will find the tale about Gradasso and Prince Perchee in a collection of old fairy tales, edited by Miss Mulock, and published in a cheap edition by Crowell & Son, New York. The story is on Page 135.

It can also be found in a child's book, "Cinderella and Other Fairy Tales," published by the De Wolfe & Fiske Company, 361 Washington Street, Boston, and in Lang's "Red Fairy Book." It is one of Mme. d'Aulnoy's stories.

VINCENT F. O'REILLY.—In answer to query of "J. L.," "The Exile's Return," or, as it is more popularly known, "Morning (or Dawn) on the Irish Coast," was written by John Locke, who under the nom de plume of "The Southern Gael" was a frequent contributor to Irish and Irish-American periodicals twenty or thirty years back. A sketch of his career, (the only one, I think, ever published,) interspersed with selections from his numerous poems, appeared in The Gael (N. Y.) some time in 1904. I have heard that a collection of his poems is soon to be published. This poem under the title "The Exile's Return" was recently set to music by Mrs. Adelaide Alicia Needham, the Irish composer.

R. L. C. WHITE.—The stanza quoted by E. F. ("Appeals to Readers," March 16) is the beginning of a poem entitled "The Song My Mother Sings," by Thomas O'Hagan, a Canadian poet, author of "A Gate of Flowers," &c. The poem is included in the collection called "A Treasury of Canadian Verse."

The authorship of the poem "Cherry Ripe," of which C. W. T. quotes the first two lines, is one of the "vexed questions" of literature. Of twelve anthologies in my library which include this poem seven ascribe it to Thomas Campion and five to Richard Allison, (or Alison.) Both were seventeenth century poets and contemporary. Prof. Bullen unhesitatingly assigns the authorship to Campion, and this should settle the question, for he is the ultimate authority on everything appertaining to the poetry of the Elizabethan age.

C. W. T. will find Conan Doyle's poem, "Cremona," in "Songs of Action," a volume of Doyle's verse issued in this country by the Doubleday & McClure Company.

H. L. Smith, who asks concerning the origin of the idea, "Where sun shines or water flows there is England's dead," must have in mind, I think, Mrs. Hemans's poem, "England's Dead." He will find it in any complete edition of her works.

S. B. H.—The poem asked for by "H. G." is not by Bunner, but by John Burroughs. It is called "Waiting." I don't know where it will be found, as a friend copied it for me about twenty-five years ago.

We are indebted to several of our readers for answers to the above query. This poem appears in a pamphlet called "The Secret of Opulence," published by Charles W. Close, Bangor, Me., price 10 cents, and the poems of Burroughs can be bought at any first-class book store. It can also be found on Page 451, Volume IX., of the Library of American Literature.

M. M.—The lines on "Cromwell," asked for by "J. C. Y.," are by James T. Fields. The volume of his poems in which they appeared was published thirty or more years ago and may be out of print. The lines are as follows:

ON A PORTRAIT OF CROMWELL.

"Paint me as I am," said Cromwell.
"Rough with age and gashed with wars;
Show my visage as you find it.
Less than truth my soul abhors."

This was he whose mustering phalanx
Swept the foe at Marston Moor;
This was he whose arm uplifted
From the dust the fainting poor.

God had made his face uncomely,
"Paint me as I am," he said;
So he lives upon the canvas
Whom they chronicle as dead.

Simple justice he requested
At the artist's glowing hands.
"Simple Justice," from his ashes,
Cries a voice that still commands.

And behold! the page of history,
Centuries dark with Cromwell's name,
Shines to-day with thrilling lustre
From the light of Cromwell's fame.

Appeals to Readers.

DONALD MACINTOSH.—Can some of your readers with a better memory than mine aid me in finding some verses of a beautiful sentiment, of which I can recall but one verse, and also tell me in what book or magazine they appeared, with the name of the author? The verse I recall is:

It isn't the thinking of good to mankind
That comes as a cooling drink
To the famished ones
Of earth's daughters and sons.
It's telling the good that we think.

A. B.—Will you please inform me through your columns the author of the following lines:

A tear trembles on the eyelid of every lost, but
Ne'er a tear bedimmed an eye
That care and comfort cannot dry;
Ne'er a lip was curved with pain
That can't be kissed to smile again,
And ne'er a heart was wrung with grief
But sympathy would give relief.
So all the ills of life we bear
With fortitude, if love be there.

W. L.—I am anxious to find the whole of a quatrain of which I have lost the third line entirely and most of the fourth. I am sure it will be familiar to some of your readers:

How happy is Saturday night,
When I've tried all the week to be good.

Here my memory fails me, and I hope that some of your readers will gladden my Saturday nights by giving me the last two lines.

J. B. M.—Tell me, please, who wrote these lines and where can they be found?

O Christ, that it were possible
For one short hour to see
The souls we loved,
That they might tell us
Where and what they be.

H. T.—Will you kindly tell me where I can get a copy of a little poem by Margaret Sangster that ends:

When we take the home-bound steamer
And we take the home-bound train,
There is nothing half so pleasant
As coming home again.

It does not seem to be in any volume of her poems.

Miss EUGENIA McGARRAH.—I wish some one would send me the words of the old school song, "For Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm." That is all I remember of it. I think these words are the last of the chorus. Or if some one would tell me in what book it is found. It was sung in the sixties, I think, or early.

ROCKLEDGE.—Will you please tell me the author of the following lines:

God of the granite and the rose,
Soul of the sparrow and the bee,
The mighty tide of being flows
Through countless channels, Lord, from Thee.
It leaps to life in grass and flowers
Through every form of being runs,
While from creation's radiant towers
Its glory flames from stars and suns.

S. B. M.—Will you kindly tell me where to find the poem called "The Little Quaker"? It tells how a little child walked out of meeting in response to calls from the birds and bees.

The Swastika
The Earliest Known Symbol and Its Migrations, with Observations on the Migrations of Certain Industries in Prehistoric Times.
By Thomas Wilson,
8vo, 285 pages, numerous plates and text illustrations, uncut. Washington, 1896. Net, delivered, $2.63.

Having just purchased from the author's estate the few remaining copies of this valuable and exhaustive treatise on this curious and interesting subject, we offer copies as above for a limited period.

The Swastika is found in our Western prehistoric ruins, in the temples of Central America and Mexico, in the burial ruins of the East, in Persian and in Navajo Indian rugs, and in the baskets of the Pima and Apache Indians of Arizona.

This work is a complete history of its significance and use throughout the world.

A LONG-NEGLECTED KENTUCKIAN

RICHARD HICKMAN MENEFEE. By John Wilson Townsend. Portrait. Pp. 220. 8vo. Cloth. New York: The Neale Publishing Co. $3.

IN common with many of our most distinguished men, Richard Hickman Menefee won his way to fame by his own exertions. It is surprising that a period of sixty-six years should have been allowed to pass before the appearance of an adequate biography of a man who occupied so conspicuous a position in our national history and who won such golden opinions from his contemporaries. Mr. Townsend is to be congratulated alike upon the subject and the manner of his biographical work. He has made a book which ought to find a place in every public library in this country.

Richard Hickman Menefee was born in 1809, a date worthy of remembrance, for in that year were born Tennyson, Poe, Holmes, Fitzgerald, Lord Houghton, Darwin, Hunter, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Lincoln, and Gladstone. In that same year the Mammoth Cave was discovered, and Irving's publication of "Knickerbocker's History of New York" marked the beginning of a national literature in America. In 1823, when he was 14 years old, the future statesman began to earn his living as a barkeeper in a Kentucky tavern. After about a year he became a teacher, and by dint of hard work he succeeded in entering the Transylvania University at Lexington in 1826. Ten years later, after some experience as a lawyer, he entered upon political life as a member of the Kentucky Legislature, and the next year, 1827, found him in the House of Representatives, when he was only 28 years old.

During his campaign Menefee was driving one day with a friend in a remote part of his district, and, proposing to stop at a farmhouse, he was warned by his companion that it was the home of a stanch Democrat named Davis, and that he and his five sons would never think of voting for a Whig. Menefee, however, insisted upon stopping, and Davis invited them to dinner, after which he asked him why the Whigs had not nominated a man and not a mere boy. Upon this Menefee proposed that they should wrestle together, and that if the farmer were thrown he should vote for his conqueror. The result was that he gained Davis's vote, and also those of his five sons, which were won upon the same terms. A large part of the volume is occupied by an account of Menefee's Congressional career and by selections from his speeches. In 1839 he returned to Kentucky and built up a lucrative practice. Failing health compelled his retirement to private life, and he died in 1841 at the early age of 32 years. The following extract from one of his speeches in 1838 gives a fair idea of the somewhat florid oratory of the period.

"If our 'internal policy is doomed to perpetual vacillation, amid the clouds of party and faction, I trust that at least the policy which governs our intercourse with foreign nations may, in the sight of all mankind, tower, like the mountain peak, above the region of change or cloud, reposing on its foundation, not of passion, of rash and headlong excitement, with their floods and sand, or short-sighted temporary expediency, but the everlasting rock of undeviating justice."

Secretary Root's Speech.

Messrs. Brentano announce for immediate publication the speech delivered by Secretary Elihu Root at the dinner of the Pennsylvania Society, New York, December last. It will be brought out in pamphelet form, at 15 cents, under the title "How to Preserve the Local Self-Government of the States."

"Cameos of Literature."

Before the end of the Spring Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co. will begin the publication of a series of illustrated "cameos of literature," with two volumes on Richard Wagner as a poet, and Maxim Gorky. The series is to be edited by George Brandes.

LOUIS TRACY'S

BIG

ROMANCE

The Captain of the Kansas

A sailor—a man's man. A girl—a girlish girl. A ship and the sea—the lure of romance—are drawn by Tracy into a masterpiece of story telling; stirring in brave deeds, enticing in tender romance, graphic in the sea's vagaries and its constancy, delightful in its lighter shades of humor.

It is Tracy's best story the critics declare, and the public approves the opinion.

THREE MEN AND A MAID

A STORY for the SPRING TIME.

BY-ROBERT FRASER-

A story g'eeful in the joy of young love; stirring in the resolution of men; baffling in the mystery unwound by a character who is a creation, whose work is to him a source of humorous delight and to the reader a joy.

A rare and delightful love story, set in the bracing atmosphere of English countryside. Ready April 10th.

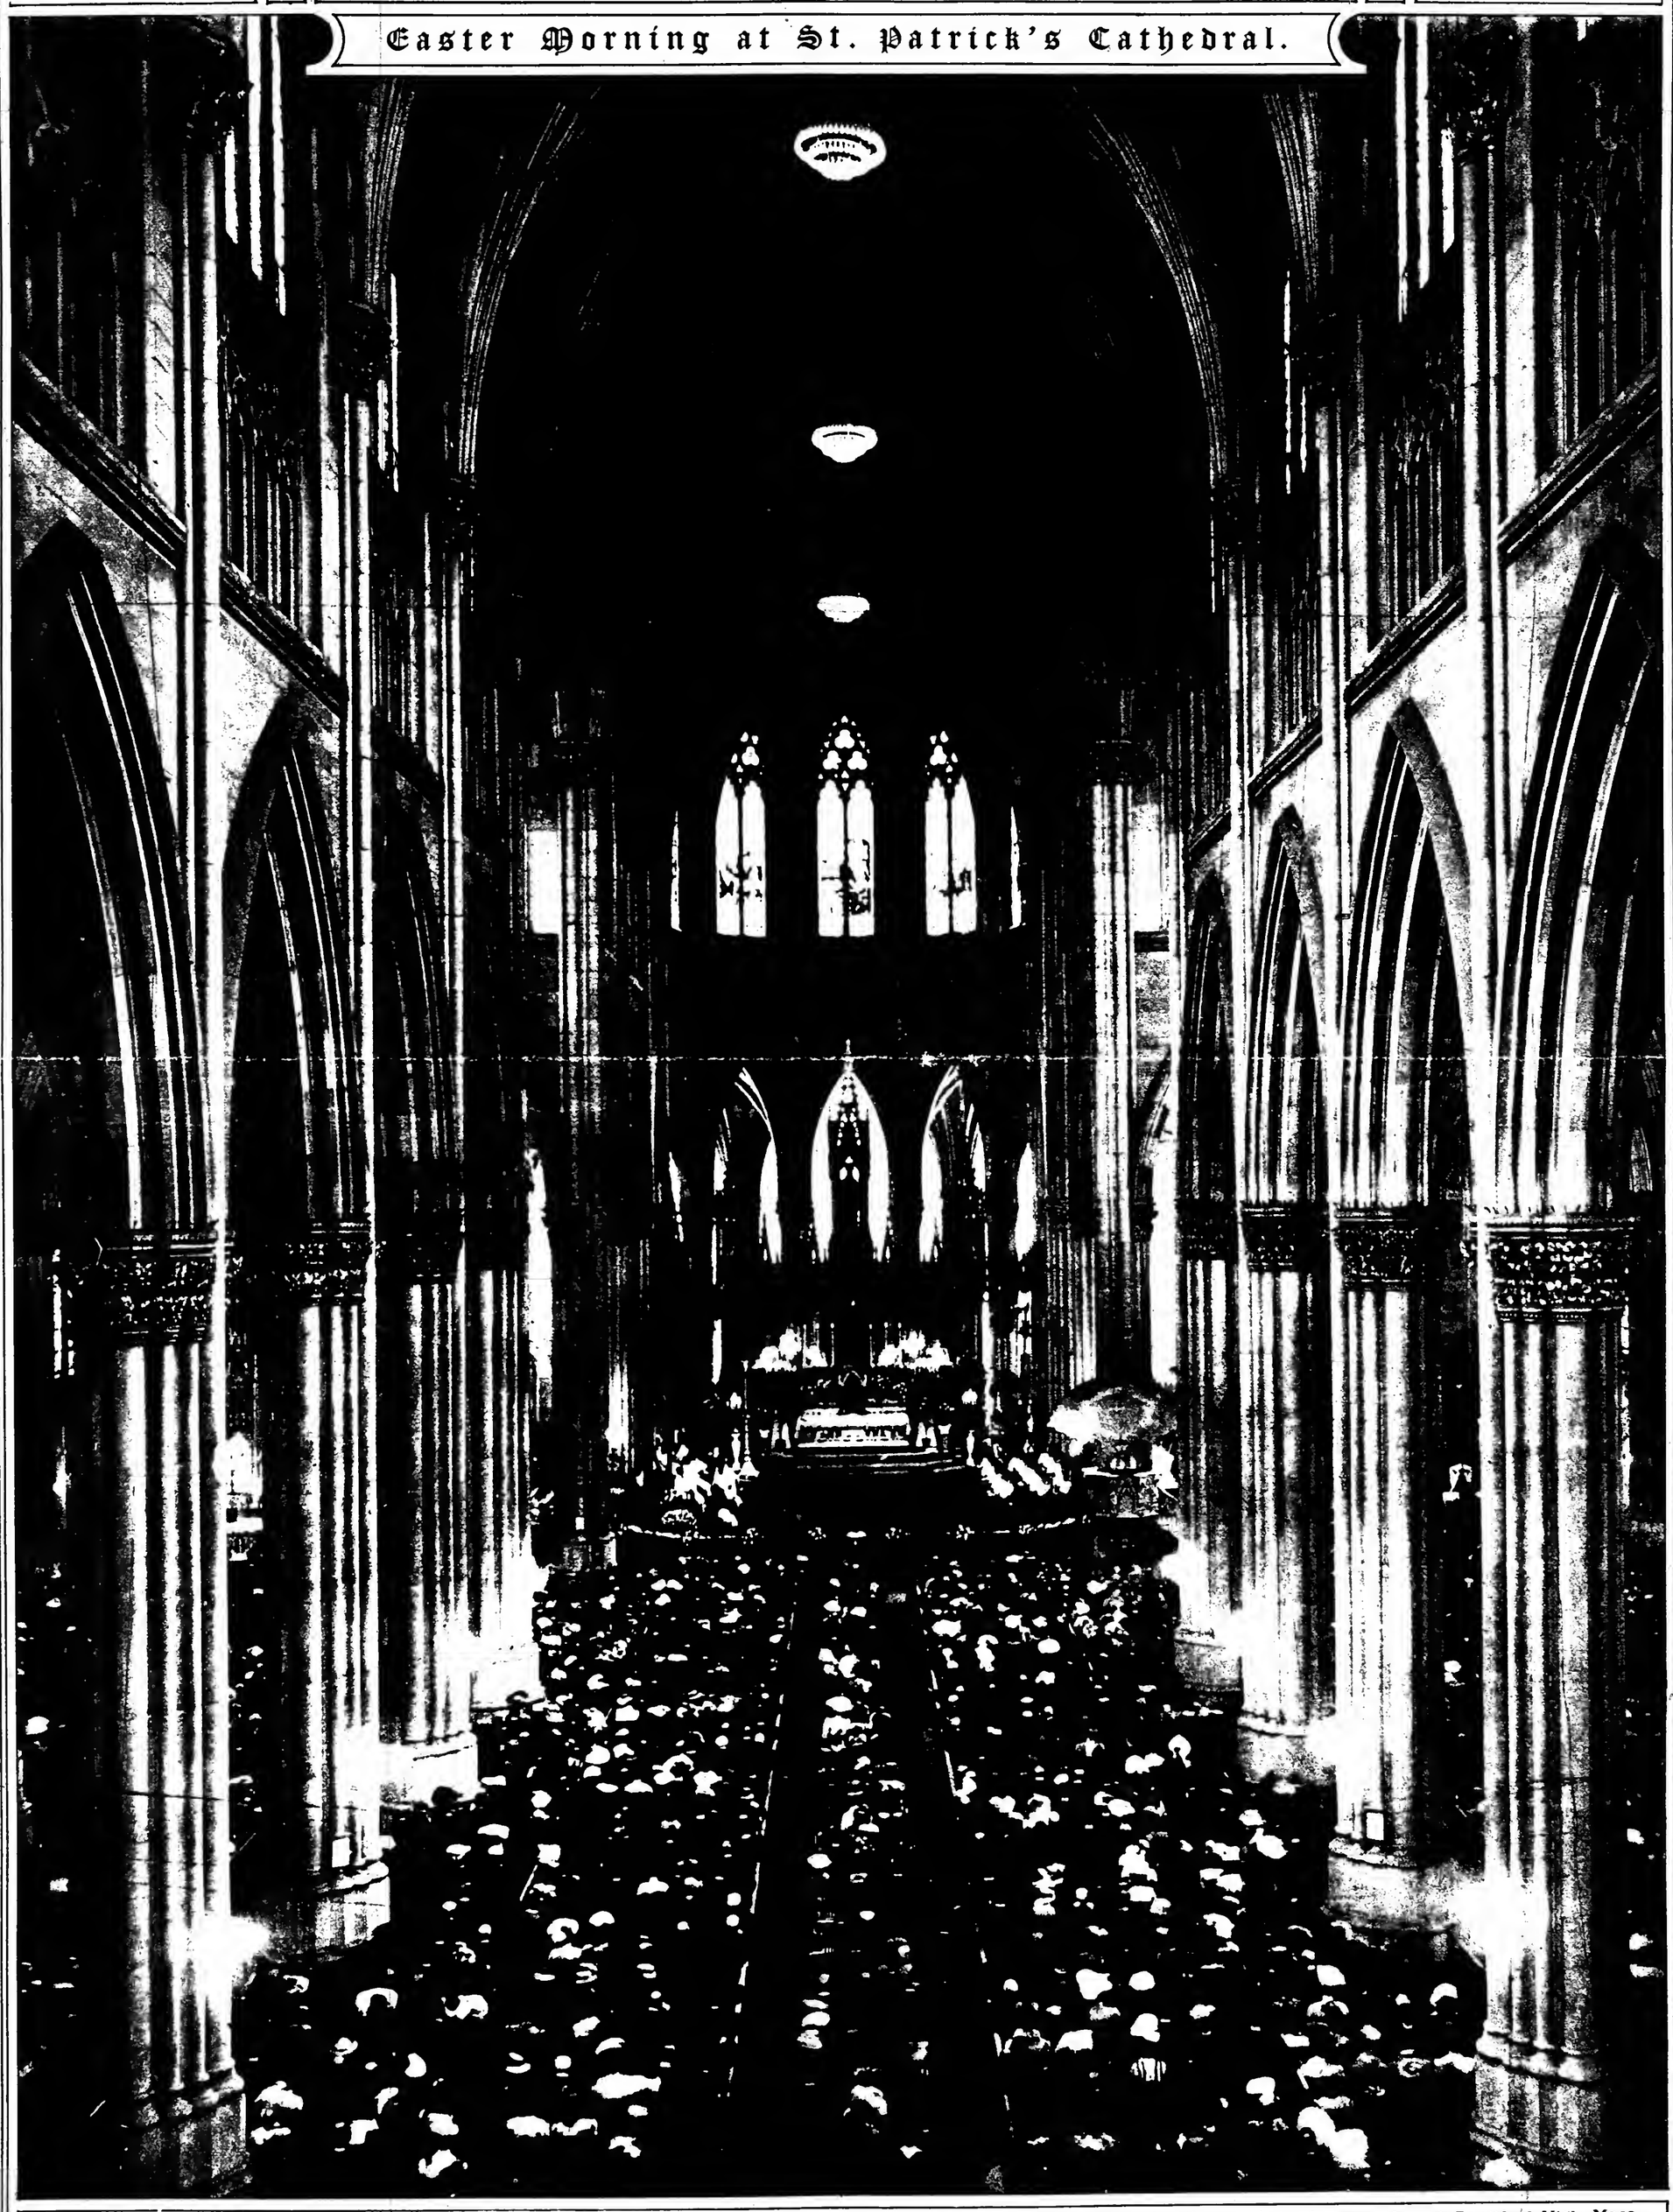
Easter Morning at St. Patrick's Cathedral.



This impressive scene, photographed expressly for The New York Times, shows a few of the thousands of worshippers who thronged the huge edifice at Pontifical High Mass at which Archbishop Farley was the celebrant on Easter morning. The rector of the Cathedral, Monsignor Lavelle, can be seen in the pulpit, at the right of the chancel.

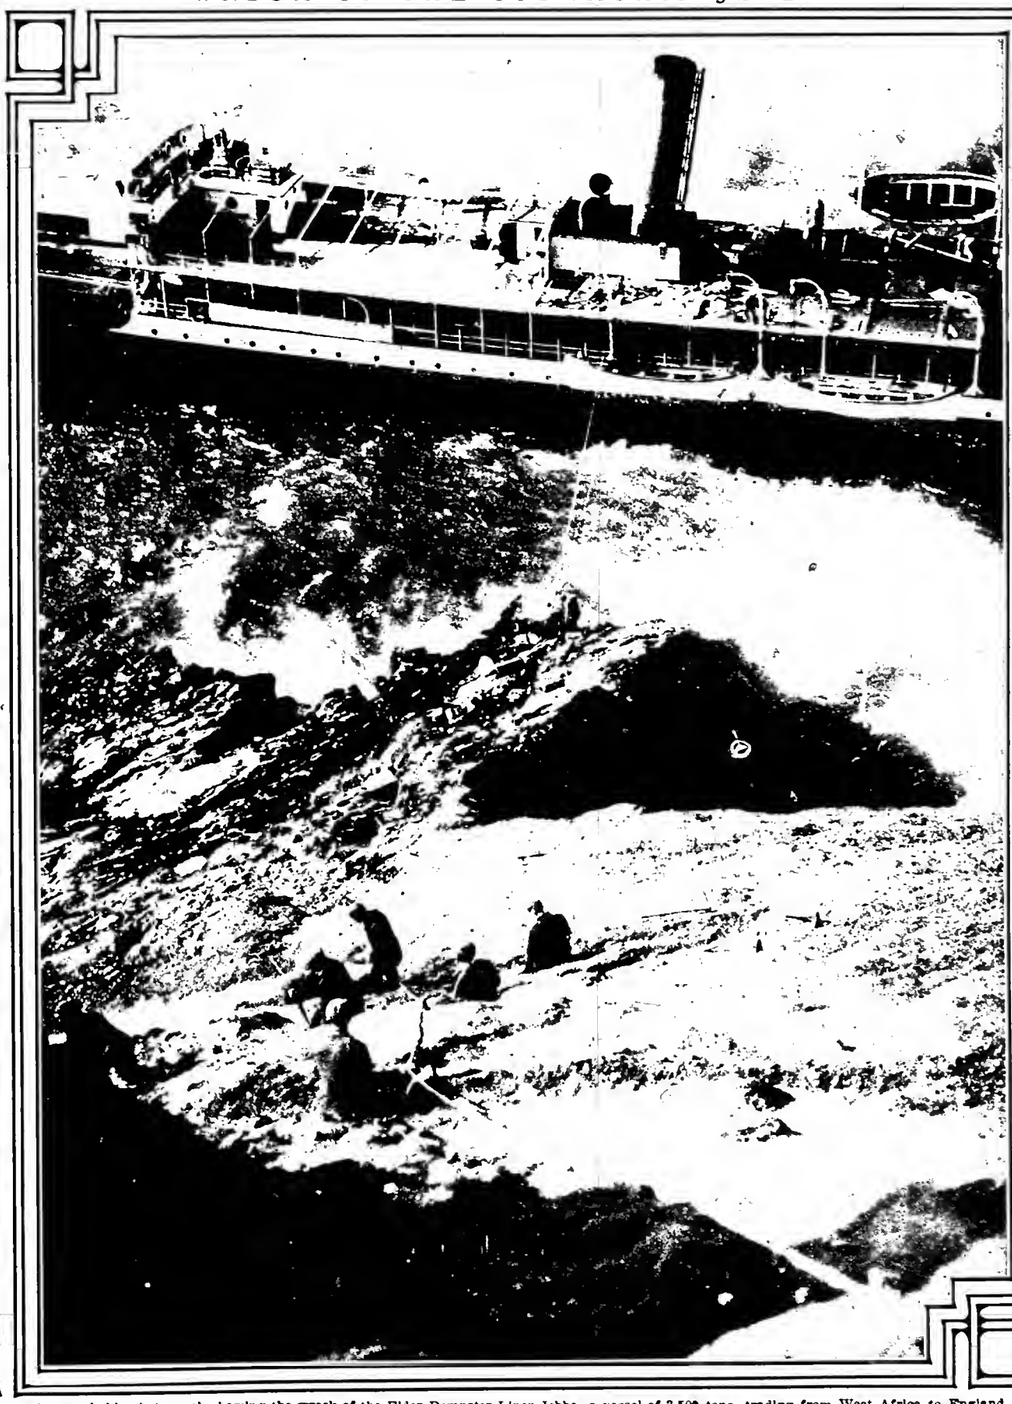
WRECK OF THE STEAMSHIP JEBBA.



A remarkable photograph showing the wreck of the Elder Dempster Liner Jebba, a vessel of 3,500 tons, trading from West Africa to England. She ran ashore in a fog at Bolt Tail on the south coast of Devonshire. One hundred and ninety passengers and crew were rescued by means of of the rocket apparatus in six hours, constituting a record of a big nature. In ths photograph ths ship is being salvaged by means of ths two ropes originally thrown across her by the rocket apparatus. Luggage and cargo of all kinds were brought ashore. She is firmly wedged on ths rocks at this point and is expected to become a total wreck. No lives were lost, even the ship's cat and two monkeys being brought ashore in safety.

A Club-Cocktail
IS A BOTTLED DELIGHT

THOUSANDS have discarded the idea of making their own cocktails,—all will after giving the CLUB COCKTAILS a fair trial. Scientifically blended from the choicest old liquors and mellowed with age make them the perfect cocktails that they are. Seven kinds, most popular of which are Martini (Gin base), Manhattan (Whiskey base).

THE SILENT SIX-CYLINDER ROLLS-ROYCE Has Reached the Goal Toward Which Every Automobile Maker Has Striven

30-40 H. P.
Silent Six Touring Car
$8,000 Complete.

Send for new booklet entitled "The Rise of the Rolls-Royce" Mailed free.

Its makers have achieved a car that is silent. Not practically, but absolutely. A motor that is without vibration. Not comparatively, but entirely; and a chassis that weighs 15% to 25 % less than any other car of equal power and wheel base.

The Silent Six-Cylinder Rolls-Royce offers more value at its price than any other car in the world.

Its light weight will save you hundreds of dollars yearly in tire costs, and the absence of vibration prevents devitalization of the steel, making it a long-lived car.

You will want to see this marvel amongst Motor Cars.

Demonstrations may be arranged for by phone or letter.

MATHESON

BEATING all records made this winter between New York and Boston is something to be proud of. We are prouder of the fact that the 1906 Matheson car which performed this feat arrived in perfect running order, without need of repairs or adjustments; no trouble of any kind—not even tire trouble. This, too, in spite of the fact that the roads were worse than at any other time this year.

We are proud, too, that this wonderful run was made by an amateur, a private owner of a Matheson, R. G. Kelsey, out of sheer pride in his car and belief in its supremacy. This is typical of the way Matheson owners feel about their cars. They believe them to be the best cars in the world for American roads. They are our salesmen and they give demonstrations for us. They have caused the demand which has nearly exhausted the Matheson ouput for 1907.

YOU WANT A MORA CAR WHEN YOU WANT A MOTOR CAR

RACYTYPE $2,300 With Double Ignition System

THE smart, snappy lines of the Mora Cars give an impression of speed and power, which their performance more than makes good. With a motor delivering 24 H.P. at the rear axle, any speed from 4 to 50 miles is possible.

Because of their perfect mechanical construction there is absolutely no loss of power. The motor and transmission are carried to a Pan Support, which is bolted to the frame as a single unit. Where the motor and transmission are installed as a single unit, a feature of the Mora construction, every working part must be in perfect alignment. Perfect alignment insures less wear and tear on the gears, less noise, less vibration, and the delivery of all the power to the rear axle.

This is the secret of the Mora's exceptional durability and speed.

The Mora Cars are perfectly balanced, with just enough weight to make high speed safe and comfortable, yet without one unnecessary pound to add to the strain on the tires, frame and gears.

The Mora Cars will meet your requirements at a price lower than you ever thought would pay for a high class car.

It is well worth your time to see the Mora Cars and take a demonstration.

WE want you to know by actual personal experience how much the Cleveland surpasses many foreign cars in speed, in power, in ease of control, in flexibility, in comfort, elegance and all round usefulness. If you have time for a longer trip we will SHOW you just WHY the Cleveland is selected for its durability, its reliability, its goability all the time under any and every road condition.

DO you know that many of our Men of Affairs who have never before owned any but foreign cars are this year purchasing Clevelands? It is because they have at last FOUND OUT that on American roads the Cleveland gives them better service, more CONSTANT service, than some foreign makes which cost twice as much. They select the Cleveland as the highest grade American car and as a distinct superior to the foreign cars they have owned.

STUCK

This happens with a 4-cycle engine, but NOT with the 2-cycle ELMORE.

The Elmore entirely eliminates 170 of those little wear-out-quick parts which are always breaking down on the road and causing no end of trouble and delay.

The Elmore is about the only American car to have a two cycle engine. The others have four cycle engines, and these engines have 170 parts, which the Elmore engine does not have—does not NEED—does not WANT—for they are nothing but trouble makers—one hundred and seventy kinds of assorted trouble. These parts cost on an average $3.00, over $500 in one item; they cost something to put on, and oh! what a lot they cost to KEEP on. They are constantly wearing out, breaking down, getting out of order, needing adjustment, giving all sorts of road troubles. It is hard to find a minute of traveling time when one of these parts is not BREAKING DOWN or GETTING READY to break down. A four cycle engine is worth its weight in trouble.

Another point of expense on the $4,000 cars is this. They have not ELMORE POWER, TWO CYCLE power, but only FOUR CYCLE POWER. A two cycle engine gives a forward impulse with EVERY stroke of the piston. A four cycle engine gives a forward impulse only with EVERY OTHER stroke of the piston. Therefore to get as much POWER out of their EVERY OTHER stroke in the same TIME as the Elmore, the four cycle engine must be of greater horse power, LARGER, must be HEAVIER, and SIZE and WEIGHT mean COST. Add another $700 for the size and weight of the clumsy trouble-making four cycle engine.

A large, heavy engine that KICKS hard enough to send a car ahead with only every OTHER piston stroke must have a heavier chassis, or the car will be RACKED to PIECES in NO time. Slap on a heavier chassis and $200 more in cost, (the public can stand it,) and then the car will not be racked to pieces at once; only after a while. The Elmore is light because its simplicity of construction MAKES it light. It is less expensive (by $1,000 or $2,000) because its simplicity of construction MAKES it less expensive.

35 H. P. 4 cylinder Elmore, $2,500.

Still every dollar needed to make the Elmore what it is, the BEST car built in America to-day, is spent in its construction. The only way we could bring the Elmore up to a price of $4,000 is by arbitrarily adding on $1,500 to our profit. This we will not do because we do not want to fool ANY of the people ANY of the time.

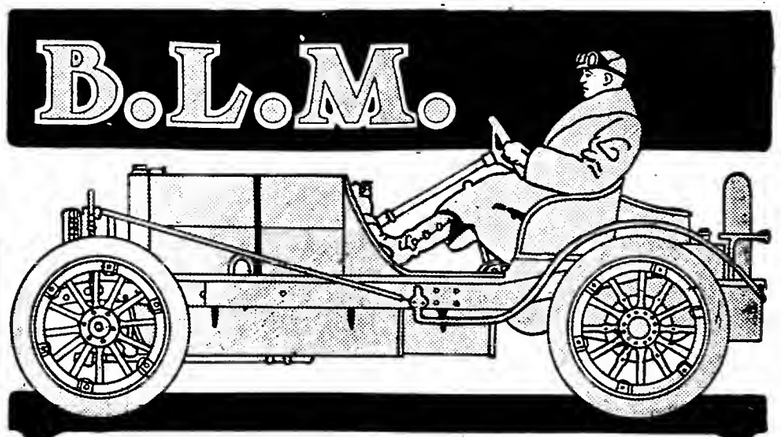
B.L.M.



THE B. L. M. is a 24 H. P. racer. By this we mean not only that its lines and its speed are those of a small racing car, but that all the principles of construction, all the perfection of detail in the finish of its parts are those which are embodied in those great racing machines on which manufacturers stake their reputations. This speed, this ability to withstand a terrific strain, this combination of strength with lightness makes for so great a cost that the manufacturer cannot possibly afford to put out a touring car or a runabout to compare with the speed marvel which represents him in events such as the Vanderbilt Cup Race. You do find these qualities in the B. L. M. at $3,500.

THE average runabout is only a chassis of the standard touring car with a runabout body slapped on. Its owner has the same cost of upkeep as a man owning a touring car. While weight has been reduced only 150 to 200 pounds, carry capacity has been reduced 40 to 50 per cent., and speed and power as compared to weight increased only 5 per cent. The B. L. M. is much lighter than any runabout in the country and still it is built as substantially as any racing car.

THE B. L. M. is designed and constructed for one purpose only: to give you all the endurance, lasting value, perfection of construction and perfect efficiency at all times of a racing car, which it resembles in every way save in point of size. It has the added advantage of being practically unskiddable. One can fly around corners at a very great speed without danger of upsetting or skidding; its centre of gravity is such, its suspension so perfect, that it is the safest car you can use for any purpose.

THE B. L. M. has a perfection of detail entirely lacking in racing cars, which makes it the most complete and comfortable car in the world for a long, fast tour. Its tires are carried on imported Harburg detachable rims; a pair of spare tires, fully inflated on their rims, carried behind, enables one to defy punctures, or other tire troubles, as tires can be changed in a moment. Its light weight, only 1,400 lbs., enables many an owner to make thousands of miles over all sorts of roads on a single set of tires. Equipment includes Rushmore lamps, a generator, a spare rim and all ordinary tools. Write for our catalog number six. It is a wealth of information on the points which make for greatness in a car.

MARTIN MALONEY'S DINNER

Prominent Cardinals Make Excuses for Not Attending Entertainment in Mrs. Robinson's Honor.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, April 6.—A deliberate effort has been made to take advantage of the visit to Italy of Mrs. Douglas Robinson, sister of President Roosevelt, in order to advertise the interesta of an American candidate for a Cardinal's hat. So bold was the attempt that Mrs. Robinson, in the presence of the Pope himself, was forced to enter a protest.

Ambassador White, before his departure from Rome for Paris, had been informed of Mrs. Robinson's coming and her desire to be received by the Pope. As Mgr. Kennedy, Rector of the American College, had already left here for Philadelphia for the golden wedding of his parents, Mgr. Farrelly, Spiritual Director of the college, undertook the arrangements, which were continued at the request of the present Ambassador, Mr. Griscom. But in the meanwhile Mgr. O'Gorman, Bishop of Sioux Falls, having arrived, he took charge of the whole affair, and the impreasion created waa that he wished to monopolize it in favor of Archbishop Ireland's candidature for the red hat, which he is supposed to have come here to advance.

This aroused much gossip, as the friction caused by the fact that a room in the American College was refused to Archbiahop Ireland ahortly after Archbishop Ryan stopped there was still fresh in people's minds.

The Robinson audience took place, and Bishop O'Gorman had an opportunity to emphasize once more to Pope Plus how grateful the American people would be to see Archbishop Ireland raised to the purple.

Mrs. Robinson, however, did not conceal her disapproval of this bringing in of the vexed question, saying in French, so that the Pope might understand it: "No politics, no politics."

Ambassador Griscom was going to give a grand dinner in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, to which the highest authorities in the State were to be invited. Bishop O'Gorman had also accepted an invitation, and his presence would certainly have caused comment in Vatican circles somewhat similar to that produced by the dinner given by Mr. White a year before, but the fire which unroofed the apartment of Mr. Griscom in the Palazzo del Drago of course made the suppression of the dinner unavoidable.

Marquis Maloney's Dinner.

Another dinner, however, was arranged, Bishop O'Gorman being the prime mover, with a view to introducing the President's sister to the Vatican world. It was given by Martin Maloney of Philadelphia, who was made a Marquis by the Pope, and is in Rome to serve his time at the Vatican as Papal Chamberlain. Nothing in Rome is supposed to be done without an ulterior motive, so although Mr. Maloney was originally a stanch supporter of Archbishop Ryan, the presence of the Bishop of Sioux Falls gave the occasion a pro-Ireland character which could not fail to have its effect. The Cardinals who accepted invitations were those who have especially distinguished themselves as warm supporters of Mgr. Ireland's elevation to the purple, and two of them, Cardinals Vincenzo Vannutelli and Satolli, were present at the famous dinner of Mr. White.

Cardinal Martinelli, who also was present on that occasion, refused to have anything to do with this dinner, saying that as long as he lived he waa not again to be caught in anything of the kind. Cardinal Merry del Val barred himself behind the unwritten law that the Papal Secretary of State only accepts invitations to official dinners. Mgr. Bisloti, the Papal Major Domo and Master of the Chamber, first accepted and then found that the Pope had need of him for an important meeting. Even more significant was the absence of Archbishop Quigley of Chicago, who, although asked, found that he was engaged elsewhere.

All the same, the dinner was perhaps the greatest social success of the season, and besides Cardinals, Archbishops, and Bishops, the presence of Count Camillo Pecci, nephew of Leo XIII., was most noticeable, it being known that if the predecessor of Pius X. had lived one year longer Archbishop Ireland would have entered the College of Cardinals.

The disposition of the guests at Mr. Maloney's dinner was somewhat strange in American eyes, as the host resigned his rightful place in favor of Cardinal Vannutelli, Cardinals ranking as Princes of the blood. Mrs. Robinson, as the guest of honor, sat at his right.

Struggle Over Cardinal Acute.

As this incident of Mrs. Robinson's visit shows, there has not, since the famous struggle between the Corrigan and Ireland influences in America began, been auch an acute period in the competition for an American Cardinal as at the present time.

The issue was recently put directly to Pope Plus X., who, in answering a distinguished prelate who represented to him the disappointment of American Catholics at not having a new Cardinal created in the Consistory to be held on April 15, said:

"Americans are very dear to my heart. I will satisfy them and give them another Cardinal."

But he added, with a twinkle in his eyes:

"Perhaps one whose elevation to such a position is not expected, and who will, I am sure, be received with general satisfaction."

As in the past, the question is practically a pro-Ireland and anti-Ireland one. When the Archbishop of St. Paul was in Rome last year some persons were sure that the Vatican was convinced of the advantagea to the Church in America of creating him a Cardinal, and others were equally sure that incidents which occurred in the course of his stay in Rome would bar him forever from entering the Sacred College. They referred principally to the dinner given in hia honor by Ambassador White, referred to in the foregoing. At this dinner four Cardinals were present, together with personages belonging to the Italian Court. This resulted in the famous circular note of Cardinal Oreglia di Santo Stefano, Doyen of the Sacred College, dated May 1, 1906, admonishing all Cardinals living in the Eternal City to conduct themselves in such a way as "not to offer cause for reproach."

Ireland's Overzealous Friends.

What has always been most injurious to Archbiahop Ireland's interests is the overzeal of friends. The case of Mrs. Bellamy Storer is only too well known in America, but it is not one by itself. Another typical instance is that of a well-known New Yorker, now a Consul General in Europe, who came several times to Rome, once saying to the Vatican officials that he would not leave the Apostolic Palace until he had received a red hat for his friend. Another openly asked Secretary of State Merry del Val how much it would cost to raise Mgr. Ireland to the Cardinalate, as he was ready to pay any sum.

The most frequent case, however, is that of prominent personages, even Bishops, coming to Rome, intrusted with what they call a "verbal message" from President Roosevelt. A distinguished American ecclesiastic who lives in Washington arrived in the Eternal City when Leo XIII. was at the point of death with a "verbal message" from the President, asking that Archbishop Ireland be made a Cardinal, but as in the meanwhile the Pope died, he was the first to deliver such a communication to the new Pontiff.

These tactics defeated their own ends, as similar "verbal messages" also came in favor of Archbishops Farley of New York, Ryan of Philadelphia, and even Chapelle of New Orleans; before his death. In smaller proportion to Archbishop Ireland, other prelates are afflicted by the excessive zeal of their friends; for instance, the Archbishop of New York is a victim of the activities of a Catholic lady of his archdiocese to whom a title was given by the Holy See, and who floods not only the Vatican, but the Cardinals with her petitions.

Suffers for Faith in Ireland.

A man who has auffered much for his gallant faith in the Archbishop of St. Paul is Mgr. Dennis O'Connell, Rector of the Catholic Univeraity at Washington, who first lost his position as Rector of the American College at Rome, was then kept here for ten years without a post, and was then sent to Washington, where he succeeded in rescuing the university from ruin, so that at the Congregation of Studies he la called its second founder. Notwithstanding pressure from Cardinal Gibbons in America and Cardinals Satolli and Vannutelli in Rome, he has not yet been rewarded by being elevated to the episcopate, although his supporters pointed out to the Vatican that when the See of Richmond became vacant by the transfer of Bishop Keane, Mgr. O'Connell, who could have been made Biahop of that diocese, willingly withdrew at the suggestion of Cardinal Simeoni. Now, however, it la considered aure that, like his two predecessors in the rectorship of the Catholic University, he will be invested with the episcopal office on the occasion of the meeting of the American Archbishops in Washington next week.

Another American who will soon be appointed to some vacant position in America is Mgr. John Farrelly, who haa been Spiritual Director of the American College for twenty-five years, and who is spoken of for some place in hia own State, Tennessee, or near by.

The Vatican is awaiting with the greatest interest the meeting of the American Archbishops, when it is expected that a decision will be taken to increase the Peter's pence, as the gravest consequence of the Franco-Vatican conflict is financial, and the Holy See is lacking several millions yearly.

In face of this situation the Pope approved the scheme of Mgr. Quigley, Archbishop of Chicago, to publish the names of contributors and the amount each gives, which has had the effect of quadrupling the Peter's pence in Chicago. If the same thing happens in other dioceses America will contribute $2,000,000 a year.

SAYS UNITED COPPER FAKED DIVIDENDS

Sensational Charges Before Commissioner in Hodgens Suit Against Heinze Concern.

WON'T SHOW THE BOOKS

F. A. Heinze Refuses to Produce Them —Drafts Drawn on Montana Ore, for Dividend Cash, Witness Says.

Preliminary testimony before a Commissioner here yesterday in the suit that Thomas M. Hodgens of Butte has brought against the United Copper Company in New Jersey seeking to gain access to its books, gave promise of sensational developments before the issues involved in the litigation are threshed out. The fundamental allegations of the Hodgens complaint are that the United Copper Company has been paying dividends vastly in excess of its income since the transfer of its principal producing properties to the Cole-Ryan interests. Yesterday's evidence will be incorporated in affidavits which will be submitted to the Supreme Court of New Jersey on April 15.

As has been indicated in the stories already published about the Hodgens-United Copper litigation, there lies behind the fight the bitterest of hostility between the complainant and the Heinzes, which is intensified by the fact that they were long associated in the control of the State Savings Bank of Butte, Montana. The bank in turn appears to have been intimately concerned in the financial affairs of United Copper and its constituent concerns. Hodgens was one of the bank's organizers in 1899 and the ruling spirit until the Heinzes bought out his interest in the Fall of 1905. A good deal of the evidence brought out yesterday had to do with the affairs of the bank while Hodgens and the Heinzes were still concerned in its managsment. It was doubly interesting because the bank under its present control is suing Hodgens, alleging that he misused his power there to advance his personal interests.

The principal witness of yesterday's session was Frank W. Holmes, who had been assistant cashier of the State Savings Bank of Butte for many years prior to April 1, 1906. He said the Heinze companies had been patrons of the institution from the time that the United Copper Company was organized in 1902, and that some of the companies going into United Copper had done business with the bank before the merger.

F. A. Heinze's Testimony.

But Arthur P. Heinze, brother of F. A. Heinze and a Vice President of the United Copper Company, contributed something to enliven the proceedings. He declared among other things that he did not know where the books of the United Copper Company were kept. Mr. Heinze remembered having seen the minutes of the Directors' meetings and a couple of books of account, possibly a ledger and a cashbook, but "not being an accountant" he was unable to be more specific aven as regards those volumes. His office adjoins that of Stanley Gifford, the Secretary and until recently the Treasurer of the United Copper Company, at 42 Broadway, and the cashier of United Copper named Eckstein, who officiates also as Mr. Heinze's secretary.

The evidence of Mr. Holmes was quite specific as to the relations of the State Savings Bank of Butte with the Heinze companies. He said that the Heinze companies were borrowers to the extent of $1,000,000 while he was connected with the bank, and that on April 1, 1906, when he left the service of the bank, the amount of their borrowings was somewhat larger than it had been previously. Then Mr. Holmes produced what purported to be a transcript of the accounts of several of the Heinze companies with the bank as of Sept. 15, 1905, which showed debit items as follows:

Montana Ore Purchasing Co. note	$300,000.00
Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. overdraft	22,776.34
Hypoca Mining Co. overdraft	143,819.40
Johnstown Mining Co. overdraft	127,834.41
Basin Reduction Co. note	145,000.00

"Did these diminish or increase from that time on?" asked Attorney Walsh for Mr. Hodgens.

"Some of them increased," replied the witness.

"Did the United Copper Company have money on deposit to meet dividends?"

"It generally had some," replied the witness, and then he added, "but not always enough."

"What steps were taken when there wasn't enough money," demanded Mr. Walsh.

"Drafts on the M. O. P. (Montana Ore Purchasing) were credited to the United's account about the time the dividends were due," was the reply.

"How?"

"Generally they were drawn on New York," said Mr. Holmes.

"They were drawn to be returned to us if they were not paid, and then we would make a loan to the M. O. P. Company that we would have to carry."

"When were these transactions?" asked Mr. Walsh.

"For a matter of two years before I left," said Mr. Holmes.

Mr. Holmes said that the State Savings Bank asked some of the constituent companies to discontinue their accounts in the year 1905 because of the increase of their obligations. Upon cross-examination Attorney Falk of Newark, who appeared with the firm of Cary & Robinson of this city for the United Copper Company, asked the witness what deposits some of the Heinze companies had with the bank. He brought out that on Sept. 15, 1905, the United Copper Company had a deposit of $90,890.09, and the Basin Reduction Company a deposit of $93,593. The obligations of the various companies, said Mr. Holmes, bore from 6 per cent. to 8 per cent. interest.

Kept a Transcript of Accounts.

Mr. Falk questioned Mr. Holmes closely as to how he came to have the memorandum giving the accounts of the Heinze Companies. The witness said that it was a transcript of one that he furnished to the companies themselves and that he had taken it with him when he left the bank.

"Why?" demanded Mr. Falk.

"For my own purposes," replied the witness.

"By why right?"

"I don't know that I had any right," said Mr. Holmes, who refused to answer further questions on this line.

William A. Lockwood, who is one of Mr. Hodgens's attorneys, testified he had been KILLED JUMPING FOR BALL.

Inspector Grant's Son Strikes an Auto and Breaks His Neck.

While playing ball in the middle of the street with some companions, Donald Grant, Jr., the eight-year-old son of Police Inspector Donald Grant of Brooklyn, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon at 144th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. Young Grant lived with his parents in the Majestic apartments, at 145th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. The lad, with other playmates of the neighborhood, was playing by batting the ball up in the air. A particularly high ball had been knocked, and young Grant started after it. He misjudged the height of the ball, and jumped up in the air and to one side in an effort to catch it.

At this instant an automobile, owned by Jonathan Bulkley, a paper manufacturer, who lives at 130 Hicks Street, Brooklyn, was coming slowly down the street, which at this point is at a slight down grade. In the car, besides the chauffeur, Grant Archer, were Mr. and Mrs. John W. Chapin of 81 Remsen Street, Brooklyn; Miss Esther Watterman of Southport, Conn., and Ray and Ogden Bulkley, young sons of the owner of the car. Owing to the car having just crossed 145th Street, where there is a crosstown car line, it was going very slowly, according to the chauffeur, and he is corroborated by witnesses. He had turned out sharply twice before on the same block to avoid some of the boys, and had brought his machine almost to a stop when young Grant jumped for the ball. The boy struck the mudguard on one of the front wheels, and, without uttering a cry, sank to the ground. The car did not pass over him.

WRECKERS DERAIL TRAIN.

The Cleveland-Pittsburg Flier is Smashed—Passengers Escape.

PITTSBURG, April 6.—Train No. 322, east-bound, the fastest train on the Pennsylvania Railroad between Pittsburg and Cleveland, was wrecked at 8 o'clock tonight near Hudson, Ohio, 123 miles west of here. None of the passengers was injured, but the fireman, who jumped when the accident occurred, was seriously injured.

According to the railroad officials the train was purposely wrecked. An investigation disclosed that the means made use of by the wreckers was the same used several times in this vicinity recently.

The rewards for the capture of the wreckers are renewed to-night. A reward of $2,500 is offered to anybody giving information leading to the identity of the wreckers, and $5,000 if this information is furnished within 48 hours.

The train left Cleveland shortly after 6 o'clock to-night. When one and one-half miles west of Hudson, Ohio, the locomotive plunged with great force into the embankment. The hillside, however, probably saved the lives of many of the passengers, as the train, which was running at a high rate of speed, was brought to an abrupt stop. The Pullman and day coaches remained on the tracks, but the jar was so terrific that all of the passengers suffered from the shock.

Following the accident the passengers and crew of the train made a examination of the track and found that the bolts and fishplate had been removed. The track ends were bent almost half a foot. Fortunately the track was turned toward the hillside, or the wreck would have resulted in a frightful loss of life.

F. E. SOUTHARD A SUICIDE.

Lumber Man Shoots Himself While Wife Waits for Him at a Matinee.

When she returned from a matinée at Daly's Theatre yesterday afternoon, at which she had expected to meet her husband, Mrs. Frances E. Southard and her daughter, Beatrice, found the body of Mr. Southard lying on the floor of the bathroom of their home, on the fourth floor of the Rhinelander apartment house, at 12 Fifth Avenue. By his side was a 32-calibre revolver, from which he evidently had sent a bullet through his mouth into his brain.

Mr. Southard, who was the head of Southard & Co. of 11 Broadway, one of the largest dealers in hardwoods in the city, had been in ill-health for some time. He had had two slight strokes of apoplexy and was suffering from a hardening of the blood vessels. In addition to this, he had been treated for nervous prostration some time ago.

His two sons, Frank M. and Arthur T. Southard, who were his partners, had been out of the city recently, and much of the work of the firm had fallen upon the elder Southard. However, he had said nothing upon leaving the Rhinelander for his office in the morning that would indicate depression, but had promised to meet Mrs. Southard and his younger daughter, who is 17, at the theatre. When he did not arrive the two women saw the performance and then went home.

Mr. Southard was born sixty-four years ago in Boston, where he was educated and lived for several years. Thirty-five years ago he came to New York and established his firm. His wife was Miss Nancy Gregory before her marriage.

JOB FOR ROCKEFELLER, JR.

He Will Take Care of His Father's Estate Near Tarrytown.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., April 6.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is to be the new Superintendent of Boxwood, his father's country estate at Tarrytown, for a while on the retirement of G. V. Hellenway, who, it is said, will give up his job on April 15.

Young Mr. Rockefeller's new duties will give him plenty of outdoor exercise and should be a great help in building up his health. He will have charge of about 200 men, mostly Italians, and an estate of more than 50,000 acres. He will oversee all proposed new improvements, and will particularly be intrested in the erection of his father's new mansion.

As he will have to deal mostly with Italians, Mr. Rockefeller is busy studying the language, and already can understand many words. He intends to spend the Summer here, and will have plenty to do, as his father, besides building a new home, is always building new roads.

Young Mr. Rockefeller and his wife were out to-day breaking in a new tandem team he has purchased. The horses were frightened at every auto, and it was necessary for the coachman to get out and hold their heads every time an auto came along, but Mr. Rockefeller looked well and seemed to enjoy the sport.

ODELL, BY INNUENDO, ATTACKS ROOSEVELT

Talks of Grasshoppers, Paranoia, and Seekers After Political Pelf.

ADVISES AGAINST HYSTERIA

And Says He'd Rather Be Electrocuted Than Take Charge of State Politics.

Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., former Governor and Republican State Chairman of this State, in a speech last night indirectly likened President Roosevelt to a grasshopper; a man attacked by the microbe of politics; a dishonest seeker after power and pelf, and a sufferer from paranoia. Mr. Odell's speech was made at the first annual dinner of the Grillers' Club, a new organization with aims similar to those of the Amen Corner. The motto at the head of the songbook used at the dinner was "Soc Et Tu Um." Mr. Odell did that though without once mentioning names.

The dinner was held at Healy's restaurant, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue. It was marked by innumerable "stunts," some good and some poor. "Eddie" Graham, a newspaper man, presided and took charge of the more or less histrionic manoeuvres. As the first speaker of the evening Mr. Odell was introduced by a "trial," at the close of which he was sentenced to take charge of the Republican Party in the State. While all this was meant as a joke the former Governor replied to it seriously. While the other speeches of the evening were all more or less facetious his was serious from start to finish, and there was no mistaking its meaning.

When Mr. Odell rose to speak he was greeted with the following, sung to the tune of "Bill Simmons":

Let me ask you, Benny, while the music sounds,
(Bing, Bing!) where have you been?
Oh! close to the ground, while the gangs circle 'round,
And digging a pitfall, I ween.
You're learning your book, but you've got out the hook,
To drag off the pirate crew,
You'll need no disguise when the gang gets wise.
It's the top of the heap for you.

What Odell Said.

The ex-Governor began by saying:

"As to the findinga of this court, I want to say that I am very glad I am not in charge of Republican politics in this State just now. I would rather be electrocuted than be actually sentenced to take that job. I know of no sentence so severe as to be selected as the head of the Republican Party in the State of New York."

Then he went on to make these remarks, which were universally accepted as directed against President Rosevelt:

"Every age has its foibles, its vagaries, its strenuous men, and times when the voice of the reformer, like that of the grasshopper, is a burden in the land. The time comes when there are fewer diseases than remedies; more charlatans than physicians, and more apparent faults than virtues. There is a microbe of politics, as well as a microbe of disease, and one is as dangerous as the other. Those afflicted with the political germs are sometimes violent, untractable, and impossible and at war with themselves and all mankind. When one contemplates the dangers of this disorder be may well prefer the uncertainties of political death to the worriment, the ambition, and the selfishness which are the propagating causes of the disease.

"Some men who have become famous encircle themselves with their own egotism. Within this circle it is impossible to bring their fellow-men, because, with a keen perception, they are unable to discern the false, the untrue, and the sham. Give to me the simple man in preference to him whose constant hankering for power and pelf has distorted his imagination and led him to the belief that his honesty is the only simon-pure article and that all other members of society are cheats, frauds, and liars.

More Than Shooting to Be Brave.

"It takes something more than the power to inflict personal or political chastisement, to climb hills and to shoot, to make a brave man. The bravest man is he who can discern his own faults and make both confession and reparation for them. The man who can withstand public clamor, demands for sacrifices without reason, is braver than he who trims his sails to every political wind and who mistakes Summer zephyrs for roaring whirlwinds and typhoons. Dignity is the characteristic of a gentleman. Responsibility should bring with it respect for judgment, but where there is a sacrifice of both dignity and responsibility, through utterances that are incompatible with either or both, that man is not a great man who thus indulges, no matter if the ignorant do applaud him for these utterances.

"The people do not demand efficiency at the sacrifice of honesty or dignity. They would rather have an inefficient man than a dishonest one to serve them. Precedents which make possible graver abuses than those we seek to cure are both revolutionary and un-American. It is always easy to win a crowd, because there is always a great number in every assembly who would prefer that others do their thinking for them. It is this characteristic of crowds which makes possible the political boss, and all the abuses we are complaining of. All the legislation in the world will not strengthen the brain. Intelligence can only come through schooling and experience.

Slap at Paternalism in Government.

"That paternalism in government which seeks to take away from the individual the power of initiative and performance; which aims to safeguard him in the same manner in which we protect an infant, not only fails in its purpose, but it is a positive injury and detriment to the community."

Mr. Odell went on to say that there was to be found in the Constitution safeguards enough for all purposes. He continued:

"Woe betide the man who transgresses these constitutional restrictions, whether it is done in the form of centralized government or as confiscatory legislation."

Continuing, he said people cared more

W. A. CLARK ESCAPES DEATH.

Ex-Senator's Carriage Breaks Through Ice on a Colorado River.

TRINIDAD, Col., April 6.—While ex-Senator William A Clark of Montana was crossing a river twenty miles west of Trinidad his carriage broke through the ice and was upset. The Senator was plunged into the stream. He was rescued by other members of the party after being held under the ice.

Mr. Clark was hurriedly taken to a ranch five miles away. When be arrived his clothing had frozen. After being furnished with dry clothing the party proceeded to Weston, eight miles distant, where the Senator's private car was waiting.

Mr. Clark, who is accompanied by his wife and daughter, resumed his trip to Los Angeles this afternoon, still abed. He was on a tour of inspection of his coal properties when the accident happened.

SENATOR HEYBURN ILL.

Is Suffering in Philadelphia from Acute Indigestion.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—Senator W. B. Heyburn of Idaho was taken ill here to-night, and is under the care of two physicians and a nurse at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

The Senator came to this city to attend a dinner, and soon after his arrival complained of feeling ill. He became worse, and friends summoned physicians, who diagnosed his case as acute indigestion. Late to-night he was resting easier.

STREET CAR BLOWN UP.

A Score of Passengers in Williamsburg Hurt in Peculiar Explosion.

A Hamburg Avenue trolley car was almost blown from the tracks at 11 o'clock last night by some explosive which had been placed on the rails at Hamburg Avenue and Suydam Street, Williamsburg, and into which it ran. The car was packed with passengers bound toward Canarsie, and these were thrown into a panic. Every window in the car was smashed and a score of persons were cut and bruised by the flying glass.

Three persons were so badly injured as to need the attendance of a physician. They are Sadie Crossman of 55 Belmont Avenue, her brother Michael, and Annie Wearson of 245 Bradford Avenue. Miss Crossman and her brother were cut about the head and face. Miss Wearson was similarly injured, and in addition suffered from shock.

All three were attended by Dr. Aroneon of the German Hospital, who also examined a score of the other passengers.

The explosion was heard for blocks away, and scores of persons rushed into the streets. Those near by saw the heavy trolley car lifted from the tracks, and tossed upward into the air. Strangely enough it settled back again directly upon the tracks.

JOHN W. HERRON INDICTED.

Taft's Father-in-Law Accused of Violating Anti-Trust Law.

Special to The New York Times.

LIMA, Ohio, April 6.—It became known here to-day that John W. Harron, father-in-law of Secretary of War Taft, had been indicted in connection with the alleged violations of the Ohio anti-trust laws. Mr. Herron was a Director of the Brockett Bridge Company, which was indicted here some time ago, along with the other prosecutions of bridge companies for being in a combine.

When W. W. Mills of the company was arrested at Covington yesterday and brought here to be arraigned, the names of the Directors who were included in the indictment, were made known. Mr. Herron's name was on the list.

QUICK LOOTING OF A BANK.

Clarence S. Darrow Tells of Wrecking of Bank of America.

CHICAGO, April 6.—In the trial of ex-Judge Abner Smith and other officials of the defunct Bank of America, before Judge Pinckney in the Criminal Court, Clarence S. Darrow testified to-day that the bank was "looted" by F. E. Creelman and Abner Smith within ten days from the date the institution opened for business.

Mr. Darrow told how he had at first contemplated purchasing $25,000 worth of the bank's stock, but that after an examination of the subscription list he had changed his mind and invested only $7,500. He had a personal deposit account of $3,500 in the bank at the time of the failure, while his firm had a deposit account of $2,500 and owned some stock.

CHILDREN TO HAUL STATUE.

Richmond Little Ones Will Honor the Memory of Jefferson Davis.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., April 6.—The Jefferson Davis Monument Association has just sent a request to the Lee Camp of Confederate Veterans, asking that they take charge of the transfer of the Davis Statue from the railway station to the monument site. This request has been accepted.

Commander Freeman will also make arrangements for hundreds of children to assist in removing the statue from the station. A long rope will be attached to the wagon containing the statue, and each of the children will catch hold of the rope and assist in hauling the statue.

NEW CHICAGO POSTMASTER.

State Senator Daniel A. Campbell Named to Succeed Mr. Busse.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—On the recommendations of Senators Cullom and Hopkins Daniel A. Campbell of Chicago was to-day appointed Postmaster of Chicago to succeed Fred A. Busse, who has been elected to the Mayoralty.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 6.—State Senator Daniel A. Campbell was born in Elgin on June 23, 1863. He was graduated from the Chicago College of Law and was admitted to the bar in 1886. Mr. Campbell was first elected to the General Assembly in 1893 as a representative, and in 1895 he was made a Senator. He has served in the Senate from 1895 until this time. He is a fine political organizer, as shown by his continued success as a Republican in a Democratic district.

Harriman Episode Didn't Count—Popular Enthusiasm Regards Roosevelt as Incarnation of "Square Deal" Policy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—The White House to-day declined to make any comment upon the opinions of the Republican editors that President Roosevelt is more popular to-day than when he was overwhelmingly elected in 1904, and that in the judgment of many of them he should be a candidate in 1908. Although unwilling to comment upon this extraordinary testimonial, the White House again called attention to the statement issued by the President on the night of election day, 1904, when he said:

"On the 4th of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitutes my first term. The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance and not the form. Under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination."

On a great many different occasions since that night the President has reiterated, in one form or another, this determination not to accept the nomination next year, and in spite of the many appeals from all parts of the country. The President feels that at last he has persuaded the majority of his party to believe that he was absolutely sincere in his determination not to be a candidate again, and with that he is content to stand on his election night declaration.

On Monday last THE NEW YORK TIMES addressed to the editors of 500 Republican papers a letter requesting the opinion of each as to whether President Roosevelt is as popular and as strong generally with the voters as he was at the time of his election.

Up to the present, sixty-eight editors have replied. The answer of the Republicans of the country, as it is confidently, eagerly, and enthusiastically expressed by these editors, is one unanimous shout of praise for Roosevelt, but many of them do not comment themselves on the third-term question. It is declared from every hand that he is stronger in the affections of the people than ever before. From Maine to Minnesota, these men, so close to public opinion, unite in affirming that the President has so grown in the public confidence and admiration since his assumption of the Chief Magistracy that he is now the absolute idol of his party and of thousands of habitual opponents of his party. He is held to be the incarnation of the popular instinct against corporation privilege, the embodiment of the "square deal" principle. Where he has made one enemy since the beginning of his term of office he has won two friends, declare with a curious agreement in this form of eulogy several widely separated editors. Some note a tendency to follow Roosevelt implicitly; to believe that whatever Roosevelt believes and does is right because Roosevelt believes and does it. Some perceive that the first impulsive admiration which was given a somewhat spectacular martial hero has deepened into a thoughtful and earnest taust in his conscientiousness, his abiding zeal for righteousness, and on the whole his wisdom. "Never before so strong," "Stronger than when he was overwhelmingly elected," are phrases which scarcely one of THE TIMES's correspondents has succeeded in avoiding.

In short, there is no escaping from, or evading, the fact that if the Republican editors of the country are judges of the trend of opinion in their party, Mr. Roosevelt is the object of an admiration which it would seem no other American has ever received. So far as they undertake to speak for Democrats, these editors remark a curious turning toward the Republican President of the heart of the Democratic voters, who by the thousand, it is said, would prefer him to any man the Democrats could nominate out of their own ranks.

The report printed below is so extraordinary in its unanimity as to the extreme popularity of Mr. Roosevelt that, as one editor puts it, "neither desires, doubts, nor fears can put this state of facts out of sight." We have here an actual condition such as has seldom, if ever, been paralleled in the history of American politics. It is, of course, true that the American people are not electing a President for another twelvemonth.

A number of editors voluntarily assert that Republicans will demand that he be again required to lead the party. "Regardless of his own wishes," it is declared, "he must be the standard bearer of 1908." If any other man be nominated, says one, it will be most difficult to persuade the people that "the interests" are not at the bottom of it. Roosevelt stands for the desires of "the people." Roosevelt must carry those desires to their triumphant realization.

The symposium given below includes the gist of every reply thus far received by THE NEW YORK TIMES. Among the replies was a single one unfavorable to Mr. Roosevelt; it appears among the rest. One expresses a doubt whether his declaration that he would not accept a third-term nomination is not an essential element of Mr. Roosevelt's popularity and whether this would not be totally impaired if he failed to adhere to his announced resolution in this respect.

THE TIMES's letter of inquiry was sent out on Monday. That day the Harriman-Roosevelt correspondence was published. Before any reply was written the pros and cons of that sensational episode had been pretty thoroughly debated. Few of the editors who write THE TIMES deem it worth while to refer to the matter. To the minds of nono does it occur that the incident will hurt the President.

But here are the letters themselves:

Bridgeport, Conn., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this section of Connecticut and, indeed, all through the State, the belief in the inflexible courage, honesty, and persistency in right of the President has confirmed the popularity which he had won, and he is stronger in the confidence, good will and respect of the people than ever before. He may have offended a few, but he has compelled the admiration and respect of thousands. GEO. C. WALDO,
Editor of The Standard.

Waterbury, Conn., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is stronger to-day with the masses an ever before, meaning the masses both of the Republican and Democratic parties. W. M. LATHROP, Editor Republican.

New Haven, Conn., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With the voters in general President Roosevelt is stronger than at the time of his election. With the voters closely affiliated with corporation and financial interests he is weaker. With tho masses he is strong, with the classes he is weak.
THE EVENING LEADER.

Centralia, Ill., April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We are of the opinion that President Roosevelt is even stronger in the hearts of the voters in this part of "Egypt"—Southern Illinois—and that he would get practically every vote if ho again ran for President, as many still hope for.

The attacks on Mr. Roosevelt have been such as to strengthen his hold, if anything. VERNE E. JOY,
Editor Evening Sentinel.

Joliet, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is no doubt that President Roosevelt is even stronger in this section than he was at the time of his election. I am not speaking from impression alone, but as the result of a careful inquiry. I have had forty-four reprssentative citizens interviewed on the subject, and of these all but four have expressed themselves in favor of the President's renomination.
A. S. LECKIE,
General Manager, The Herald.

Kankakee, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Roosevelt is stronger with the people here at this present time than ever before. There are more people in the West for Roosevelt to-day than when he was last a candidate. CHAS. & C. E. HOLT,
The Gazette.

Sterling, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is the general hope on the part of the voters here that President Roosevelt will reconsider his declaration and accept another nomination from his party to the office he holds. I am certain that I have not overstated the feeling of the people in this part of Illinois. The people trust him implicitly, and admire him more as time goes on. If anything, he is stronger now than at the time of his election.
E. S. HOOVER, The Gazette.

Bloomington, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this section of Illinois President Roosevelt is apparently in greater favor with the people than when he was elected. And this because of his success in putting on the statute books certain principles which were no more than mere promises or recommendations when he took office. They like him for the good work actually accomplished, and have increased faith in his ability to solve successfully certain important problems yet remaining.

Whether this popularity will go to the extent of insisting that he stand again for the office against his express declaration that he would not is another question. On that question public opinion here is not clearly defined at this time.
JOSEPH B. BATES,
Editor The Pantagraph.

Moline, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is no question that President Roosevelt is more popular with the voters of this section than at the time of his election. His policies have the indorsement of the voters of all parties, and he would not only hold the former vote, but would draw many of those who voted for other candidates. W. F. EASTMAN,
Editor Dispatch.

Champaign, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There can be no doubt that in this quarter of Illinois President Roosevelt is a much more popular man than he was in 1904. In this county of 50,000 population I do not know a Republican who is not for him, and I believe at least one-third of the Democrats would be more ready to vote for him than for any Democrat who is likely to be nominated next year. Neither desires, doubts nor fears can put this state of facts out of sight.
J. R. STEWART, Editor Gazette.

Rockford, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Republic believes that Mr. Roosevelt is much stronger in this section than he was three years ago. He is practically the only man considered for the Republican nomination next year. Hope that he would lead in efforts to curb the power of great corporations made much of his strength when he was last elected. That hope has now become absolute confidence. He is considered the only man who can successfully carry forward the reforms now under way under his leadership, and the only Republican sure to beat Bryan.
EDITOR, Rockford Republic.

Peoria, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe Mr. Roosevelt is much stronger than ever before, and that this is true without party distinction. He is deeply admired by all classes; has already done some big things and promises to do still bigger things, and the people believe that he can make good. H. M. PINDELL,
Publisher, The Journal.

Springfield, Ill., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe that President Roosevelt is fully as popular and as strong generally with the people of Illinois now as he was at the time of his election, and that they would be glad to give him another term if he would accept it.
CLARENCE R. PAUL,
Editor, Illinois State Journal.

Hartford City, Ind., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This county (Blackford) never but once in its history went Republican in a National campaign, and that was for Theodore Roosevelt. He polled the biggest vote in the district (Eleventh) in its history. He can get it again, with increased vote. He has the confidence of the people, regardless of politics. He is stronger than ever.
TIMES-GAZETTE.

Elkhart, Ind., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When President Roosevelt was elected in 1904 this county and district gave him an enormous plurality. His attitude on some questions of general and national interest has much lessened his popularity, and conservative men who at first doubted his judgment and steadiness, but were convinced by the two years of his succession to President McKinley's term of office, have returned to their doubts, and he is not by any means as strong as at the time of his election. His insistence upon certain legislation, his apparent desire to centralize in the general Government and even in the Administration some powers of which States and the citizenship have been jealous, is looked upon with distrust and with fear. He would stand in another contest much as any Republican candidate, with no unusual fervor of enthusiasm, though there would be some personal opposition that would not adhere to certain others. Financial interests fear him, industrial interests are apprehensive. A. P. KENT, The Review.

Crawfordsville, Ind., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to yours of April 1, I do not hesitate to say that in this section of the country President Roosevelt was never stronger with the people than now.
A. A. McCAIN, The Journal.

Burlington, Iowa, April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is unquestionably very strong in the popular esteem among citizens of all parties in Iowa. There is noticeable, however, a growing restlessness among business men because of the fear that the President's attitude toward railway and large business interests will be detrimental to the prosperity of the country. It is recognized that radical legislation in Iowa and other States relative to railways and other corporations contributes largely to the fears for the future, and there is a disposition among some of the people to attribute to the President the inspiration of the State legislators who take the cue from him, when, as a matter of fact, many of their acts would not have the President's approval.

The inability of the Democrats to unite upon either a candidate or a platform; and the large range of possible candidates in the Republican party, with no one of them distinctively in the lead, also have contributed to the continuance of Mr. Roosevelt's strength with the people.
J. L. WAITE,
Editor, Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Lawrence, Kan., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I do not see wherein the popularity of Roosevelt has decreased. On the other hand, I do see a more unanimous opinion in favor of his policies in this part of the country. J. L. BRADY, The Journal.

Biddeford, Me., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt, in my opinion, is more popular and stronger with the voters generally in this section at the present time than ever before. Very truly yours,
C. H. PRESCOTT, Daily Journal.

Lewiston, Me., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We believe that President Roosevelt was never more popular in New England, and in Maine in particular, than he is to-day. We believe were a State election to occur to-day, involving Federal issues and the Presidential candidacy, that Roosevelt would carry this State by 50,000 majority, and that a candidate standing for the Foraker type would be defeated.

The Republicans carried this State in the last campaign by claiming that it was necessary to secure the return of our Congressional delegation, and the re-election of Senator Frye, in order that Roosevelt might have a good Republican backing in Congress. But for that fact, in our judgment, the State would have gone Democratic in the last election, as there was much popular dissatisfaction with the action of the Republicans on several State issues.

The Democrats in the last State campaign discussed almost no issues but those of the State, being afraid to touch Federal issues as raised by President Roosevelt. The Republican campaigners devoted themselves assiduously to the defense of what is known in Maine as "Roosevelt Republicanism."

Should the next Republican candidate for the Presidency represent the Foraker wing of the party, our judgment is that Maine would be lost to the Republicans.
LEWISTON JOURNAL
(By Frank L. Dingley).

Bath, Me., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Replying to your letter of April 1, it is my opinion that President Roosevelt is stronger in Bath than ever before, as well as this whole section of Maine. We are particularly interested in the Panama Canal on account of our shipbuilding indsutry, and believe President Roosevelt can complete this great undertaking in less time and at less expense than any other man. F. B. NICHOLS, Manager, The Times.

Portland, Me., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think there has been no diminution in Maine in the public regard for President Roosevelt since his election to the Presidsncy.

Several schools of so-called reformers, Socialistic and otherwise, have dubbed themselves and their ideas "Roosevelt-ian," and have shouted from the housetops that the President is their patron saint; of this the people are a little sick, but the President himself, and that for which he really stands, seem to be as strongly intrenched as ever in the public favor. Besides, the President has gained in some particulars. The peopls of Maine are peculiarly a peace-loving people, and, somehow, they seemed to fear, formerly, that Mr. Roosevelt always carried a chip upon his shoulder, and was itching for a foreign war. They feel safer about him now that so much of his Administration has passed into history, and have therefore, an added confidence in him.

If your question has to do with the possibility of Mr. Roosevelt's renomination, I do not mean to say that I think a Maine delegation would be for him in convention. His refusal to be considered a candidate is taken seriously here. Very truly,
GEORGE W. NORTON, Editor, Express.

Augusta, Me., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is no evidence that President Roosevelt's popularity is waning in Maine. On the contrary, we believe that he was never stronger than now with the party leaders here and with the masses of the people. BURLEIGH V. FLINT,
Publisher The Journal.

Rockland, Me., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt's popularity is even greatsr now than when he was elected, but whether his strength for vote getting is as great would depend upon whsther he wae running for a first or a third term. His declaration that he will not again bs a candidate for the Presidency appears to be one of the strongest reasons for his popularity, and the sentiment now seems to be as strong as in the days of Grant against any man holding the position of Chief Executive more than two terms.
D. N. THAYER, Publisher The Star.

Beverly, Mass., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is more popular with the masses than ever, and the Republican support would go out to him without an effort to crystalize it. While some of us do not agree with all his radical ideas in regard to railroads and corporations, we cannot help but admire the honesty and fearlessness of the man. The third term bugaboo would make no difference to his indorsement in this part of Massachusetts. ALBERT VITTUM,
Editor Evening Times.

Fitchburg, Mass., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Indications generally seem to justify the opinion that President Roosevelt has lost none of his popularity or strsngth in this locality since he was elected in 1904. While it is quite likely that he has lost slightly with some classes, he has overcome this in other directions, and Republican leaders agree that his general strength is not impaired. If thers has been a change either way, it is undoubtedly toward an increase, rather than a falling off, of popularity.
THE FITCHBURG SENTINEL,
By George H. Godbeer.

Gloucester, Mass., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt, in my opinion, is certainly as strong in this locality as he was at the time of his election. I will go even further, and say that I believe he has gained greatly in popularity since his inauguration two years ago.
LEONARD F. WILLIAMS,
Editor Cape Ann News.

Northampton, Mass., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We see no indication of a decrease of President Roosevelt's popularity in this region—not the slightest.
DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE.

Greenfield, Mass., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It seems to me that Mr. Roosevelt commands even more popular support and admiration in this section than at the time of his election. I think there are very few Republicans about here who are not warm in their commendation of his Administration, and a great many Democrats regard him with admiration. There is some opposition about here among Republicans to a third term, and there are many Republicans who question the wisdom of trying to force another nomination on Mr. Roosevelt, in view of his emphatic statements that he would not be a candidate. However, if he were to alter his mind, I have no doubt that he would get a large majority of the delegates about here for another Presidential nomination.
EDW. K. TITUS,
Editor Gazette & Courier.

Pittsfield, Mass, April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think that President Roosevelt is as strong in this section as he was at the time of his election. K. B. MILLER,
Eagle.

Attleboro, Mass., April 6.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe a great majority of the Sun's 4,000 readers would be in favor of a third term for President Roosevelt, not only because this is a Republican stronghold, but because his public policies have been vigorous and far-reaching enough to appeal to all Americans, irrespective of party. The weak spots of his Administration are overshadowed by his achievements, and every month of his term has strengthened him as a vote-getter. Even his political enemies here express their admiration of him as a man while they deplore some of his public acts. CHARLES C. CAIN,
Editor The Daily Sun.

Springfield, Mass., April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe that the people of this section are more enthusiastic for President Roosevelt to-day than ever before. There are some interests that are opposed to him, but these interests are represented by a very few people, and the only change in the popular sentiment has been in his favor. I would say that possibly there are few less Republicans, very few, who are enthusiastic Roosevelt supporters, while he has gained immensely in the support of Democrats. A. P. LANGTRY, The Union.

Boston, April 2.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the Presidential election were to be held to-day, we believe that in Massachusetts Theodore Roosevelt would obtain at least as great and as significant a plurality as he had in 1904.

In a recent canvass of the Legislature, made by this paper, as to the Presidential preferences in 1908, the great majority of the legislators favored the renomination of the President, although it seems hopeless to expect him to reconsider his decision not to be a candidate again.
BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Menominee, Mich, April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This new Northwest is not tied to any political party. The admiration so broadly felt here for President Roosevelt is based on his "square deal" policies more than the mere fact that he is a Republican. He is stronger than ever in this section because of his devotion to what he, and we, believe is right, and because he follows his duty, whether or not it leads him to tread on the sacred toes of precedent, Republican or Democratic. He had all the Menominee Republicans with him in 1904. He still has them, together with a large delegation from the Democratic party in this county. R. M. ANDREWS,
Editor Herald-Leader.

Port Huron, Mich, April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While we have found occasion to criticise the President upon some points during the past six months, and previous to the adjournment of Congress thought we saw signs of a recession of his popularity, observation during the recent State campaign, and expressions we hear among voters, convince us that at the present time President Roosevelt is quite as popular with the voters of all parties as three years ago, and has their confidence in a greater degree than ever before. It is our opinion that if he were to run for President the present year his majority in Michigan would be larger than it was in 1904, even were W. J. Bryan the Democratic candidate.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This is a mining region, heretofore dominated in politics by the corporations. Local elections are beginning to show the latter that they must begin to keep hands off. I think Roosevelt has helped bring about this result. I should say the President is fully as strong among the masses of the voters as he ever was—perhaps a little stronger. FRANK J. RUSSELL,
Marquette Mining Journal.

Rochester, Minn., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt grows continually in the estimation of our people. He is stronger and more popular than ever, and should he by any possibility consent to be a candidate for re-election, would receive a much larger vote than befors.

Stillwater, Minn., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to yours of April 1, President Roosevelt is stronger to-day with the people in this district than ever. He is ths choice for President of 90 per cent. of our people, irrespective of politics.

Owatonna, Minn., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is stronger than ever in this section. In fact, the voters are so devoted to him that should any other man be nominated for President by the Republican Party it will be very difficult to convince our people that "the intereste" were not at the bottom of it, and consequently it would not be at all surprising if Minnesota, in that case, gave a Democratic majority. The tendency is toward the Democratic Party, and Roosevelt's is the only influence which checks it at all.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt's popularity is stronger than ever. He may have lost some supporters who have not liked all his policies, but, in my opinion, he has gained two for every one he has lost.

Omaha, Neb., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe President Roosevelt is more popular and stronger with the people of this State and section than he was at the time of his election. Nebraska and Iowa have just been going through a process of self-emancipation from railroad domination in politics, and the peopls regard President Roosevelt as their natural leader in this movement. VICTOR ROSEWATER,

Portsmouth, N. H., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is stronger to-day with the voters of New Hampshire than he ever was. The sentiment is that he will be forced by popular demand to lead the party in 1908. Theodore Roosevelt's popularity continues to increase with our people. F. W. HARTFORD,
Editor and Publisher Daily Chronicle.

Camden, N. J., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt has lost no ground in the popular estimation since his election. Rather, I should say, have his official actions strengthened and confirmed the people's confidence in him as the fearless champion of the "square deal." His attitude toward the financial jugglers and railroad magnates of ths Harriman type is understood and approved. The people seem to accept his policy as essentially right, believing it will work to their benefit. In this section it would appear that the voters would welcome the opportunity to vote for four years more of a Roosevelt Administration.
UPTON S. JEFFERYS,
Editor Post-Telegram.

New Brunswick, N. J., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I do not hesitate to give it as my honest opinion that Mr. Roosevelt's strength and popularity in this county are decidedly greater than in the election of 1904.

This is especially trus with regard to the average citizen, regardless of politics or conditions, mechanics and manufacturers, clerks and merchants, employer of labor and employee, Democrat and Republican. All regard the President as honest, sincere, and fearless in his determination to secure a "square deal" for all, and to abolish special privileges for the few. His popularity is remarkable. The politicians seem unable to understand him, while the people seem to idolize him.
W. B. PRICKITT,

Passaic, N. J., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There can be no doubt that the President has a warm place in the affections of the people of the City of Passaic, population 40,000, and Republican in National elections by at least 2,000. If the President is any less popular with Passaic voters than he was at the time of his election they have given no sign of the fact. On the contrary, there is much third-term sentiment. G. M. HARTT,
Editor.

Paterson, N. J., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the City of Paterson, the County of Passaic, and State of New Jersey, Theodore Roosevelt is many times more popular and stronger than he was at the time of his election.

He would carry every county in New Jersey by the highest vote ever given a candidate in this State, provided, of course, the present prosperity continues, and the panic so many fear and predict does not occur. Mr. Roosevelt certainly has the people with him now, and that includes a large percentage of the Democratic Party. J. E. CROWELL,

Olean, N. Y., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is nothing to indicate a diminishment of the President's popularity with the people. There is an increase rather than a decrease of public confidence in his patriotism and of popular judgment in the wisdom of his governmental policies. With evidences everywhere of organized graft and political power used as an asset for personal gain; with intolerable bossism intrenched behind honored and historic party achievements, directing party affairs for selfish ends, Roosevelt, in the popular understanding of the purity and patriotism of his purposes and motives, towers far and above party or parties in public confidence, in the general belief that he is striving for bettered conditions and a return to the true principles represented in a Government by the people and for the people. CHAS. D. STRAIGHT,

Cohoes, N. Y., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Cohoes is a manufacturing city, with a large labor vots. President Roosevelt has consistently done everything in his power to givs labor a "square deal." The voters of this city, Democrats as well as Republicans, realize this fact, and to-day Roosevelt, should he run for any office for which the peopls of this city could vots, would receivs a larger vote than they gave him when he was electsd President.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Binghamton, N. Y., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

From general observation and talking with people of all classes, I think that President Roosevelt was never so strong and popular with the general public, without regard to party affiliation, as he is today. He has made many enemies, as any man in an important official position who does things nccessarily must, and thereby has undoubtedly turned from his support some men who formerly supported him. But I believe that the confidence in him of the general public has been strengthened, and that for every man whose support he has lost he has gained two who formerly were against him.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is no doubt of the continued popularity of President Roosevelt in this section. His strength is greater, rather than less, than it was in 1904. An incident that shows how firmly the people of the Thirty-fourth Congressional District believe in the President was the defest last Fall of Representative James W. Wadsworth, largely because of his antagonism to the President, a plurality of 13,036 for Wadsworth in 1904 being changed to a plurality of 5,902 for his opponent, Peter A. Porter, in 1906. A. J. McWAIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Undoubtedly President Roosevelt is stronger and more popular with his party in this Congressional District than ever before. The thousands of anthracite miners in this county remember with grateful appreciation his services in settling the long striks of 1902, which secured to them an advanced rate of wages, and they, too, regard his attitude on the greed of corporations with high favor. The corporations, on the other hand, profess to view his attempted regulation of the big combinations of capital with some concern. However, should Mr. Roosevelt be induced to stand for the Presidency again, he would carry the county by a majority largely increased over that given him the last time he came before the people.

Rutland, Vt., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe that President Roosevelt's popularity and strength with the voters generally and with the Republican leaders in Vermont are as great as they ever have been since that fatal Sept. 6, 1900, when Mr. Roosevelt, then Vice President, while addressing 700 representative citizens of Vermont, received word of the terrific calamity to the Nation in the shooting of William McKinley at Buffalo. At that critical moment Mr. Roosevelt conducted himself as an intensely loyal American; and from that day to this, through all the stress, he has not, as I believe, lost ground as the idol of Vermont Republicans. The effect of his radical and unequivocal stand on great public questions has apparently been to cement to him the more closely his friends and admirers of all parties, and to align against him only those who have been opposed to him from the beginning. I believe that it is the feeling throughout this State that he must be—regardless of his personal wishes—the standard bearer of the Republican party in 1908. CHARLES T. FAIRFIELD,
Editor The Evening News.

St. Albans, Vt., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think President Roosevelt is, if anything, even stronger and more popular with the voters in this section to-day than he was at the time of his election, for the reason that he is better appreciated. A personal popularity that at one time was largely due to the characteristic American exuberance of hero worship and keen admiration for a blunt, honest, courageous, virile man of brains, has given place to a deep-seated and earnest trust in the integrity of his purpose, confidence in his ability, and the unswerving conviction that, whatever incidental mistakes he may make, he is fighting a great battle for the rights of the people at a somewhat critical period in the cause of good government.
FRANK L. GREENE,

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is my opinion that never before was President Roosevelt as strong in this section as he is now. It is practically impossible to find a Republican or independent voter who is not enthusiastically for him, while, even where Democrats are as scarce as they are in Vermont, not a few of that party prefer Roosevelt to any man whom their own party is likely to name.

NOT AT DINNER—PENROSE.

Senator Says, Too, That He Is Sure Roosevelt Will Believe Him.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—Expressing himself in the most emphatic terms at his command, Senator Penrose this morning reiterated his denial of yesterday that he had made any statement relative to a five-million-dollar combination, tho purpose of which would be to defeat the policies of President Roosevelt.

Senator Penrose went further than that, and said he did not even attend the dinner at the Shoreham, at Washington, where the alleged anti-Roosevelt plot is said to have been made public.

"The best proof of the cordial relations existing between the President and myself," said Senator Penrose, "is the fact that within the next week I shall call on President Roosevelt at the White House by appointment, and shall then make it my especial purpose to tell him that I know nothing whatever about any kind of plot against the present Administration. I know that Mr. Roosevelt will believe me.

"Why, as for that dinner at the Shoreham, where all this talk is supposed to have originated, I was not even present.

"As for making any further effort to deny what has been said in this matter, I shall not try to emulate Don Quixote in his attempt to tilt at windmills. I am not, and never have been, interested in any conspiracy, and I can only repeat again and again that it is absurd to try to draw me into a controversy.

"As already said, my meeting with the President will set at rest any further talk as to my antagonizing Mr. Roosevelt or the policies he has inaugurated."

TAX CLERK DENIES GRAFTING.

Tells Court He Didn't Take a Bribe to Reduce Taxes.

John F. Boullion, the Tax Department clerk, whose arrest upon a charge of having accepted an unauthorized fee in connection with his duties in the department, was caused a few days ago, following an investigation by the District Attorney, steadfastly denied the charge yesterday at his preliminary hearing before Magistrate Wahle in the Tombs Court.

The complaint against Boullion was made by Harry Hall, Treasurer of the Hamilton Building, at 100 William Street, who told the District Attorney that Boullion had offered to reduce his taxes for a fee of $25. He was arrested by County Detective Reardon, who charged that he had seen Hall hand $25 to Boullion and that he had found the bills in Boullion's pocket.

The clerk declared yesterday that he had received only a one-dollar bill from Hall, and was reaching in his pocket for 75 cents change when he had been arrested. The 25 cents, he said, represented his fee as a Notary. To a question of Magistrate Wahle, Boullion admitted that the legal fee for taking a deposition was 12 cents.

"Tax Commissioner Purdy permits us to receive 25 cents, however," Boullion explained.

Assistant District Attorney Paul Krotel, who appeared against Boullion, attempted to gain an admission from him that he had received presents of half a dozen shirts from the Primrose Shirt Company of 486 Broadway, and a suitcase from the Co-operative Trunk and Bag Company of 1 Beaver Street. Boullion denied having received these things, and declared that he had never made any offer to these companies to get their taxes reduced.

Mr. Krotel wanted to know if Boullion had not offered to reduce the assessment of a realty firm in lower Broadway for $25.

"Didn't you ask one man how much money he had with him, and when he told you only $2, didn't you appoint a day when you would come to his office and meet him?" Mr. Krotel asked.

Boullion declared that this was not true. In his denial of Hall's story, Boullion was borne out by Charles F. Malloy, a searcher in the Tax Department, who testified that he had heard Boullion's conversation with Hall, and that the clerk had only demanded his fee as a Notary.

Boullion's bail was fixed at $3,500, and the examination was adjourned until April 15.

ROOSEVELT NOT SURE AS TO KNOX

Fears His Candidacy for President Is Part of the Reactionary Plot.

SENATOR NOT SUSPECTED

But Pennsylvania Is a Head Centre for Those Who Would Thwart the President's Plans.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Senator Knox's Presidential candidacy is in a wabbly condition. If Senator Knox is to be a genuine candidate for the Presidency, and in the fight for the nomination to a finish, with no thought in view of throwing the big Pennsylvania delegation to some reactionary candidate, no attempt will be made by the friends of Roosevelt or the friends of Taft to interfere in the Pennsylvania result.

But if it should develop that the Knox candidacy is, as feared by many, merely a scheme to tie up Roosevelt States with favorite son candidates, the friends of Roosevelt's policies in Pennsylvania will come to the front just as they have asserted themselves in Ohio.

What is true of Pennsylvania is true of all other States. The President knows what is being attempted in reactionary circles. For the ability of Senator Knox he has the highest regard, and he does not question the Senator's integrity. But—and the suggestion cannot be too strongly emphasized—the strongest reactionary influences in any State are to be found in Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania, or rather, the Republican machine in Pennsylvania, is for tariff standpatism. The strongest financial influences in any State in the union except New York are to be found in Pennsylvania. These are inimical to Roosevelt and his policies.

In the election of delegates to the National Convention, therefore, the question is, Are supporters of the President's policies to be chosen as Knox delegates, or are Republicans of the reactionary type to be chosen? Is Boise Penrose to lead the delegation of sixty-eight members, with delegates-at-large chosen from the ranks of reactionaries, or will Republicans be selected who stand for progressive rather than reactionary Republicanism?

Doubt Penrose's Professions.

The repeated declaration of Penrose that he is now, and always has been, for the Roosevelt policies has no more weight with the genuine friends of the Administration than the assertions of Senator Stephen B. Elkins that he was Roosevelt's stanchest friend made at the time Elkins was up for re-election.

The triumph of Roosevelt means the elimination of Penrose just as certainly as it means the elimination of Foraker. The chief significance of the revelations which have come through White House sources does not lie in the exposure of a fund raised by Wall Street manipulators to defeat the Roosevelt policies.

The suggestion of paramount importance is the determination of the President to raise the issue in every State so that the sheep may be separated from the goats. It won't do to yell "Hurrah for Roosevelt" under the impression that every White House purpose has been met by this cry. The President knows the people are with him. A politician does not get anywhere who goes to the White House and tells the President that he is for him for a third term, and the people are for him.

Too many of these declarations there is a genuine ring, but men go to the White House every day with these words in their mouth who the President knows full well would accept his nomination or that of any man who stands for his policies under protest, and would contribute to a campaign fund to defeat him.

A man who didn't know how to fight would have been put down and out by the efforts of the men who have attacked Roosevelt from behind. The President is intensely practical in his policies. After the cards had been stacked against him, he insisted upon showing all the hands to the great public. The move was entirely unexpected. The public of California and Kansas and Nebraska, the President believes, understands the situation just as well as the public of New York and Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

The President knew all about the efforts which were being made to defeat him before the Bourne dinner at the Shoreham Hotel was held. The statements of Penrose only went to confirm a fact already established.

It is a coincidence that the revelations which have set the country to talking were brought forth at a time when the man who will personally profit most by them was out of the United States. Secretary Taft is away quietly doing the work of the administration of which he has been such an important part.

In his absence President Roosevelt has issued his challenge for a fight to the finish with the special interests in every State. In his Presidential aspirations Secretary Taft has the acute sympathy of the President. Taft stands for the Roosevelt policies. With the fight assuming its present shape, there can be no compromise.

Roosevelt's Estimate of Taft.

"Taft and I look at things from the same angle," the President said the other day to a friend. "It would make no difference whether Taft had been President and I was in his Cabinet, or I was President and he was in my Cabinet."

It has been recalled since the revelations of the Shoreham dinner were made public that E. H. Harriman was in Washington for a week about the time of the adjournment of Congress. There were numerous small dinners given, none of which got into the newspapers. At these gatherings the men who figure in affairs were gradually gotten together.

The dinner at which a man boasted of what was to be done "to break down Rooseveltism" was of minor consequence compared to these gatherings. It would be impossible to present in tangible shape the combinations which were attempted to be formed, but as a final result politicians had "been felt out" and Harriman knew just how far each could be depended upon.

At various times to-day four of the men who met at the Bourne dinner called at the White House.

Senator Bourne is one of President Roosevelt's most loyal supporters. Senator Hansbrough of North Dakota, who professes greater loyalty to the President than any Northwestern Senator, also called.

Secretary Loeb was also a guest at the dinner, and so was "Bill" Andrews. Andrews is the old Pennsylvanian who was second in command for many years on the Quay machine. It was Andrews who was responsible for Quay's active management of the old Statehood fight, because Quay, always standing by his friends, wanted Andrews to come to the Senate from the new State of New Mexico. Andrews called to see the President to-day.

It was supposed that the purpose of the visit of Andrews was to pave the way for a visit from Penrose. Very naturally Mr. Penrose would not want to call at the White House for the purpose of making an explanation and receive the cold shoulder. It was said by Secretary Loeb that the visit of Senator Bourne had nothing whatever to do with the dinner. Neither Hansbrough nor Bourne nor Andrews would tell what occurred at the dinner or what guests were present.

CALLED MURPHY KINSMAN.

A man who said he was James Scully, 54 years old, of 510 East Nineteenth Street, walked into Bellevue Hospital last night and said to Dr. Hooker:

"I want to lay up a while." The result of the examination of the visitor by the physician led to Scully's being sent to the alcoholic ward. He was asked to give the name of his nearest relative, and replied:

"My sister is married to Charley Murphy. But I am not going to give her name. Just put down that my nearest relative is Mrs. De Witt, 220 East Forty-seventh Street." The visitor refused to talk any more and soon fell asleep.

ODELL, BY INUENDO, ATTACKS ROOSEVELT

for laws safeguarding health and employment and guaranteeing vested rights than for laws giving power and perpetuation to political organizations and the enunciation of doctrinafra theories. Socialism, he said, was sapping the republic. Then ha continued:

"I do not mean to be understood as opposing a proper Governmental restriction over monopolistic or corporate greed or of Government oversight over financial projects of the time. I believe that our securities, like our Government notes and bonds, should be current at par throughout the world because of wise laws which shall restrict capitalization within such bounds as shall measure the true, and not the fictitious, value of any corporate enterprise.

"You gentlemen of the press should study these things. After all, imperfection is the badge of humanity, and those whom you extol to-day, whose ideas seem to you perfect, experience may demonstrate within a short period to have been absolutely wrong; words enunciated by men whose seeming intelligence was but a highly developed case of paranoia, seeking the destruction rather than the betterment of mankind.

"Let us uphold that which our own common sense tells us to be right, uninfluenced by hysteria, passion, or prejudice; approaching every question uninfluenced by the utterances of demagogues or politicians of high or low degree, determining in our own minds and in our own manner the justice of every question."

Following Mr. Odell's speech, which was vigorously applauded, there were more stunts. John H. O'Brien, the Water Commissioner, was informed in a loud voice over an imaginary telephone wire that a water main had broken in the Nineteenth District.

Then ex-Judge D Cady Herrick made a speech, in which he said he was glad that the former Governor had made it clear that he was in reality a Democrat, because he himself was tired of formulating doctrines for the Republicans to steal. A reference was made, when he got up, to the cry of "Open the books," which he raised in the campaign of 1904.

"I don't know whether it would be advisable to open the books," said Mr. Herrick. "The Governor's friend, Mr. Harriman, has recently opened them a little way, and you see what a brain storm even that slight glimpse of the pages raised in Washington. A further opening might cause a very much aggravated attack of paranoia.

"Although some of those here may not believe it, I used to read the Bible, and I recall the passage written so long ago, 'All men are liars.' Nowadays we have a man in high office who says the same thing very freely. It is an unfortunate circumstance that he seems to have surrounded himself with men having that characteristic. This characterization by men in high places of their former intimates as rascals and liars is, seriously, a very bad thing, too unfortunate to be dwelt upon."

Mr. Herrick then praised Mr. Odell for having the courage of his convictions and being true to his friends. He said that the assertion by a leader at a recent political convention that riot was preferable to rottenness had been met by a divided people defeating riot by electing "your friend" and showing their disapproval of rottenness by electing the rest of the Democratic ticket. He echoed Mr. Odell's sentiments as to centralized government, and was heartily applauded.

"Here, three years ago," went on Mr. Herrick, addressing Odell, "you and your friend Harriman and other capitalists who got together and bought us up thought you were doing a patriotic duty. Now, when you collect another campaign fund you are charged with conspiracy."

Controller Herman Metz, Register Frank Gass, and President McGowan of the Board of Aldermen were among the others who spoke. The guests included, besides those mentioned, many of the local politicians of both parties, several downtown lawyers, and some newspaper men.

SAYS UNITED COPPER FAKED DIVIDENDS

unsuccessful in his efforts to get information out of the United Company or its officials. Mr. Lockwood said he was not satisfied with the results of these efforts, hence the suit which Mr. Hodgans is bringing at this time. Ha also said that he had tried unsuccessfully to subpoena Stanley Gifford of the United Copper Company to testify about the organization of the company, its dividends, and where its books were kept, to the end that he was eventually notified by Lawyer Robinson that Mr. Gifford wouldn't accept a subpoena. It was suggested by the Hainza representatives at that time, he said, that some of tha information desired from Mr. Gifford should be put in by stipulation, but that was not acceptable to Mr. Lockwood.

After Mr. Lockwood, Arthur P. Heinze, Vice President of the United Copper Company, was called. The preliminaries with Mr. Heinze were brief, and Mr. Walsh got down to tha quastion of the books in short order.

"Whare are the books of the United Copper Company?" he askad.

"I don't know," said Mr. Heinze. "I do not have charge of them."

"Whera were they when you last saw them?"

"I don't think I ever saw them," was the reply.

Q.—You are an officer of the company? A.—Yes.

Q.—And where do you spend most of your time? A.—At my office, 42 Broadway, where I am a partner in the firm of Otto Heinze & Co.

Q.—Is Mr. Gifford still Secretary and Treasurer of the United Copper Company? A.—He is Secretary. I don't know whether he is still Treasurer.

Q.—How can you find out? A.—From the minutes of the Directors' meetings.

Q.—Where would you go to find them? A.—To 42 Broadway. I would ask Mr. Gifford.

Q.—How often is he there? A.—Every day.

Q.—What brings him there? A.—His own business.

Q.—How near is your office to his? A.—There is a door between.

Q.—Do you ever see Gifford do anything but attend to his own business? A.—Yes, I have seen him attend meetings of the United and other companies.

Q.—He keeps the minutes? A.—Yes.

Q.—So if you started out to get the minutes you would go to 42 Broadway? A.—Yes.

Q.—And you have seen at least the minutes of the Directors' meetings? A.—Yes, I have seen them.

Q.—And some other books? A.—Yes, come to think of it, I have seen some other books, whether a ledger or a cash book, I don't know.

Q.—So you saw the books? A.—Yes, but I don't know which one. I'm not an accountant

Won't Produce Accounts.

Mr. Heinze said that these books were in the hands of Mr. Echstein, who was both cashier of United Copper and his private secretary. The examination proceeded for some little time on the lines of the above extracts, and finally Mr. Walsh said:

"So you have little doubt but that some of the books are at 42 Broadway?"

"I have very little doubt of it," said Mr. Heinze.

"As a matter of fact you know they are there?"

"I have no personal knowledge," tha witness persisted.

"And you could by inquiry of F. A. Heinze or Mr. Gifford, tell where the books are?" Mr. Walsh went on.

"If I wanted to," said A. P. Heinze.

"But you wouldn't?"

"I should not care to," was the reply.

"So, when I ask you to go to 42 Broadway and get the information you decline?"

"I do," replied the Vice President of the United Copper Company.

Mr. Walsh did not have much more success in getting information out of Mr. Heinze about a balance sheet of the United Copper Company dated Dec. 31, 1905, just before the properties of the United Copper were sold to the Cole-Ryan interests. Mr. Heinze did not care to say where the original balance shaat was of which the exhibit was a copy. He said his duties as Vice President of the United consistad in presiding at meetings in the absance of the President and in signing checks "upon instructions" as to the amounts and places of deposit. To Mr. Falk on cross-examination he explainad that as Vica President he did not hava charge of tha books.

John C. Later, a Director of the Red Matal Company, to which tha properties of the United were transferred in the merger of January, 1905, testified that the properties that went in included all the producing properties of the United Company. This fact was dwelt upon by counsel for Mr. Hodgens because of the allegations in his complaint that since the merger the United Company has been in effect a mere shell. Mr. Hodgens himself took the stand late in the afternoon, but his testimony was confined to matters preliminary to the more important charges made in his action.

WIFE'S KIDNAPPING STORY.

Decoyed from Home and Locked Up in Strange House—Husband Arrested.

Mrs. Lizzie Franchina, a pretty Italian woman, told Magistrate Furlong yesterday, in the Gates Avenue Court, where sha appeared to press a charge of assault against her husband, Joseph Franchina, that two weeks ago she was induced by a woman to leave her home, at 25 Montauk Avenue, Brooklyn, and that she was kept a prisoner in a strange house until a few days ago, when she escaped.

Mrs. Franchina did not say that her husabnd had anything to do with the kidnapping. She said tho woman came to her housa and told her that she was a friend of Mr. Franchina. The stranger suggested that thay take a walk. They had gone only a short distance, when, at a signal from her companion, so Mrs. Franchina said, two men grabbed her and forced a handkerchief saturated with chloroform over her face.

That is the last Mrs. Franchina remembered, sha said, until she came to her senses in a strange house. Sha was treated kindly, but was told that she could not get out, as her captors were to receive $100 if they kept her away for ten days. On Wednesday Mrs. Franchina found the front door of the house unlocked and escaped. She was too excited to take notice of the house number or the name of the street. The alleged assault took place, she said, after she reached her home.

Magistrata Furlong held Franchina, who is a barber, in $500 bail for examination on Thursday. The police are investigating the wife's story.

EX-CHIEF DEVERY SUED.

Architect Says He Owes Him $200 for Plans.

An action has been brought in the Jamaica, L. I., District Municipal Court against ex-Chief of Police William S. Devery by Alfred J. Bogart, a New York architect, who is seeking to recover $200 which he says Devery agreed to pay him for plans for a house which Devery ordered. He says that Devery paid $50 on account, agreeing to pay $200 mora.

Devery denies that he ordered the plans, and in an answer filed by his counsel declares that he knows nothing whatever about the plans, but that he does know about the $50, which he says Bogart obtained from him as a loan on Sept. 10 last.

Jersey Murderer Convicted.

The jury in the Labrick and Buglio murder case, on trial in May's Landing, N. J., agreed upon a verdict at 9 o'clock last night. It found Joseph Labrick guilty of murder in the first degree and Rafaele Bugli guilty of manslaughter. Mrs. Buglio showed no outward signs of emotion as the verdict was announced.

POINTS TO ANANIAS AS HIGH FINANCIER

James B. Dill Says That Stock Watering Is an Old Device.

SECRECY IS SOUGHT TO-DAY

New Jersey Advised to Discourage It—Mr. Roosevelt's Charges Worthy of Much Pondering.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—Judge James B. Dill of the New Jersay Court of Errors and Appeals was the principal speakar at ths annual banquet of the South Jersey Bar, held this avening at the Bourse. Tha subject of his speech was "The Responsibility of tha Lawyer." Before undertaking a critical examination of the corporation laws of New Jersey in the light of racant corporate developments, he made soma pointed references to the developments themselves, saying that to-day's situation was startling. Ha continued:

"The President of tha United States in open warfara with the powers of corporate finance, boldly charging that tha financial powers seek to obtain possession of State Legislatures, of the National Congress, and of the judiciary, by purchase, if necessary, is sufficient to make every citizen stop and ponder.

"On the other hand, the position of the apostles of high finance, when charged with corporate irregularities, that 'they move in a higher world into which we (the public) may not enter,' is equally startling and calls for the consideration of thinking men.

"High finance is not a modern institution and the term 'modern high finance' is a misnomer. Stock watering, withholding of dividends, diversion of capital, the making of false returns have been known for centuries.

"Early in tha first century certain gentlemen, imbued with a belief in community of interests, entered into a pooling agreement, each contributing his property and each to draw his ratable interest.

"This agreement they carried out faithfully with a single exception. One of tha organizers endeavoring to put a little water into his share of the enterprise, to get for himself something for nothing, sold his property, put a goodly portion of the proceeds in his own pocket, and turned the balance into the treasury as tha full consideration. A public investigation was forthwith ordered.

"The original apostle of high finance was arrested, tried, and convicted. He was not allowed to decline to answer under the advice of counsel, and therefore the case is reported in full in twenty-one lines. His accomplice, accorded a separata trial, was likewise promptly tried and convicted. For the record of an efficient investigation, a prompt trial, a just conviction, and for a sound authority upon the subject of high finance, the case of Ananias et Sapphira, reported in Acts, v., is in point.

"The record of tha proceedings of this ancient investigating committee should be instructive to the Intar-State Commerce Commission in its investigations of the Harriman-Alton deal.

"In these days there is no doubt that soms corporata financiers do attempt to ascend to a higher world into which the public may not enter, but there is a grave suspicion that the movement higher up is to get rid of observation and inquiry as to what is going on in the world of high finance. It is openly asserted that tha financier to-day who climbs Jacob's ladder into the clouds does so less with a view of communing with tha angels than of avoiding publicity.

"The operations against which the public clamor to-day is directed are customarily carried on by means of corporate forms. The State of New Jersey has been charged with har full share of responsibility in this respect. If, in the State of New Jersey, is to be found any Jacob's ladder by which financiers of doubtful morals seek to ascend into the clouds of obscurity, then it is the duty of the bar to ascertain the location of this ladder and take it down."

TO ENTERTAIN PEACE GUESTS.

Navy League to Invite Delegates of Various Patriotic Societies.

All the delegates sent by the patriotic societies of tha country to the Peace Congress, to be held in Carnegie Hall next week, will be entertained by the Navy League of the United States. It is not yet decided whether the function will take the form of a dinner or luncheon, or when or where it will be held. The Secretary of the League, George M. Owen, and Gen. Robert M. Thompson have the arrangements under their charge.

Congressman Richard Bartholdt, President of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, who is a Vice President of the Peace Congress, arrived in the city yesterday. He is taking an active part in the work of preparation, and will attend the Carnegie celebration at Pittsburg this week.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant is expected to arrive to-day upon the French liner La Touraine.

BURGLAR IN SKIRTS.

Trying to be Polite to Supposed Woman, Harlemite Gets a Blow.

Frank Garren, Jr., is accustomed to work far into the night, and he seldom meets any one on his way to his home on the top floor of the apartment house at 19 West 111th Street. He was startled, therefore, as he ascended the stairs shortly before dawn yesterday to hear the swish of petticoats on the landing in front of his door.

Garren prides himself upon his gallantry, however, so, although surprised, he lifted his hat politely as he ascended the last step, at the same time inquiring:

"Can I assist you in any way, Mada—Mada—Miss?"

To Garren's dismay, the young woman did not answer, but instead a strong fist shot out and struck him upon the jaw. The young man tried to grapple with his opponent, but a violent blow in the chest flung him backward. Gathering up her skirts, the athletic young woman fled down stairs. Garren was in doubt for a second as to just how he had offended the woman.

His shouts were heard by Janitor Nevins, who, rubbing his eyes sleepily, started up the stairs. On the second floor the janitor ran into a whirlwind of silk skirts, a feather boa, and an Easter hat. As it passed on down the stairs, leaving him prostrate, Nevins caught a glimpse of an unmistakable pair of men's shoes and frayed trousers peeping from beneath the lace and silk.

Shouting "It's a thief!" he got on his feet and started in pursuit. Garren, too, joined in the chase. At the door the intruder, his skirts gathered in a knot about his waist, stopped and swung around. Something gleamed in his hand as he shouted:

"Stand where you are! Don't move a step toward me."

The voice was harsh and gruff, and Garren and Nevins obeyed, while the burglar darted out the door and down the street. Garren and Nevins, together with a dozen tenants who had been awakened by the noise, again started in pursuit, shouting loudly for the police. Not a policeman was in sight, however, and when the band of pursuers reached the corner the burglar had gotten out of sight.

Garren reported the matter to the police of the East 104th Street Station yesterday, but no trace of the burglar has been found. Investigation showed that none of the flats had been entered, and that Garren had evidently disturbed the burglar before he had an opportunity to begin work.

WHITE AUCTION OVER; BROUGHT $125,804

Highest Prices of the Sale Were Obtained Yesterday Afternoon.

A VASE WENT FOR $3,000

Princeton Club Bought Many of the Interior Decorations — Society Well Represented Among Buyers.

The last of the furniture and household decorations which belonged to the late Stanford White were disposed of yesterday afternoon, the last day of the sale. More well-known persons were present, and the largest articles in the collection were sold and brought the highest prices so far received. The total returns for the day were $77,985.50, with a total for the entire sale of $125,804.50.

It has been a successful sale with a continued high average of prices. The Princeton Club, which has leased the building, bought a number of things, parts of the decorations of the house, as well as furniture. Mantel pieces, marble columns, &c., will thus stay in place with a saving of expense. Other purchasers of interior decorations must remove them at their own risk and the cost will be considerable. It will cost between $200 and $300 to remove the decorated ceilings which the club did not buy.

The elaborate antique painted wood ceiling of the drawing room went to W. R. Hearst for $3,000. There is a large central painted panel to this, "Angels Bringing Tidings of Christ's Birth," with a circular frame. On the outside are four shields and four painted female heads, and this is incased in a square red and gold frame, and beyond are eight painted panels of Biblical subjects. An antique Italian dome ceiling in the bay window of the same room also went to Mr. Hearst for $275.

Something that, to the uninitiated seemed to bring an extravagant price was the antique cardinal red Genoese velvet on the walls of the drawing room, which went to C. A. Platt for $1,125. The narrow strips of this velvet were joined with dull gold galloon, which went with the velvet. This latter showed its antiquity in its threadbare effect, but it is a rare commodity, and it was estimated that there were 114 yards of it on the walls.

"It is very difficult now to get this velvet," said Mr. Kirby, "and the last that I sold brought $35 a yard. It is doubtful if it could be found now for less than $45. At the lower price this would be worth nearly $2,000."

The Italian Renaissance ceiling in the dining room went to Howard Greenley, the architect, for a customer. Mr. Greenley also bought two antique Corinthian turned columns, 10 feet tall, for $520 each, and a seventeenth century Italian escritoire for $850.

Princeton Club Purchases.

The Princeton Club bought the beautiful and elaborate Italian Renaissance mantel and over-mantel in the dining room with the large cast iron fireplace. A persistent competitor sent this up to $2,056. Two antique red Verona marble columns, with elaborate capitals, opposite the fireplace, went also to the club for $210 each, and for the marble mantel and fireplace, Italian Renaissance, in the lower entrance hall, they paid $475. The elaborate carved Caen stone Henry II. mantel in the picture gallery also went to them for $1,100.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art was again a purchaser and paid $1,100 for the elaborate baroque, Spanish carved and gilded doorway with the iron gate in the picture gallery.

Tapestries brought the highest prices of the afternoon. A grand Gobelin tapestry, 15 feet by 19 feet, went to George C. Whaley for $10,500. It was of the seventeenth century. A series of four Italian Renaissance tapestries, done in Raphaelesque manner, which hung in the dining room, brought over $2,000 each. The largest, 11 by 17 feet, went to C. I. Hudson for $5,100; the second, 11 by 8 feet, to an agent for the purchaser for $3,600; the third, 11 by 8, to "Walters" for $3,200, and the fourth to Col. S. Pomroy Colt for $2,300. This was 11.5 by 7 feet. Col. Colt was one of the larger buyers of the afternoon and also paid the lowest price. This was for a rubber plant standing in the lower entrance hall. From his connection with the rubber trust the plant appealed to him, he said.

"I couldn't resist that," he declared, and it was knocked down to him for $6.

Among the interesting things which went to Col. Colt was one lot of tiles inserted in the walls at the entrance to the picture gallery. They were sold in four lots, one with 143 tiles going for $450. Stanford White, it was said, bought an entire mosque in Constantinople to obtain these tiles. Mr. Belasco bought 63 of them for $190.

Other purchases of Col. Colt's were a large Empire side table for $1,250 and four small console tables to match for $80 each. He bought two antique Corinthian columns for $500 each; a large mounted buffalo head, in fine condition, for $500; an antique marble Hercules for $225, and other things.

$3,000 for a Greek Vase.

A first century Greek marble vase was one of the important articles of the sale. It was 53 inches in height by 36 in breadth, including the handles, and went to W. Andrews for $3,000.

For half a dozen of the articles sold the would-be purchasers were sent outside to take a view of them and returned to bid. One of these was a mammoth old Japanese lantern, 80 inches by 64, of bronze, set up in Gramercy Park. It was only suitable for certain places, and brought only $180. Other things which were at the front and sides of the house outside brought even lower prices. An Italian carved stone font went to I. N. P. Stokes for $25; another font went to the same buyer for $30, and an Italian carved marble well curb brought a better price, $320.

While the prices were generally remarkably good for an auction sale and some things brought unreasonably high prices, it was said by people who knew Mr. White that he was a man who paid well for things himself and there was not much increase on what he had given originally.

Most of the well-known people who attended the other sales were present yesterday.

Among the new-comers were Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. C. B. Alexander and daughter, Miss Whitney, Miss Cutting, Mrs. C. Vantine Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Newbold, Mrs. W. G. Oakman, Edson Bradley, Miss S. C. Hewitt, Mrs. George T. Bliss, James Lounsbury, Capt. Lydig, George Bliss Agnew, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Brokaw, Mrs. James Brown, Mrs. Stephen Brown, Mrs. Edward Van Ingen, Miss Louise Cheney, Miss Bliss, Mrs. Grenville Emmet, Mrs. W. E. Hoag, Col. Wilson, and the Rev. F. J. C. Moran.

The sale of the pictures of the White estate will take place on Thursday and Friday evenings of this coming week at Mendelssohn Hall.

TEXAS DROPS RAILROAD TAX.

Compromise Reached with the Corporations After a Hard Fight.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, Texas, April 6.—Railroads of Texas have saved themselves $4,000,000 a year by effecting a compromise with the State whereby the 3 per cent. tax on gross earnings will not be imposed. In return the railroads will accept the intangible property tax against corporations, and withdrew their suit against it from the Supreme Court.

Blind Man Caught Thief by His Voice.

John Dorsett, a blind newsman in Yonkers, was robbed on Thursday night of considerable money by Maurice Cohen, a boy living at 39 Clinton Street. Dorsett was in his newsstand in Main Street, when a customer paid him a bill. Cohen, it is alleged, took the bill from the blind man's pocket. The detectives arrested Cohen, the newsman identifying him by his voice. Cohen pleaded guilty.

BUGHER'S EVENTFUL TRIP.

All Sorts of Things Happened on a Ride He Took Uptown.

Deputy Police Commissioner Bugher, accompanied by his secretary, L. S. Wellborn, was on his way in his automobile to the Central Park Police Station yesterday afternoon, when he noticed a crowd about a trolley car and a wrecked carriage at Fourth Avenue and Sixteenth Street. The Deputy Commissioner learned that Mrs. Marcus Brown of 78 Second Avenue, her daughter Alice, and two friends had been in the vehicle. The driver, Philip Lipschitz, said that the car had hit his carriage.

There was no policeman in sight, and Mr. Bugher directed his chauffeur, Policeman Leitch, to detain the motorman, William Arnold, until a policeman could be found to go with him to the car barn.

A second motorman started to run Arnold's car, and according to Leitch tried to run him down. When the policeman tried to arrest him the motorman attacked him, and the men were still fighting on the pavement when several policemen responded to the blasts which Mr. Bugher had been blowing upon his whistle.

Leitch's opponent, who said he was George Meyer of 154 East 103d Street, was taken to the East Twenty-second Street Station, charged by Leitch with assault. Arnold, too, was locked up charged with carelessnesa in operating his car.

In the meantime Martin Young of 903 Sixth Avenue, had tried to board Arnold's car, and, according to Mr. Bugher, was pushed from the platform by Conductor Samuel Stern. Mr. Bugher called another policeman and Stern, too, was taken to the station charged with disorderly conduct.

EIGHT KILLED IN WRECK.

Aocident on the Southern Railway Near Mableton, Ga.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 6.—A special to The Constitution from Mableton, Ga., says a disastrous wreck occurred on the Southern Railway about one and a half miles from that place to-night, by which eight or more negroes were killed and twelve or fifteen injured, several probably fatally.

At 8 o'clock eight bodies had been recovered and it is believed more are under the wreckage. An open switch is reported to have caused the wreck, allowing a west-bound freight to crash into another freight train standing on the main track.

SOUNDED LIKE A FIRE GONG,

And the Sick Fire Horses When They Heard It Couldn't Go Slow.

Two fire horses, out of the hospital for a little walk, yielded to the impulse to run at the clang of a bell yesterday afternoon and ran so fast that the driver could not hold them any longer.

The horses were hitched to a light hose-cart. Christopher Sullivan was taking them out for a little exercise from the Horse Hospital, at 133 West Ninety-ninth Street.

Just as he was gulding the team through Ninety-ninth Street toward the Park, a Madison Avenue car, with the conductor ringing the bell, passed behind him. The horses pricked up their ears and bolted. In vain did Sullivan try to hold them.

At 100th Street Sullivan was thrown off. At 114th Street the runaways were caught.

When Battalion Chief Shea heard of the runaway he immediately ordered the horses back to duty.

"Horses that are well enough to run away are well enough to work," said he.

Subway Expresses to Dyckman Street.

The Interborough Rapid Transit Company announced yesterday that beginning to-morrow the Subway express trains of the Broadway division that have heretofore gone only as far as 168th Street, will be run to Dyckman Street, the second station beyond. The change was made, a representative of the company said, because the traffic to both Dyckman Street and 181st Street is steadily becoming heavier, and there is an important trolley connection at the latter stop. The new arrangement will give both stations the benefit of 40 per cent. more trains.

OFFERS $10,000,000 FOR AN ART GALLERY

P. A. B. Widener Would Make Philadelphia a Big Art Centre.

WILL GIVE HIS PAINTINGS

John G. Johnson and Other Collectors Probably Will Aid the Project—City to Furnish Site.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—P. A. B. Widener has made application to Mayor Reyburn for permission to erect a $10,000,000 municipal art gallery on the Parkway, and with other art lovers to store it with private collections and copies of famous paintings.

Mayor Reyburn said to-day that the city was about to see the realization of its much-talked-of art gallery. He had just come from an interview with Mr. Widener, in which the proposition had been made to build a gallery at a cost of $10,000,000, provided the city would furnish a suitable site on the proposed Parkway.

This project has been under discussion for some time. According to Mayor Reyburn, Mr. Widener has not only offered to erect a building, but to donate his own large collection and to obtain for the gallery copies of the world's famous canvases. The select paintings of the Gibson collection and all the pictures that have been collected by John G. Johnson, E. Burgess Warren, and E. T. Stotesbury, according to Mayor Reyburn, eventually will find their way into the gallery.

"Mr. Widener is very anxious to give the city an art gallery which will be the greatest in this country," said the Mayor. "He will erect a magnificent building provided the city furnish the site. I see no reason why the plan should not be successful.

"The Spring Garden reservoir will be abandoned soon and its site would be the most desirable along the Parkway for such a building.

"There is no reason why the Academy of the Fine Arts should not take a portion of the building and make the gallery the centre of Philadelphia art. The academy building is in the centre of the city and a good price could be obtaind for it. I hope to bring about a consolidation of the two projects, and in the next two years Philadelphia may have the greatest art school and gallery in the United States."

J. E. D. Trask, Secretary of the Academy of Fine Arts, said he did not believe that the academy, which is more than 100 years old, and has a splendid organization, would consent to abandon its work by permitting its collection to be merged with others, and thereby placed under the direction of outsiders.

One artist said that if the city went to the Academy of Fine Arts proposing to erect a two-million-dollar gallery and asked the academy management to conduct the enlarged institution, it is extremely likely that consent could easily be obtained. In the enlarged plan provision could and would, he said, be made for the Widener and Johnson collections, together with any others which owners desired to present to the city.

Baltusrol Club's Taxes Cut.

The appeal of Louis Keller, owner of the Baltusrol Golf Club property at Short Hills, N. J., against the township of Springfield, from the assessment on the golf links and surrounding property owned by Mr. Keller, resulted yesterday in a reduction of the assessment appealed from to $72,150.

Dinner of Tiffany Salesmen.

The Eighteen Karat Club, composed of the salesmen of Tiffany & Co., held its eighth annual dinner in the wine vaults of the Hotel Astor last evening. H. H. Treadwell, who retires from the Presidency after seven years in office, was toastmaster. There were about eighty salesmen present, and the evening was given up to song and merrymaking.

A BOOK NAPOLEON USED.

Volume Supposedly from His Library Found in California.

Special to The New York Times.

BERKELEY, Cal., April 6.—A discovery calculated to arouse interest among collectors of rare books and objects of historical value has been made in the mathematics alcove at the library of the University of California. One of the students has found a book on algebra which he and others believe was used by Napoleon when he was a prisoner on the Island of St. Helena. An effort is now being made to find out, if possible, the meaning of a seal which appears on the title page of the book. It is believed to be a mark used by Napoleon for his library.

The book has been in the university library for several years, but for some reason little attention has been paid to it as a relic. It was the gift of Andrew Smith Hallidie, a Regent of the University, who died in 1901, and came to the library after his estate had been settled. How the volume got into Mr. Hallidie's hands is not known here, but it is conjectured that it formed part of a lot of books sent to him by relatives who lived in England. It may, however, have been purchased by Mr. Hallidie, who was an enthusiastic collector.

The seal was not printed legibly, and the characters on it are hard to decipher unless one has an idea as to what is to be found. On the inside of the cover there is written in pencil, but apparently the work of years ago:

"This was one of the vols. that formed Bonaparte's library at St. Helena."

On the next page, in a curious mixture of French and English is this:

"Bonaparte's library. Islande de St. Helene."

On the title page is a third note, also in pencil:

"This book belonged to Napoleon Bonaparte."

Whether or not the book was used by Napoleon while he was a prisoner, it certainly could have been, as far as the age of the volume is concerned. It was printed in 1812, the name of the publisher being Mme. Vc. Courcier, quai des Augustins, No. 57. Translated, the title of the volume is "A course in mathematics for the use of the navy and artillery, by Bezout; third part, containing algebra and its application to geometry, with explanatory notes by A.—A.—L. Reynaud."

The book is bound in leather of a costly sort. The state of preservation of the volume is a fine tribute to the way in which books were bound a century ago.

OPPOSES NAMING HUNDLEY.

Senator Pettus Says He Is Not Fitted for the Federal Bench.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Senator Pettus of Alabama lodged a protest to-day with the President against the appointment of Oscar R. Hundley to the Federal bench in that State. After seeing the President the Senator said that he did not regard Mr. Hundley as fit for the place, and that nine-tenths of the men of his own party were against him.

Hundley's appointment has not been formally announced at the White House, but it is understood that the President has practically made up his mind to appoint him.

Knipe Must Pay $4,250 for Slander.

A jury before Supreme Court Justice Msrean, in Brooklyn, awarded a verdict of $4,250 yesterday against Police Captain William Knipe in the action brought by Byde Morton to recover $25,000 for slander. The plaintiff complained that on the night of July 4, 1906, Capt. Knipe, then in command of the Herbert Street Station, stated in the presence of several of her friends that she had a bad reputation, and that she and her kind were not wanted in the neighborhood.

Knipe pleaded justification.

Unions to Try Co-operative Building.

A co-operative building association, incorporated under the laws of this State, has been formed by members of the local unions of carpenters in this city. It was announced yesterday that the association has selected these officers: Andrew McCurdy, Local 715, President; Charles H. Bauscher, Local 478, Vice President; Joseph Platz, Local 34, Secretary Treasurer.

HARVARD STUDENT HELD AS BURGLAR

Rowe Says He Dined Too Well, Then Took Friends' Diamonds.

HE GIVES BACK ONE STUD

Friends Believe His Declaration That It Was Merely a Prank—Father a Merchant.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 6.—Percival W. Rowe, a Harvard freshman, son of a well-to-do merchant in Valati, N. Y., was held in bonds of $1,000 to-day to answer April 12 to charges of burglary brought against him by a colored porter in Hastings Dormitory, at the university. The specific charge against Rowe is that of entering the room of Hamilton and Preston T. Large, 57 Hastings Hall, last Tuesday evening, and the larceny of a pair of diamond shirt studs.

The police were informed of the matter by the porter, and a watch was kept all day yesterday over Rowe's room. It was late last night before he returned. He was immediately taken to Police Headquarters. Rowe admitttd that he entered Large's room, but asserted that he went there to haze Large, who was a friend of his. He found both the brothers out, and took the diamond shirt studs, as he feared they would be lost.

"The whole affair," said Rowe in court to-day, "was a prank after I had dined at the freshman banquet at the American House last Monday night. I came back to the dormitory and got into the room of Hamilton and Prescott T. Large, who are my friends. I took two diamond studs and a meerschaum pipe from the room. I was discovered there by a colored porter whom I had reprimanded in the past. He took this chance of getting even with me.

"The boys in whose room I was found will not prosecute me. I have already given back one of the studs. I would give back the other and the pipe if I knew where they were. My father keeps me supplied with as much money as I need, and there was no necessity for me to steal anything. Nothing of the sort would have happened had I not dined too well.

"I went to Union College and to Princeton before coming to Harvard, and had no trouble of any sort in either school. I had never had any trouble here until this thing came up."

Rowe's relatives were notified of his plight to-day, and sureties were furnished by persons here. His friends at Harvard accept his explanation and think that he will get out of the present scrape.

SALOON MEN BETWEEN FIRES.

Rumors of Raids May Mean Levy by Police—Churchmen Plan Action.

The liquor dealers of the upper west side of town heard last night that Magistrate Whitman and several active prohibitionists were going out on the warpath at midnight for the purpose of raiding Raines law hotels. The result was that in the precincts of the upper west side the patrons of saloons were turned into the streets promptly at midnight and the doors locked against strangers.

Of course there was much grumbling in consequence, and many of the persons turned out of the saloons declared that it looked like a game of forcing the liquor dealers to contribute to a legislative fund. They said that the time was near when the liquor dealers of the entire city would be put into a political vise for the purpose of squeezing money out of them, and that the money thus obtained was to be used in Albany.

At any rate the liquor dealers were thoroughly scared. One of them said he had received information to the effect that an attempt would be made to fool them by first spreading a rumor that the raiding was to be done early this morning, and then holding off on the raids until to-night. They said there was no doubt as to the truth of the story that plans had been drawn by somebody in authority who intended to collect evidence against violators of the liquor tax law this Sunday, but the majority of the liquor dealers thought the raiding would not come along until to-night.

Another story was to the effect that a crusade against the saloon men of Brooklyn was to be made to-day by certain churchmen and ministers, who had plannned to collect evidence quietly and without arousing suspicion, and then present this evidence to the Kings County Grand Jury with a view to indicting the saloon keepers. A petition, it was said, would then be presented to the authorities asking for the cancellation of the liquor tax certificates of certain saloon keepers, and behind it all the churchmen, it was said, would depend on getting the aid of Gov. Hughes in their fight.

SAD AWAKENING AWAITS FORAKER

Roosevelt Magic Has Crumbled the Pillars of the Mighty Hanna Machine.

ALL SIGNS POINT TO TAFT

When the Senior Ohio Senator Gets Back Home He Will Find His Strongholds in Enemies Hands.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 6.—There are two eminent citizens of Ohio wo do not know anything about the sentiment of their own State. One of them is Joseph B. Foraker, and the other is Charles Dick. When Foraker comes out to Cincinnati and Dick to Akron next week they are going to learn things. They have been sitting back there in Washington, talking to each other and everybody else about the strength of the old Hanna machine and their own hold on the organization, and about how nobody could break in.

While they were doing it they were being undermined in Ohio from the Western Reserve to the Ohio River, and they did not know it. Any confiding newspaper correspondent who goes to Foraker and seeks from him information about the political status of Ohio is simply wasting his time; he might as well ask the nearest peanut stand man. It is a sad awakening that is going to come to Foraker when he gets out here next week. He is going to find that men on which he counted are against him; that counties and districts which he believed to be absolutely safe are honeycombed with Taft sentiment, and that he cannot trust his neighbor or his dearest friend. Dick knows almost as little about it as Foraker, but he knows a little more. He has been hearing from his friends. Men who are for Dick without reservation have been urging him to forsake Foraker. They have not moved him, but they have given him an idea of the size of the Taft sentiment in the State. He is not so hopeless a proposition as his colleague and boss.

The Foraker Men's Hope.

The only hope that the old-line Foraker men here have is in Foraker's personality. That has carried him through many a desperate fight. They are hoping that when he gets here he will let down his back hair and rip the plan of creation. Past performances lend hope. If Foraker can do that his men say he may yet win out. His enemies scoff at the idea, and say that Foraker has emptied his sleeve and has nothing to produce.

Right in Cuyahoga County the Foraker game is as hopeless as anything can be. There are plenty of politicians here who hung out with Mark Hanna and btlong to the old Hanna organization, and every one of these men ought to be counted for Dick f not for Foraker.

But every man of them is for Roosevelt. The old Hanna band wagon is a Roosevelt band wagon now. That is whert the fatal weakness of the anti-Taft fght comes in. Nobody dares to huck the President. The County Chairmen are all of them afraid of their lives. Many of them would like to be for Foraker, but shrink at the mention of the big stick. The all-pervading personality n the White House which throws its shadow over everything from baseball to race suicide, throws a dark and deep shadow over Ohio politics.

Taft--everybody likes Taft. Everybody respects him, too, and yet Taft alone could not break into one side of the Ohio machine. He threatens to wreck it, and probably will, but it is because back of him stands the menacing and powerful figure in the White House.

The Fight by Districts.

Take Ohio by districts. Foraker ought to have the First and Second without question, and yet they are openly claimed by the Taft men, and the enemy do not dispute the claim. In the Third every Republican newspaper is for Taft, and Chairman Dieser of Montgomery County has swung the organization for him. The Fourth is a Democratic district, where the Senators have all the patronage, and yet insurgents are appearing there daily, and every one of them is a man of consequence. The Fifth is honeycombed with Taft men. The Sixth, in the southern part, is Foraker's, but even there the Taft men are putting up a fight. The Seventh is Keifer's, and Keifer is on the fence, but Clarke County, which is the principal county in the district, is for Taft and will swing the district.

The Eighth and Ninth send in encouraging Taft reports. The Tenth is for Foraker. The Eleventh, the old Grosvenor district, is for Taft, and Grosvenor's successor, Representative Douglass, has declared for him. In the Twelfth, Congressman Taylor has come out for Taft in a public declaration, the Columbus papers are for Taft, and there is no question about his having the delegates. In the Thirteenth, once the banner Democratic district of the State, Congressman Mouser, who redeemed it from Democratic control and whose word is law, is for Taft.

In the Fourteenth some of the leading papers are for Taft and some for Foraker, but Congressman Laning is for the Secretary, and the Foraker people have hardly any hopes of the district. The Fifteenth is counted as a Foraker district, and yet Morgan County is in that district, and Morgan County, as already mentioned in these dispatches, was the first county in the State whose committee came out openly, unreservedly, and flatfootedly for Taft. The action of the Morgan County Committee is of the highest significance, for it shows that Foraker cannot count even on the counties that are conceded to him by the Taft men.

The Sixteenth was long known as a typical machine district, but last year it fought Dick and Foraker at the Dayton Convention, and Dick Gilson, the Republican leader, is for Taft. When he took his delegation up to the State Convention last year some one said to him:

"How is this? I thought you and your folks in the Sixteenth were organization."

"We are Hanna men," replied Gilson, "but not Foraker men."

Which accounts for a lot. The Hanna old guard fought Foraker all their lives, and have never been reconciled to Dick's action in turning the machine over to their traditional enemy.

The Seventeenth District may be doubtful. In the Eighteenth Congressman Kennedy, watching to see how the cat jumps, has declared for Taft for President and Foraker for Senator. In the Nineteenth a Ravenna paper collected interviews a few days ago and got one Foraker expression against an otherwise unanimous Taft declaration. The Twentieth and Twenty-first are Cleveland districts, and it is needless to say that they will be unanimously for Taft in the convention.

It's What Roosevelt Wants.

That is what Foraker is up against. When he gets down here he will get red in the face and throw his mane of white hair over his forehead and tear the foundations loose. It is the old Foraker method, the only one he knows, the only game he can play. On the stump Foraker is a wonder. He can make men forsake their families and their homes and their political principles and their bank accounts and anything else of value. He is a wizard and a hypnotist.

And yet the saddest commentary on the fallen state of the organization in Ohio is the fact, the undoubted and indubitable fact, that the sole hope of the machine rests in Foraker's ability to do this. They count on his Canton speech, and on nothing else. They do not hope to be able to undermine and counterblast the work of the Taft men here, although they say they do. All they hope is that Foraker may be able to make some of his old-time speeches and stampede the crowds.

When the President of the United States started his series of talks from the White House about the "rich men's conspiracy" he probably knew that he was helping Taft, but whether he knew it or not, he was. The people are for Roosevelt. All they want to know is how he stands. If he is for Taft, they are for Taft. If he thinks Foraker is part of a rich men's conspiracy to dominate the National Convention, they think so too. Nothing that Foraker can say will have any effect in removing that impression. He frittered away his chance to do anything like that when he bunkoed the State at the Dayton Convention last year by making it believe that he was not really against Roosevelt. The State found him out and will not believe him again—at least, not when his word is matched against Roosevelt's.

There is one element of weakness in the Taft canvass, and only one. That is the ambition of Theodore E. Burton of this town to succeed Foraker in the Senate. If Burton could be induced to take his Senatorial boom out of the way nothing could stop the progress of the Taft movement. It is doubtful if anything can stop it, anyway, because the word has been quietly passed around that Taft and Burton are not tied up and Taft's success will not necessarily mean that of Burton. It may be supposed that the passing around of such information would tend to alienate the Burton men, but that is not the fact; Cleveland has got to be for Taft, and if Burton became lukewarm it would not do him any good.

Doctors Against Foraker.

The stars in their courses fight against Foraker. He has developed a wonderful talent for alienating an extraordinary lot of people who under most circumstances do not bother with politics at all. For instance, the doctors are against him. The Ohio Medical Society is about as active and bloodthirsty an element as there is in the combination that is hunting for Foraker's scalp. The tale whereof is curious. Arthur Foraker, the Senator's boy, suffered for years from a disease of the breastbone, and his father tried doctor after doctor without avail. Finally he went to an osteopath, and whether the osetopath made the cure or the boy had outgrown the disease, he got over it and the cure was attributed to the osteopath.

Thereupon Foraker became a rampant advocate of osteopathy. He went to the Legislature and lobbied for bills designed to give the osteopaths a standing, and Foraker's word has been potent with Legislatures. He even worked with Congress in the osteopathic interest. Doctors hate osteopathy worse than original sin, and began reprisals on Foraker. Foraker, as his nature and custom is, hit back at the doctors. The result is that there is probably not a doctor in the State who is not working overtime and after hours to beat Foraker, and the influence of a doctor, particularly a country doctor, is not to be despised.

Then, too, Foraker has angered the shippers. There are two big shippers' organizations in this State, one known as the Ohio Shippers' Association and the other as the Ohio Grain Shippers' Association. Both of them are out after Foraker's scalp and hide. The reason is that Fornker was the only Republican in the Senate—in fact, the only man in the Senate aside from Morgan and Pettus, the irreconcilable and unreconstructed followers of Jefferson Davis, who never vote without singing "Dixie"—to vote against the Railroad Rate bill.

To-night the story comes that the independent watch manufacturers of Ohio are out after Foraker because he promised to help them in their campaign against the Watch Trust, an Eastern organization, and then deserted them. Some of them have been in Washington in tow of Congressman Kennedy, trying to get the Department of Justice to proceed against the trust. They lay their ill-success to Foraker and announce their purpose to get his pelt.

All Sincere Enemies.

It is a difficult matter for any one man, any mere ordinary human being without special gifts from Providence, to make so many enemies in the course of a short lifetime of sixty years as Foraker seems to have made without the slightest effort. They are all sincere enemies, too, people who show no disposition to be satisfied with anything short of Foraker's hair, hide, and bones. The fact is that Foraker would be grass high in Ohio but for Dick.

All over the country the impression has gone abroad that Ohio is against Taft; that the machine controls. It is a mistake. The machine controlled when Mark Hanna ran it, but it has been steadily weakening ever since, and it controls no longer. Dick is a weak man, and Foraker never did have any ability at organization. His political successes are due solely to his talent for stampedes. There is going to be a new organization; there will have to be, for a State like Ohio, where there is ten pounds of politics to every cubic inch, can't get along without an organization. But it is going to be a new organization, and if a man had to predict the name of its chief in a hurry on pain of death he would give the name of Insurance Commissioner Vorys.

In the meanwhile, and aside from these gazes into the future, Ohio is for Taft.

BROKERS BET HIGH IN RAIDED ROOMS

Wall Street Men at John Doe Hearing Tell of Accounts with Syndicate.

JEROME AFTER "SEN. G."

Latter and a Big Politician Interested in Racing Likely to be Enmeshed.

It was learned yesterday from an authoritative source that District Attorney Jerome already has information enough to warrant the arrest of four men directly or indirectly connected with the downtown poolroom syndicate. The warrants will probably be issued and served this week. Two of the men will be pretty well indicated by the way in which they are indicated in the syndicate's ledgers, namely, "R. H. D." and "J. P. R." The other two are Thomas R. Keator, the alleged proprietor of the Broadway establishment, and Edward A. Fisher, the ostensible manager of the syndicate. They are already under bail on other charges.

A mass of evidence has also been piled up against the star man of the group, who has been repeatedly referred to as "T. G.," "Sen. G.," T. Grady, and "Tommy," and also against the men known as "C. R." and "M. J. R." The trouble with the information regarding these latter three is that some of it is barred by the Statute of Limitations, but by no means all of it. The check recently spoken of as having been cashed for "Sen. G." is well within the statute.

The John Doe proceedings which were continued yesterday morning in the Criminal Court Building before Magistrate Barlow resulted in some interesting disclosures regarding two of the men who passed into the secret hearing. One of them was a man whose name, it was learned, is G. G. Pickens, a broker. He was called into the hearing because among the bunch of checks picked up in the raid at 157 Cedar Street, signed by W. D. Miller & Co., appeared about $150,000 worth made out to him. They extended over a period of several years as to dates.

Placed Bets for Wall Street Friends.

Pickens explained that he merely acted as a commissioner in the matter of placing bets for several Wall Street friends. He had been in the habit, as he explained, of going to the races himself, when he had learned that through Miller & Co. and through Fisher personally he could place bets without making the trip—they had direct wires to the races, as he was informed. He said that he did not consider that the men were committing a crime, as he understood that they were merely acting as agents for others.

Another well-dressed man who entered the hearing room told practically the same story. His name could not be learned. He is a Wall-Street broker, and said that he had acted as a commissioner for several Wall Street men. He, too, explained that he had an idea that the syndicate had a perfect right to act as agents for the men who actually got the race news from the track. He asked to be permitted to see his friends before he revealed their names, which was granted.

The John Doe proceedings will again be resumed this week. Mr. Jerome will himself take a hand in the investigations, possibly as soon as Thursday next. His efforts will be directed mainly toward getting at the big fish, chief among them "Sen. G.," and the others in the syndicate, who reaped the big reward, as the books show. Some more raids may result, according to the predictions. Mr. Jerome's efforts will, however, be greatly directed toward sifting out and arranging the great stacks of evidence which he already has. That this may be thoroughly and properly done, he will call an expert accountant to his aid.

After a Big Politician.

That before the District Attorney gets through with the investigations, it has been repeatedly hinted, he may extend his efforts to a wider field of poolroom activity, is possible, because some of the evidence which he has concerning the downtown syndicate interlaces a little. Before Mr. Jerome shall finish his work, it was said yesterday, a man high in politics in this city and in the racing game may be reached. Before they get to that feature of the work, however, both the District Attorney as well as Mr. Vandiver will concentrate their efforts upon the downtown group.

The Grand Jury meets again on Thursday, and by that time it is probable that much of the evidence which will have been collected will be placed before that body, for there is hardly any doubt that Magistrate Barlow will consider it sufficient to go ahead with the cases. A number of true bills against important personages is expected.

Several of the prominent men who have been been mentioned are scheduled to appear at the first three days session of the John Doe proceedings this week. The District Attorney and Mr. Vandiver both have expressed themselves as of the opinion that they will give what aid they can in the way of telling of their transactions with the syndicate or individual members and employes of it.

CITY LAW OFFICE NOW REORGANIZED

Changes Instituted by Ellison Have Greatly Expedited Business.

THE WORK DEPARTMENTIZED

Office Now Handling One-third More Cases Than Ever Before — Correspondence Cleared Up.

Corporation Counsel Ellison's recent activity in the Bureau for the Collection of Arrears of Personal Taxes has called particular attention to his department of the city administration and to the changes that have taken place in the Corporation Counsel's office since his advent. It has been the subject of comment from the bench that the Corporation Counsel's office is now more up to date in its work than ever before.

One of the chief reasons for this, according to Mr. Ellison himself, is that the whole office has been divided into departments with a regularly assigned head and a full staff of officials and minor employes sufficient for the most part to carry on the work assigned to that division. Previously the work was done as it came up, each assistant being given a special piece of work, and, after that was concluded, being put to work on something probably of a totally different character.

The main office division now has two assistants who help Mr. Ellison with the affairs of greatest importance. There is, next in order, the division of appeals, presided over by Theodore Connoly, and having four other assistants in it. Then comes the division for real estate matters and condemnation proceedings affecting lands within the city, and then a special division for similar matters affecting land outside the city limits.

These are the other departments in Manhattan under the new arrangement: Division of Taxes, Division of Franchises, Division of Legislation and Elections, Division for Contract Litigation, Division for Actions in Tort, Division for Affirmative Actions, Divison for the Mayor's Office, Division for Board of Education, Division for Civil Service Matters, Division for Preparation and Approval as to Form of Documents, and Division for Miscellaneous Business.

In addition to these, there is the Chief Clerk's office, with its regular apportionment of clerks, stenographers, and office boys to attend to the routine business of the office. Then there is the Brooklyn Branch office, with James D. Bell in charge and a staff of assistants, clerks, and stenographers; the Bureau of Street Openings, the affairs of which necessitate the labors of a large staff; the Bureau of Penalties; the recently organized Bureau for the Collection of Arrears of Personal Taxes, and the Tenement House Division and Building Bureau Branch office.

Mr. Ellison's first work on taking charge of his office was to have the unanswered correspondence looked up and attended to at once. He found that there were letters in the office, asking for legal opinions, which were a year old. A list of these communications was prepared and submitted to him, together with a list of the assistants to whom the letters had been referred in the first place. He segregated the correspondence at once and put his assistants to work, with the result that the correspondence was brought up to date in short order. It is now the rule that a transcript of the correspondence book containing every letter that asks for an opinion shall be submitted to him personally every day, and the unanswered correspondence is cleared up and attended to every month regularly.

Another important item that Mr. Ellison took up soon after his advent into the Corporation Counsel's office was the recovery of moneys due the city. He found that suits had been begun to recover only a part of these moneys, and that even these suits had not been prosecuted. Car license fees and paving by street railway companies and many other matters of a similar nature came in this category, and to the work of rectifying the mistakes and abuses that had occurred in connection with these matters Mr. Ellison assigned Mr. Pierce, a personal friend, who has just been put in charge of the Bureau for the Collection of Arrears of Personal Taxes. As a result of his work large sums have been paid into the Treasury on account by the franchise-holding companies, and the suits for the recovery of the full amount are progressing as rapidly as the law allows.

An investigation of the franchise rights of the surface railroads was another thing that Mr. Ellison instigated soon after he took charge. As a result of the work of the Corporation Counsel's office along this line, the New York City Railway Company was compelled to ask for a franchise on 145th Street, where it had been operating without any legal right, and the same company, through Theodore P. Shonts, was brought to a position where it declared itself willing to remove the superfluous tracks on Amsterdam Avenue. Mr. Ellison presided at the first meeting held in the city to protest against putting four tracks on Amesterdam Avenue. This was before he entered public life.

Contesting the claims of the electric lighting and gas companies in Manhattan and Brooklyn and obtaining an adjustment on a satisfactory basis, especially in Brooklyn, was another move of Mr. Ellison's. Next week the claims of the Consolidated Gas Company, aggregating $4,000,000, will be taken up, and it is expected that they will be so adjusted almost immediately as to permit the city to pay all of its bills, barring the amount in dispute, thus avoiding the payment of interest charges. The office is said to be handling one-third more cases than ever before.

PETERS GIVES A LUNCHEON.

President of Long Island Road Entertains 30 Members of His Staff.

President Ralph Peters celebrated the completion of his second year as the head of the Long Island Railway by giving a luncheon yesterday at the Café des Beaux Arts to thirty members of his staff.

Before Mr. Peters came to his present position he was General Superintendent of the Pennsylvania lines' Southwest system. Within the last two years about $15,000,000 has been spent on improvements for the Long Island Road under his direction. Several miles of the road are now operated by electricity, and the further electrification of a still greater part of it is projected.

Since Mr. Peters took charge the number of passengers carried increased from 18,800,000 to 21,500,000. The quantity of freight carried was 2,400,000 tons in 1904 and 2,900,000 tons in 1906.

Gross earnings increased proportionately, but the net showing is not so marked on account of increased cost of labor and material. With its short haul, commutation business and expensive facilities, its operations are costly.

Alpha Delta Phi Convention.

The seventy-fifth annual convention of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity will be held in this city April 17-20, at the Hotel Astor. A reception to the Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale will be given on Thursday afternoon, April 18, and a theatre party is planned. The convention dinner will itake place on the evening of Friday, April 19, at the Hotel Astor. The new house of the Alpha Delta Phi Club of New York, in West Forty-fourth Street, will henceforth be the National headquarters of the fraternity.

THROWN FROM 5TH AV. STAGE.

Driver and Nine Passengers Spilled at 35th Street—Traffic Congested.

Driving rapidly down Fifth Avenue in a crush of home-going vehicles late yesterday afternoon, a heavily loaded stage of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company struck against a beam projecting from the framework around the excavation on the southwest corner of Thirty-fifth Street, just opposite Aitman's. The force of the shock threw the horses to the right against the temporary sidewalk, knocking them down and snapping the tongue. Michael Burke, the driver, was jerked over the dashboard and nine passengers, five of whom were young girls, were thrown from their seats on top of the stage and fell headlong between the kicking horses.

Burke fell on his right side. His head struck against the splintered pole and his ear was lacerated. None of the passengers allowed themselves to be taken to the hospital, though two of them were slightly dazed when members of the Traffic Squad extricated them from the tangle of harness.

There were many passengers inside the stage, but they escaped with a shaking up.

Mounted Policeman Fleischman saw the accident.

"When I looked," he said, "there was nothing but flying legs."

The accident caused great confusion among the vehicles. A line of carriages driving close behind the stage avoided crashing into it only by turning sharply to the left, directly in the path of carriages going up town. The narrowness of the avenue at this point, due to the projecting wooden sidewalk, made matters worse. Mounted Policemen Martin and Fleischman came from their posts at Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth Streets, and after fifteen minutes succeeded in straightening out the congested traffic, while Policemen McGorry and Byrne of the Traffic Squad directed the work of raising the fallen horses.

In response to a call turned in by an excited bystander, an ambulance came from the New York Hospital. With some difficulty Burke was persuaded to go to the hospital and have his ear sewed up.

Inspector Cullen of the coach company hurried to the scene and took charge of the stage until another driver and a new tongue could be procured from the company's stable on East Eighty-eighth Street.

SEES SON'S FRIEND KILLED.

Father Faints When His Boy Is Mangled by a Trolley Car.

A Jerome Avenue trolley car ran into a soda water wagon at 233d Street about 8 o'clock last night, killing one man and injuring the legs of another so badly that they had to be amputated.

The driver of the wagon was Albert Bernstein, son of Max Bernstein, who has a sida water business at Mount Vernon. Beside young Bernstein sat his friend, Frank Hellwig, also of Mount Vernon. When the crash came Hellwig was hurled under the wheels of the trolley car and instantly killed. Bernstein's legs were caught under the wagon, and the Fordham Hospital surgeons had to cut them off.

Behind the wagon was another wagon driven by Bernstein, Sr. When he saw his son go under the wagon and heard his scream he fell from his own wagon in a faint. He, too, was taken to the Fordham Hospital.

Judgment Reduced $100,000.

The Appellate Division has reversed a judgment obtained by the National Contracting Company against the Hudson River Water Power Company, unless the defendant company stipulates to modify the judgment by reducing the amount found due on a counter claim from $386,185 to $287,253. The action was brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract.

Los Angeles Limited to Resume.

The San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company announces that the damage caused by cloudbursts to its line in Nevada, which resulted in a washout, has been repaired, and that the Los Angeles Limited will resume its daily service between Chicago and Los Angeles on April 13.

FRIENDS TO AMEND THE UTILITIES BILL

Railways May Invest to Any Extent in Feeders and Extensions.

CITY'S BURDEN SMALLER

Salaries of Commissioners $17,500—Governor's Friends Hope to Speed the Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 6.—It is the plan of Gov. Hughes and his friends in the Legislature to obtain all possible speed in the consideration and passage of the Page-Merritt Public Utilities bill. Senator Page and Assemblyman Merritt are at work now getting into shape a number of minor amendments which were practically agreed upon at the public hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Railroads Committee of the Assembly last week. Many of these amendments are of a purely technical nature.

Some amendments will be made by the friends of the bill.

One is a provision to make the salary of the proposed Commissioners $17,500 instead of $10,000, as the bill at present provides.

Another is a provision to divide the cost for the maintenance of the Metropolitan Commission between the city and the State. The bil now provides that the City of New York must bear alone all the expense of the proposed commission for the metropolitan district, while all fines and forfeitures incurred by local transit companies for violations of the proposed public service law would be payable into the State Treasury. This amendment is clearly for the purpose of cutting the ground from under the feet of "home rule" enthusiasts of the Grady-McCarren kind.

A third is a provision modifying the clause prohibiting railroads from investing in the stock of other railroad companies operating in this State to the extent of more than 10 per cent. of their capital stock. The amendment will permit unlimited investment in the stock of railroad companies whose lines may serve as feeders and extensions.

These are the principal amendments to be made by the friends of the bill. They have either been asked for or concurred in by those who have appeared here at the public hearings as representatives of the transportation and lighting interests.

The Page-Merritt bill will be taken up for consideration in executive session by the two committees having it in hand next Wednesday. Up to that time briefs and suggestions for amendments will be received. That the railroads and lighting corporations will flood the committees with documentary arguments is certain. All these briefs will naturally have to be read and digested by the two committees.

The committee will be compelled to consider, also, public utilities bill emanating from various sources—notably from Senators Grady and McCarren. Both of them are members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and will be in a splendid position to see that their measures receive duo and worshipful consideration by the two committees.

All of which will add to what Senator McCarren the other day on the floor of the Senate termed the "galty notions." What principally worries the friends of the bill is that it will open the way for filibusters in the Senate, who will be swift to take advantage of any opening to emasculate the provisions of the bill or retard progress in its consideration.

With everything possible done to expedite matters, it is difficult to see how the two committees would be able to finish their work in less than two weeks. Another two will undoubtedly be required, even under the most favorable circumstances for the necessary procedure before the full Senate, and possibly more, inasmuch as the bill is likely to provike a long and bitter debate.

WOULD LIGHT LAKE GEORGE.

Persons Interested Fear Disasters with Lighthouses Lacking.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 6.—Residents on the shores of Lake George, through Senator Emerson and Assemblyman Waddell of Warren, have had introduced in the Legislature a hill providing for a $36,000 appropriation to establish a lighthouse service on that lake.

Lake George being entirely within the boundaries of the State, the Federal Government has neither responsibility nor jurisdiction in the matter. In a petition signed by 1,000 property owners residing on the shores of Lake George, many of whom are prominent New Yorkers with Summer cottages there, it is pointed out that the lake has not a single light.

"To show the difference of treatment that this commerce receives from the National Government, we have only to glance at Lake Champlain, but a few miles from Lake George. Here the United States Lighthouse Department has established fifteen lights in a distance of ahout twelve miles, because a creek is crooked. But its shores are not dangerous in the sense that the reefs of Lake George are dangerous. These shores of Whitehall Creek are nothing but alluvial deposit, soft and yielding if struck hy a vessel. On this creek there is hardly eny passenger traffic, only a few canalboats per day passing back and forth.

"The traffic upon Lake George has now assumed very large proportions. The submerged rocks in Lake George are perfect graveyards of broken propellers, rudders, and other parts of boats. The damage done in this manner annually amounts to many thousands of dollars. There have been several serious accidents accompanied by loss of life in years past upon Lake George, owing entirely to the absence of these aids to navigation, and that no further serious calamity has happened for the past eight years is only due to a kind Providence."

$5,000 SILVERWARE ROBBERY.

Burglars Evidently Drank David Thomson's Claret, Too.

Silverware worth more than $5,000 was stolen from the residence of David Thomson at 57 East Seventy-fifth Street early yesterday morning, and although county detectives and the East Sixty-seventh Street police are working on the case, they have been so far unable to get any trace of the burglars.

That the burglars took their time in looting the silver closets of Mr. Thomson, who is a lawyer, having offices at 141 Broadway, was shown clearly by the fact that two empty glasses were found on the dining room table. Near the glasses was an empty bottle, which had contained claret and another which had been filled with mineral water.

Mrs. Thomson said last night that she did not believe that the burglars were aided by any of her servants.

Man Who Shot Down Frank Drake Caught, but Will Tell Nothing.

THE TONG WAR RECALLED

Thousands of Chinamen Thought It Had Started Again — Police Drove Them Home.

Chinatown was thrown into a flutter when the report of a pistol shot echoed through Doyers Street early yesterday morning. Denizens of the dingy quarter dodged into hallways and alleys, where they awaited in trembling the volley of shots which they expected would follow. For all in Chinatown recall the pistol battles of the On Leong and Hip Sing Tongs.

When, after a moment, there was no second shot, frightened Chinamen and lobbygows peeped from their windows and doorways. On the sidewalk, in front of the home of Mock Duck, they saw the body of a man. Fleeing down Doyers Street toward the Bowery was a second man, closely followed by a policeman. The policeman was Young of the Elizabeth Street Station, and his rap for assistance was quickly answered by Roundsman Eckers.

Down the Bowery and into Chatham Square the policemen followed the man. They saw him dodge into the doorway of the building at Nos. 11 and 12, the Progress Lodging House, where a moment later they followed him. A frightened night clerk, suddenly awakened from a cat nap, pointed toward the stairs, and up these the policemen ran. In a room which he had just entered they found the man and led him, protesting, to the office.

There the clerk, Frederick Pekit, handed the policeman a pistol, its barrel still warm from exploded powder, and, pointing to the man whose arms the policeman clutched, exclaimed:

"He threw it under a table as he ran upstairs."

Young and Eckers took their prisoner to the Elizabeth Street Station, where he said he was Michael D. Manix, 28 years old, of 93 Gold Street. He declined to make any statement beyond denying that he had been in the neighborhood when the shooting occurred, and was locked up charged with being a suspicious person.

In the meantime the terrifying report had spread through Chinatown that the rival tongs were again engaged in battle, and the police reserves from the Elizabeth Street Station were hurried into Pell, Mott, and Doyers Streets, where thousands of Chinamen had gathered. They quickly cleared these thoroughfares and then carried the body of the man to the station house. In the pockets of the coat was a black card bearing in gold letters the name, C. E. Hanna, Jr. At the Morgue the man was identified later as Frank Drake, 22 years old and a driver, of 205 East Thirty-third Street.

Although at first Manix had denied all knowledge of the shooting, the police say that when he was told that Policeman Young had seen him running away from the spot where the body was found, the prisoner admitted the killing, declaring, however, that he had shot in self-defense. Manix was identified as the man who had done the shooting by Hyman Dickute of 1,724 Amsterdam Avenue, who said that he had been present when the shot was fired, and he was sent to the House of Detention as a witness in default of $100 bail.

At Police Headquarters Manix was recognized by Detective Sergeant Galvin, who said that Manix had given his right name and that his picture was in the Rogues' Gallery. At the Tombs Court Manix was remanded to the Coroner and later Coroner Dooley committed him to the Tombs Prison without bail to await an inquest.

Drake, it is said, spent Friday night "doing" Chinatown, in a company of about ten men and women. They had stopped before the home of Mock Duck to part for the night, and Drake had started alone toward the Bowery when the shot was fired.

The police have learned of none of the events which preceded the shooting. The reason for the killing remains a mystery.

O'BRIEN GIRLS ARE WARDS.

Guardians Appointed for Daughters of the Late ex-Sheriff.

Surrogate Fitzgerald signed an order yesterday appointing Sanford O'Brien general guardian of the person of his sister, Alice O'Brien, and Edward Burke as the general guardian of her estate. The same guardians were appointed for Ella Josephine O'Brien.

The two young women are daughters of ex-Sheriff James O'Brien, who died recently. The ex-Sheriff had obtained an absolute divorce from his wife, and it is stated in the petition that because of this she is unfitted to serve as guardian of her children.

The young women each have an annual income from the estate of their father amounting to $1,750.

THE EDDY TRUSTEES MADE DEFENDANTS

Christian Science Leader's Relatives File a Supplemental Bill.

URGE UNDUE INFLUENCE

Plaintiffs Declare That She Executed Trust Deed While Mentally Incompetent.

CONCORD, N. H., April 6.—A supplemental bill in equity, called forth by the recent announcement that the property of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy had been transferred to three trustees, was filed in the Merrimack County Court to-day, by the original plaintiffs—"next friends"—in the suit for an accounting of Mrs. Eddy's property.

The bill is the answer of the plaintiffs to the motion made by the defendants last Tuesday, that the three trustees, Archibald McLellan of Boston, Henry M. Baker of Bow, and Josiah E. Fernald of this city, be substituted for the "next friends" and be empowered to prosecute the suits against the defendants, who are all prominent members of the Christian Science Church.

The answer asks that the three trustees be added to the list of defendants, on the ground that the trustees are working for the same ends as the original defendants, that is, that they are unduly influencing Mrs. Eddy and managing her property to their own ends.

Judge Robert N. Chamberlain issued an order that all the defendants, including the original defendants and the three Trustees, shall appear in court on April 15 to make answer to the petition filed to-day.

The supplemental bill also asks that the deed of trust be vacated, on the ground that Mrs. Eddy was not competent to execute it, and that it was a device contrived by the defendants to defeat the purpose of the original suit.

The bill reads in part as follows:

The plaintiffs further say that after the filing of said bill on March 6 the defendants induced Mary B. G. Eddy, she being then in the condition of mind and body alleged in plaintiffs' original bill, to execute a deed transferring all her estate, real and personal, to Henry M. Baker of Bow, N. H.; Archibald McLellan of Boston, Mass., and Josiah E. Fernald of Concord, N. H., and that thereupon, in pursuance of said deed, Baker, McLellan, and Fernald proceeded to take possession of all the real and personal estate conveyed by said deed.

Service was made to-day upon Messrs. Baker and Fernald. Neither the trustees nor Gen. Frank S. Streeter, their counsel, would make any statement for publication.

BOSTON, April 6.—Frederick W. Peabody of this city, of counsel for the plaintiffs in the suit for an accounting of the property of Mary B. G. Eddy, said today:

"The status of the three alleged trustees will not be assumed, but must be proved. They are not trustees if the instrument upon which they rely is of no validity, and the validity of the instrument can be determined only by a judicial determination of the mental capacity of the person who is alleged to have made it.

"The attempted creation of the trust is an admission of the incompetency of Mrs. Eddy personally to administer her business and property, and such an admission involves the further admission of incompetency to dispose of it by deed of trust or otherwise.

"I am confident that we shall have no difficulty in having the alleged trust instrument invalidated because of Mrs. Eddy's condition of mental unsoundness."

BUSSE TO FORCE DUNNE OUT.

Chicago's New Mayor Suddenly Takes Oath of Office.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 6.—Fred A. Busse, the successful candidate for Mayor at the municipal election last Tuesday, suddenly took the oath of office to-day. He appeared before City Clerk Anson at noon, presented his certificate of election, and was sworn.

Mayor Busse said to-night he had no desire for unseemly haste; that he acted thereby on advice, for the protection of his interests and those of the city.

"As to when I will take hold of affairs at the City Hall," he said, "I had not intended to assume office until after April 15. If my own wishes were consulted id wait until then, but things have shaped themselves, so I probably shall take hold Tuesday at the latest."

Under the Illinois law, a Mayor-elect may assume the duties of his office on presenting his certificate of election, taking the oath of office and filing his bond. It is the contention of Mr. Busse's friends that the moment he executed his bond he became Mayor. Others declare that there is a question, because the law says the bond must be approved by the City Council. If the law is construed thus he will not become Mayor until the Council has accepted his bond as good.

Corporation Counsel Lewis said tonight:

"Mr. Busse this moment is Mayor in fact. There are two Mayors. Mr. Busse can now, if he chooses, actually assume the duties of office. Until he does so Mayor Dunne will continue to act. Mayor Dunne, I hold, can make appointments and discharge all the duties of Mayor until Mr. Busse actually assumes office, although I do not believe that the Mayor would attempt to make appointments under the circumstances. It is a most unusual proceeding."

Mr. Busse's action is the climax of a week of upheavals in the municipal machinery of Chicago. The new Republican administration has insisted on instituting its traction policy before the Democratic administration has had any chance to interfere with its plans. Drawings of plans for the rehabilitation of the street-car systems, under the provisions of the ordinances approved at the election, have been completed this week, and the actual work is scheduled to begin Monday.

It is admitted by Republican leaders that the desire on the part of Mayor Busse to facilitate this work as much as possible was one reason why he was sworn into office. They acknowledged a fear that radical friends of Mayor Dunne might persuade him to do something that would embarrass them between now and April 15, and said they believed it would be just as well to strip him of all authority.

"I want the people of Chicago to judge of this procedure for themselves," said Mayor Dunne when told of Mr. Busse's action. "It is my understanding and belief that the bond of the Mayor-elect must be examined and approved by the City Council before he can be declared in office.

"It seems to me that the time-honored custom of notifying the outgoing Mayor of his intention to assume office might have been followed by the incoming official in this instance. I know of no explanation of the method adopted. I do not propose to make any further comment, except to say that the customary farewell address of the Mayor to the Council will be unnecessary in this instance, and that the time-honored introduction of the new Mayor by the retiring Mayor will be eliminated."

KEEPS "INCUBATOR" BABY.

Mrs. Bleakley, the Mother, Wins Hard-Fought Case Over Child.

TOPEKA, Kan., April 6.—The State Supreme Court decided to-day that Mrs. Charlotte E. Bleakley of Lawrence, Kan., as its mother, is entitled to the "incubator" baby exhibited at the St. Louis World's Fair.

The decision to-day ends a most interesting fight for possession of the baby. James G. Barkley and Stella Barkley, his wife, who were in charge of an exhibit at the St. Louis Fair, saw the baby in the incubator concession. They traced its parentage to Mrs. Bleakley of Lawrence, Kan., who was persuaded to sign a deed of adoption to Mrs. Barkley.

The baby had been put in the concession by a St. Louis midwife, who had told Mrs. Bleakley that it had been born dead. Mrs. Bleakley, uncertain that the child was really hers, but wishing to aid Mrs. Barkley to gain possession of it from the midwife, signed the adoption papers.

Mrs. Bleakley later became satisfied that the child was her own daughter and sought to retain it. In Illinois the courts gave Mrs. Bleakley custody of the child. The Barkleys then brought suit in the District Court of Kansas. The Kansas District Court gave judgment for the Barkleys, but Mrs. Bleakley kidnapped the child and escaped to Illinois. The Kansas Supreme Court now gives her the custody of the child.

PEARY ASKS FOR LEAVE.

Seeks Permission to Make Another Dash for the Pole.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Commander R. E. Peary, U. S. N., has applied for an extension of leave of absence in order to resume his effort to reach the north pole.

The dash to the pole will be attempted in the Summer of 1908.

Veteran Ferry Employe Drops Dead.

While collecting fares in the Twenty-third Street Ferry house, at the foot of Broadway, Williamsburg, yesterday, Isaac H. Pryor, who had been employed by the Brooklyn Ferry Company for more than fifty years, was fatally stricken with apoplexy. He was known as "Old Ike," and was a familiar figure in Williamsburg for many years. Pryor was dead on the arrival of an ambulance surgeon. He was nearly 70 years old. He leaves a widow, one son, and one daughter.

STRAUS FINALLY BARS JAPANESE

Immigrants Who Entered United States by Way of Mexico Must Be Deported.

NO OBJECTION BY JAPAN

Minister Advises Them That the United States Acts in Accordance with the Agreement.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor to-day denied admission to this country of five Japanese immigrants, namely, Hisamatsu Takemoto, Otokiro Hatakeyama, Mauskichi Yamada, Kenosuke Sadakami, and Knnekichi Takayama. These are the first Japanese exclusion cases which have reached the Secretary since the promulgation of the executive order carrying into effect the new immigration law. Secretary Straus's action was based upon an appeal taken by the Japanese from a decision of the Inspector at El Paso, Texas, denying them the rights to enter this country on passports from Mexico.

These appeals first reached Commissioner of Immigration Sargent, and they were referred by him to the Secretary with the recommendation that they be dismissed on the ground that no other course was permissible under the President's order carrying into effect the agreement of last Winter relative to the exclusion of Japanese laborers.

The matter was presented on behalf of the would-be immigrants to the Japanese Minister, and he advised them that the course of the United States authorities was in accord with the agreement between the two countries and hence satisfactory to his Government.

When they represented that they had been compelled to come to the United States in search of food, he advised them to apply to the Japanese Minister to Mexico for relief. Commissioner Sargent has been advised that about 500 Japanese laborers have recently left El Paso, going both east and west, and it is expected that they will try to find admission into the United States at unguarded points along the international line.

GREAT NORTHERN IS FINED.

It Permits a Conviction on Rebating to Facilitate an Appeal.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 6.—After agreeing to a stipulation of facts as to fifteen counts involving illegal rebates, the Great Northern Railroad was to-day found guilty, and was fined $15,000 by Judge Page Morris, in the Federal District Court.

This handling of the case, it is stated, is to facilitate an appeal by the railroad. The appeal is to be based on the question whether it is possible to bring a prosecution under the Elkins law on charges which are covered in the new Hepburn law. With the appeal in view both sides stipulate that the fine imposed should in no way be construed as a precedent in other cases.

CANADA'S FUTURE.

The destiny of Canada is indeed the biggest thing in England's politics, as our message this morning from London says. It is likewise a matter of great moment in the future of this continent. It is a three-cornered situation which we hope to see managed with the broadest statesmanship, and with the least trace on our part of the bitterness discoverable in Canada, or the horse-trading spirit which the polite press of London warned Mr. BRYCE against on the part of Mr. ROOSEVELT and Mr. ROOT.

Our own attitude should be marked with both patience and restraint, and there is not the least reason to suppose that there will be any difficulty about such a temper in and out of official circles. It is true that those qualities are not characteristic of Mr. ROOSEVELT personally, but this matter is more particularly in the charge of about the coolest and patientest of all our Secretaries of State. The average of the two men is a happy assurance both to ourselves and to the parties across the council table. The British temper is said to be one of indifference. The Government is said to care not a fig what becomes of Canada. Such a spirit we should construe rather as acquiescence in the inevitable than as indifference. Canada's future fires the imagination. The Nineteenth Century was ours, the Twentieth Century is Canada's, in the words of her Premier. But there is and can be little in it for England, except pride in her offspring. England has nothing to offer Canada, and Canada has reached the limit of what she will give England. They belong to such different systems that Canada has washed its hands of England's quarrels, and will not contribute to the Imperial defense. But England cannot wash its hands of Canada any more than we can divest ourselves of responsibility for the Philippines, and must either defend her colony or abandon it to the protection of the Monroe Doctrine.

Canada's attitude lacks something of what is due to both England and the United States. In a sense she is the equal of either, but she is not the superior of either. Nobody dreams of imposing anything upon her. The freest and fairest bargain is all that is in anybody's mind, but already she is both dictatorial and suspicious, responding too readily to the same British mischief-makers as those who found in the Swettenham incident ground for irritation and antagonism toward the United States. Thrice fortunate is it that in both England and the United States, whatever party is in power, it is only the opposition which seeks to stir up anger between kin. It is the critics of the British Government which regard Mr. BRYCE as an anti-nationalist and phil-American, and warn him against American jockeying. It is on the other side the border, not on this, that England's representative is charged with a disposition toward purchasing American good-will by the betrayal of Canada. On this side the border there is no disposition to do any business of that sort. There will be a to-morrow as well as to-day, and the only arrangement wished by those of influence in the United States is one that will stand the test of time and equity. We want no "comeback" hereafter, and we think that Canada errs in regarding herself as wronged in past adjustments.

It is undeniable that a certain regret tinges our Canadian relations. They have not been managed with the best results for either party, and a time has arrived when neither approaches the other with sentiments quite unruffled. Undoubtedly there have been times when reciprocity and even annexation, or let us say amalgamation, were more within the range of practical politics than now they seem. Undoubtedly we are not entirely free from reproach and responsibility for some share of the new spirit across the border, and Canada is right in holding herself less cheap than a generation ago. But, on the other hand, we have something more to offer than we had in those earlier days, and the proposal that we should not on either side make two bites of a cherry is worth consideration before Canada in turn places herself in position to say that she let slip the best time for an understanding. It is impossible to run down the list of questions pending between Canada and the United States without perceiving how they vanish with abolition of the boundary. A single tariff is better than reciprocity. The seal herd might well belong to identical proprietors. The fisheries would gain in worth if the catch were salable in either market. The naval vessels on the lakes might be abandoned, or might be of any size and number, if they flew one flag. There ought to be no question of merchandise in transit, and the fence which prevents living and working in either country at will ought to be taken down. There is not in the list one item which would not yield to business sense—with or without amalgamation—and not one fit to arouse sentiments such as distinguish nations not similar in blood and thought. This is more the sentiment of England than of Canada, but Canada is the best and sole judge of Canada's interests.

PRESIDENT AND PEOPLE.

The most remarkable social and political phenomenon observable in this Republic to-day is the immense and growing popularity of THEODORE ROOSEVELT. Through the large number of dispatches from the editors of Republican newspapers which we print this morning there runs this single note—the President's popularity is growing, he is to-day stronger with the people than ever before. The enthusiasm he has aroused asks no questions, demands no pledges, imposes no conditions. Its confidence, like its admiration, is boundless.

Persons accustomed to the study of politics will perceive that if these newspaper editors correctly reflect popular sentiment in their respective communities the Republican National Convention that assembles next year will nominate Mr. ROOSEVELT for the Presidency unless he employs some meane more potent and effectual than any hitherto at the command of any statesman in such a position to stay a procedure so completely in conflict with his professed wish and intention.

From one or two sources we get the sound of a sober note of critical judgment, of doubt, of possibly diminished fervor, and of some apprehension. But this note sounds faint indeed, and is pretty nearly lost in the otherwise universal shout of approbation. The misgivings and the fears that possess the minds of men whom habit or business prudence constrains to scan the future so far as may be, and to take account of the public consequences of Executive acts committed or in contemplation, do not in the least trouble the President's admirers. With their eyes fixed on him they take no thought of what may lie in the path before their feet.

No American statesman ever had such an unquestioning support, a support so completely uncritical or one so manifestly due to the inspiration awakened by personality. It is an astonishing spectacle. To the renomination of President GRANT in 1880 it was felt that the third-term tradition offered an insuperable obstacle. It will not in the slightest degree avail against the wave of popular favor that now promises to make Mr. ROOSEVELT the candidate next year. With the spirit he has invoked and stirred tradition counts for nothing. If the time of sobering up should be long deferred, we do not know that even institutions would count for very much.

MR. CARNEGIE'S GUESTS.

After all, great wealth has its uses. Possibly not for the happiness of its possessor, as Mr. CARNEGIE, who ought to know, has been maintaining in public, but certainly for the progress and happiness of mankind, when it is directed both unselfishly and intelligently, as Mr. CARNEGIE again has conspicuously made clear. There are those, indeed, who disparage the public utility of his libraries. But nobody disputes the public utility of the other institutions which he has founded. Nobody denies that the building at The Hague for the uses of The Hague conferences and of The Hague Tribunal is a good thing for the peace and progress of the world. Nobody pretends that it could or would be built by national or international action if a private donor had not come forward to build it. Likewise the projected building for the use of the "Bureau of American Republics" in Washington. Possibly Congress might in time have been wrought up to the point of appropriating money for such a building. But really it is no business of Congress, and, moreover, the republics to the south of us might have had their scruples about making use of a building supplied by the "big brother" or big sister, whereas they can have no scruples about accepting the hospitality of an individual donor, even though he may happen to be a North American citizen. So also with the Carnegie Institute. And so, very particularly, with the wonderful assemblage which is even now taking place of guests for the dedication of that institute.

Nothing could be better all around than that the most notable men in Europe, the men of light and leading in their several countries, should be enabled to visit this country as students of its institutions. But many of the men whom it is most desirable to attract in that capacity, and to bring in under no retainer whatever, nor in any official station, but as independent investigators, who may or may not be moved to make public report of what they find, would not be here at all but for Mr. CARNEGIE'S generous hospitality. Doubtless every one of them has cherished some vague velleities of some time visiting the United Statss. But a large proportion of them, possibly the majority, would never have seen their way to reducing their good intentions to practice if the way had not been opened to them by Mr. CARNEGIE'S thoughtfulness. It is probably within the mark to say that never before, not evsn as part of the procedures of a world's fair, has an equal number of distinguishsd foreigners visited this country on a single occasion. To have assembled them is of itself a signal achievement in the cause of civilization and of peace. And it could not have been performed except by the happy thought of a man who was able to afford the expense of his happy thoughts.

A LITTLE TOO MUCH ZEAL.

"Nothing in Rome is supposed to be done without an ulterior motive," says our Rome corrsspondent in the dispatch we publish this morning. The desire to serve the interest of a friend is a motive quite above criticism, but the attempt by indirection to enlist in such service influences that for the best of reasons could not be exerted in a preferential way would be not only a fit subject of criticism, but of censure.

The curious incident our Rome correspondent narrates shows that an attempt of this kind has been mads, and not for the first time. The occasion of the presentation of the Presidsnt's sister to the Pope was seized upon, it eeems, by a too zealous advocate of a certain appointment to the proposed second American Cardinalate to advance the interests of that candidacy by an appeal which at such a time wae manifestly out of place. The good eense of the lady and her diplomatic tact leading her to protest against the discussion of "politics" "saved the situation" and closed a somewhat disagreeable incident.

The publication of ths Montagnini correspondence has disclosed another case of misdirected zeal still more flagrant in its nature. All good Catholics know, of course, that the relation of the American Government to their Church is that of purely friendly but impartial interest. To the "politics" of the Church we cannot have the remotest relation. Yet the Montagnini correspondence reveals the fact that there was at one time a hope or expectation—and some activity to that end—that the Washington Government might appoint as Ambassador to France a Roman Catholic. The struggle between the Church and State in France over the Separation was then growing heated, and while the religious belief of the gentleman in question would have supplied no ground of objection to his appointment to half a dozen other capitals, his appointment to that particular capital would have been regarded as an evidence of our willingness to interfere in the domestic affairs of France; as an exhibition, indeed, of our sympathy with the opponents of a Governmental policy of France to which the French people had given their support. Our Government, of course, wae in no danger of yielding to occult persuasions of this nature. The object sought was put aside as not to be thought of. But it is very much to be regretted that such attempts should be made, that the belief should be cherished in any quarter that it is permissible to invoke by any means, open or secret, the influence or the favor of the American Government, in no matter how slight a way, for the support of interests and of policies with which we can have no concern.

The report from Rome that the Papal Secretary, Cardinal MERRY DEL VAL, may resign as a consequence of the publication of the correspondence of the Nunciature may be unfounded, but it is to be hoped that the revelation will have the effect of moderating a zeal that has now and then seemed to become inordinate.

MR. BELMONT'S PROPHECY.

Mr. BELMONT'S name is now added to the long list of those who have warned us all to put our affairs in order against an approaching lean season. HOMER had nine birthplaces, but this panic has had ninety prophets, each of whom in the years to come will claim to have seen it first. Mr. SHAW was among the earliest as well as quite the most authoritative to sound the alarm, but it was not really alarming to most of us to be told that we were too prosperous. Mr. BELMONT does not sugar his warning that the bars are up across the primrose path of prosperity.

Mr. BELMONT stands so high in the upper circles of finance that a great many will wonder what he sees ahead. We dare say there are many like Mr. BELMONT, strong themselves, but worrying about others less strong, and perhaps unable to stand too much reform and whose burdens it may be necessary for others to assume. But has not Wall Street discounted this condition of affairs, and has it not for the last few days indicated that this phase is past, and that the big stick is nothing so very dreadful after all? Are there not many who know that the proposal to squeeze out the water—now abandoned—never was seriously entertained, and that the reduction of rates and restriction of profits is a good thing for the railways, even as the loss of a billion of paper values is a good thing both in itself, and in the reduction of speculative excesses? Taking the very worst view of the situation is not such a successful endurance of strain proof of basic soundness, and is it not well that it has been accomplished at this time instead of another, when we might have had a real panic? Predictions of panics never cause them, and possibly may avert them.

COMMISSIONER BINGHAM'S OPPORTUNITY.

Police Commissioner BINGHAM has the greatest chance any man has had in years to mend the life of the city, and as he has won this chance mainly by his own efforts, backed by his character, so he is entitled to use it in his own way with the confident faith that he will heartily be sustained. He has received from the Legislature adequate practical power to administer the police force at his discretion. He has control over the detectives; he can assign whom he will, for such time as he will, and can make his selections from the inside or outside of the force. He has control over the Inspectors, and thus over the Captains. He can distribute rewards or punishments, praise or disapproval, incitements or discouragements, according to his own judgment. His detectives, who are in effect his eyes, should keep his judgment enlightened; good or ill should be within his knowledge with substantial completeness; and on such knowledge he has almost unfettered power to act. No other Police Commissioner has ever had anything like this swing.

We have said that Mr. BINGHAM has won his present position mainly by his own efforts, backed by his character. It is true that he has been sustained by a remarkable organized public opinion, and that this has been the outcome of long discussion on the part of earnest and intelligent citizens striving for the reform of the police. It is also true that the investigations carried on by the City Club, by the Citizens' Union, and by the successive Citizens' Committees have prepared the public mind for the action now taken. But all this would have been unavailing had not Commissioner BINGHAM himself defined his policy, openly and almost fiercely exposed the need of it, defied its opponents in the Police Department, and pledged himself to stand or fall by the result of that policy if it were once adopted. But for this attitude on his part, the proposed reform of the police would have wilted as so many before it have wilted under the discouraging feeling in the public mind that there was no one to carry out reforms, however good they might be, no strong and willing arm to wield the weapon forged for the defense of the city against its own corrupt police. Mr. BINGHAM has convinced the people of the city and of the State that his arm is fit and ready for that duty and that he will perform it. It is a great honor for any man to win. It carries with it a tremendous responsibility.

Think for a moment what the "System" is against which the Commissioner must now engage in a contest for life or death. It rests on three powerful supports; the politicians, Democratic and Republican, who profit by it; the lawbreakers of every rank and sort who furnish the funds for its support and administration, and the police, with life tenure, with vast open and secret powers, with long experience, and with astute and determined leadership. From the System thus upheld there are multitudes of men, for the most part energetic, reckless, and largely criminal, drawing sums of money in the aggregate of enormous amount. Probably not less than 50,000, possibly twice that number, of essentially vicious persons are dependent on the organized corruption of the police force, of which the System is the embodiment. Among them there are numerous professional politicians. Apart from the professionals immediately concerned, the votes controlled by this evil body are of very great importance to all politicians, and especially to those of the party in power and their partnere in the professed opposition party, to Tammany men and Tammany Republicans. The open and secret influence thus exerted is almost incalculable, and it will all be directed with the utmost skill and with desperation against Commissioner BINGHAM. We believe it will be directed in vain if he is in the future, as he has been in the past, ready to appeal straight to the honest people of the city. There and there only can he find a force more powerful than the one he is to contend with ready to respond to his call.

We do not imagine that Mr. BINGHAM has any delusions as to the real nature and extent of the support he can rely on. He undoubtedly knows that his recent triumph in the Legislature was in part due to a falling out in the ranks of the politicians and that he might have failed had these been united in opposition to him. But he knows also that he surely would have failed had he not had public sentiment behind him. Public sentiment will steadily be behind him if he is able to make it plain that he is working straight for the public good. He has done that so far; we believe he will continue to do so.

THE DOCTOR IN THE SCHOOL.

JOHN J. CRONIN, M. D., in The Review of Reviews for April, depicts the beneficent results of medical examination of children in the public schools of this city since the Department of Health appointed a corps of School Medical Inspectors in 1897. This staff was enlarged in 1901, a body of trained nurses was added, and the daily visits of Inspectors were supplemented by weekly physical examinations of all the classes, defective pupils being singled out and notices mailed to parents in which abnormal conditions of blood, spine, eyes, teeth, and so on were indicated for reference to family physicians. Under this system the percentages of sick and defective children were found to be very high, as these figures indicate:

Of 92,240 children examined in the schools of the Borough of Manhattan from March 27, 1905, to Sept. 29, 1906, 65,741—or about 65 per cent.—needed some form of medical treatment. Of those 92,240 children about 30 per cent. (30,958) required correction of defects of sight, in most cases by eyeglasses. A still larger percentage (39,778) needed attention to their teeth. There were 38,273 children with swollen glands in the neck, indicating some present or past trouble in the throat, nose, ear, or some abnormal constitutional condition. Enlarged tonsils, with their baneful effects, including liability to tonsilitis and diphtheria, were found in 18,131 children. About 10 per cent. of all the children examined (9,850) were found to have adenoid growths in their throats—a condition which predisposes to affections of the ears, the nose, and the lungs, and which interferes most seriously with the child's general health and mental development.

As a direct result of notifications sent to parents, Dr. CRONIN says, 8,000 children have been fitted with glasses, and the subsequent improvement in their school standing has gratified Principals and teachers. The children themselves appreciate the value of the examinations.

One little girl in a school on the lower east side came triumphantly to school with the report: "I have got glasses; I had my tonsils cut, and my ringworms cured."

Dr. CRONIN remarks upon the benefit, both mental and physical, to children operated on for obstructions of the throat; his article is accompanied with photographs of children "before and after" the operation for adenoids, in which the contrast between gaping, listless expressions and brightened countenances is considerable. They breathe better, sleep sounder, have keener appetites and sharper hearing, all of which, of course, reacts favorably on their school work.

In the special classes for "backward children" of Public School 110 it was found that 95 per cent. had adenoid growths. Among 83 truants examined in the Truant School 87 per cent. had physical defects, mostly remediable. The records of the Children's Courts of this city and of Chicago disclose 85 per cent. of youthful criminals as physically defective. Children who leave school early and become "wage slaves" are uniformly of the defective class, actual poverty being the cause of their seeking employment "in but a very small proportion of cases." The solution of the child labor problem lies fundamentally, it appears, not in schemes of legislation, but in conveying medical advice to parents before their children leave school prematurely.

TO HELP WOMEN TEACHERS.

Mr. Van Denburg Disclaims Any Connection with a Committee for the Men.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I ask you to correct any misapprehension that may exist as to the position I am taking with regard to the school legislation sought at Albany? I do not represent any body of men teachers. I am not a member of any men's committee seeking to influence legislation. The position I have taken is based upon the dissatisfaction which exists among the women themselves.

Inquiries I have been making show that in the greater city there are 2,000 women teachers who are interested in the equal pay movement merely because they need the money which they believe this equalization would bring. As it appears more and more clearly that a large number of primary grade teachers and teachers of girls' classes who do not compete with men will gain nothing from equalization, these teachers are beginning to see that they are risking everything to gain much for others, but nothing for themselves.

The Legislature is ready and willing to amend the Davis law so as to assure the grade teachers of a large increase. The men teachers will not oppose any increase of women's salaries, however large. The equal pay leaders alone say: "We are fighting for a principle, not an increase. We don't care what salary we get so long as the men get no more." Not so, however, the thousands of young women teachers who were attracted by the salaries offered a few years ago, and who now find every dollar of their salary cut nearly in half by the increased cost of living. It is to show the situation in its true light to those young ladies that I am taking up the cudgels for a bill granting an increase, but not equalization.

REMEDIES FOR CITY ILLS.

Police Could Enforce Dust Rule—Prod for Health Board on Spitting Abuse.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As long as builders are permitted to dump their refuse into our streets and the city ash gatherers are allowed to throw ashes in a dry and powdery condition into their carts, we may expect to have our air filled with dust.

I noticed in passing the new Plaza Hotel at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street on Tuesday last, a platform the height of a cart, filled with wheelbarrows dumping their refuse there. The wind blew this cement dust nearly to Madison Avenue. If the contractor had ordered this dust to be dampened before being carried it would have been better for the lungs of the people near at hand. No one seemed to object or protest.

There is no use in talking about clean streets when such things are allowed. Our police should be empowered to enforce the rule covering the case.

New York, April 5, 1907. C. J. G.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly inform me why the Board of Health places the notice, "Spitting on the floor of this car is a misdemeanor, &c., and punishable by fine, or imprisonment, or both," in the Subway, elevated, and street cars if the officials never intend to enforce it?

People are getting so they ignore such notices, because no example, demonstrating the power of that order, has been set. It is my misfortune to be compelled to ride on the Subway twice a day, and I can truthfully say that there is never a time when some person or persons do not expectorate once, twice, and even half a dozen times during the run.

Such conduct is disgusting and abominable. It is high time for the Board of Health to wake up and enforce its order for the safety and health of the public. HEALTH.

WHY WILEY IS CRITICISED.

His Radical Views Said to Justify Tests by the National Commission.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was interested in reading in your issue of April 2 a discussion of the question "Why Not Help Dr. Wiley?" The article criticised the National Commission, recently formed to investigate the possible dangers in food preservatives, and said:

And we do not see just why the President of the University of Illinois, who seems to be the moving and leading figure in this enterprise, is not content to leave the investigation of foods and preservatives to Dr. Wiley of the Agricultural Department.

The principal reason the National Commission was formed was to corroborate Dr. Wiley's experiments on saltpetre, which, I believe, he is now conducting. When Dr. Wiley's report of his borax test was made public his method of administering borax in capsules was condemned by the medical fraternity at large, as under such circumstances the preservative would enter the stomach in a more concentrated form than it could under any circumstances when used as a food preservative.

Dr. Wiley, in his report of the influence of borax and boric acid on health, says:

It is, nevertheless, an interesting fact to note that at the end of the year, after the final after-period had been passed, they, meaning the borax squad, appeared and declared themselves to be in better physical condition than when they entered upon the experimental work seven months before.

Irrespective of the healthful condition of the poison squad after they had partaken of borax in capsules for several months, Dr. Wiley condemns boron preservatives.

It is on account of the doctor's radical views that the leading chemists of the country decided to make experiments on their own account. If the tests made by the National Commission agree with the results obtained by the Agricultural Department, the scientific world will consider the results more authentic than if they had been conducted by the Agricultural Department alone.

SAYS ASSESSMENT IS UNJUST.

Brooklyn Man Thinks Livingston Street Bill Benefits the Entire City.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES on March 29, regarding the Livingston Street Widening bill, I wish to call your attention to the fact that it is not a local but a general improvement designed to benefit the entire City of Brooklyn. On the original petition there were 180 names, of which only four came from the present area of assessment and 176 from the suburbs of Brooklyn.

The widening of the street was planned to increase the transit facilities of Brooklyn. No less than 36 per cent. of the cars now running on Fulton Street are to be taken off of that thoroughfare and run through Livingston Street when the plans of the improvement are carried out. This is as important to the citizen of the Bronx or of Richmond who is going to Coney Island as it is to the resident of Bay Ridge or Flatbush who is going to his business in Manhattan.

It would be quite as appropriate to levy the cost of a road connecting two large towns upon the country district through which the road would run as to levy the whole cost of this assessment on the territory immediately adjacent to Livingston Street.

Your editorial writer, speaking of the increased value of property along Livingston Street, should have made himself aware of the fact that the Livingston Street property is but an infinitesimal part of the area of assessment for the improvement. At least 99 per cent. of the property assessed is remote from Livingston Street, some of it being as much as two miles away. The owners of this property are largely of the middle or poorer class. Their property is not benefited by the widening of Livingston Street, except as the whole city is benefited, and yet they are required to pay an assessment.

No one who investigates the situation can doubt that this improvement is as much one for the whole city as are the bridges over the East River and that the assessment, as at present levied, is most unjust. BROOKLYNITE.

ENDOWMENT FOR BIRDS.

Millionaires Asked to Help League Save Song Birds and Wild Animals.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The munificence of many of our wealthy people is simply bewildering. Carnegie and Rockefeller have recently made donations to the cause of education in gifts such as the world never heard of until within the last few years. Miss Gould has done a great service by contributing money to the Young Men's Christian Associations. Mrs. Sage has set apart $10,000,000 for the relief of the poor. Now a group of generous people have subscribed $1,000,000 for the better handling of cattle in transit to the slaughter houses.

What surprises me is that no great philanthropist has seen fit to donate a generous sum for the preservation of the song birds. The League of American Sportsmen is nine years old, and has 11,000 members, including many of the most prominent men and women in the country. From the day of its organization it has been appealing to the public for funds to obtain the enactment and enforcement of laws for the preservation of wild animals and birds, and in nine years we have received less than $2,000, all told.

We are now endeavoring to obtain the enactment of laws in about twenty States to prohibit the killing of gray squirrels at least for a term of years. We need a large sum to properly advertise these measures and push them for passage. We have recently sent out an appeal to about 300 wealthy people in this city for this purpose, and in reply we received less than $100.

Why is it that some of our millionaires cannot be moved to endow this league with a sum that will enable it to do all the things it was created to do? Will not THE NEW YORK TIMES, through its editorial columns, appeal to its readers on behalf of these wild creatures?

Says Slot Machines Harm Schoolboys.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The recent development of the 5-cent arcade "theatres," the remarkable effect thereof upon the children, and the demoralization of their fancy, should not pass without grave consideration.

The 5-cent "theatres" develop bad taste in a boy and reduce him to a stage where his desire to study and read is conquered by the attractions of the pretty and cheap shows. I chanced to visit one of these "theatres" recently, and was surprised to find that the onlookers were boys from 9 to 15 years of age, with schoolbooks in their hands. Something should be done to exclude schoolboys from these "theatres." I. C. K.

ODELL AT WORK AGAIN.

Plans to Turn Out Parsons with the Aid of a New Reapportionment.

Ex-Gov. Benjamin B. Odell came down from his home in Newburg yesterday and held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel what may prove to be the first of a series of conferences for the purpose of outlining a campaign for the recapture of the local Republican machine from County Chairman Herbert Parsons. The Odell forces expect to be materially aided by the decision of the Court of Appeals on the reapportionment and by the passage through the present Legislature of a new reapportionment bill.

The former Governor held his conference in the barroom of the Fifth Avenue. It lasted for three hours and was entirely informal. Among the Odell stalwarts who were present were "Abe" Gruber, Edward Lauterbach, William C. Warren, Edward Healey, Commissioner Windolph, Joseph Levenson, and ex-Superintendent of Public Works Boyd. Practically nothing was talked of except the reapportionment.

Mr. Odell gave it as his opinion that the Legislature would pass a bill which would eventually be found constitutional, and which would change the formation of "Christy" Sullivan's district, and probably add Richmond to Rockland County in one Senate district, taking it away from Suffolk and Nassau. He thought also that Brackett and Stevens might regain their districts.

The ex-Governor refused to discuss his share in the Harriman-Roosevelt controversy in any way.

COL. FOWLER BARS POLITICS.

Appraiser Says His Office Is Under No Obligations—Plums to Democrats.

The announced intention of Col. E. S. Fowler, the Appraiser of the Port, to eliminate the absolute control of politics from his office has created some alarm in the ranks of the political organizations, both State and local. According to Col. Fowler, he is under no obligations to run his office to please alone the politicians.

It has been known for some time that the Appraiser is an advocate of promotions from within the Customs Service rather than following the practice in vogue for years of parceling out technical and expert positions among the followers of influential politicians.

A practical demonstration of the Appraiser's attitude was furnished last month when two members of the Corps of Examiners, John D. Smith and Charles W. Bunn, were, at the instance of Col. Fowler, promoted by the President to Assistant Appraiserships. Both of the new officials had affiliations with the Democratic Party, and the Administration was criticised for not giving at least one of the official plums to some deserving Republican field worker. The selections, however, were regarded by some as a fair offset to the recent appointment of Republican District Leader Charles K. Lexow as Assistant Appraiser of the Eleventh, or Law and Scientific, Division of the Appraiser's Department, and the earlier appointments of Assistant Appraiser Harvey T. Andrews and Deputy Appraiser George W. Wanmaker, both of whom are also Republican district leaders in this city.

GARIBALDI AND AMERICA.

Veteran Tells of His Desire to Aid the Union Cause.

ROME, April 6.—Col. Fazzari, a veteran who fought with Garibaldi, has received a letter from N. Gay of Boston, asking about the relations between Italy and America during the early days of the Kingdom of Italy.

In answer Col. Fazzari wrote that Garibaldi was urged to assume a command in the Northern army during the civil war in the United States. He thereupon organized an expedition and planned to sail away from Sardinia. The vessel intended for the transport of the expedition was encircled with iron chains in order to protect her from shot from the Alabama in case of a meeting. This expedition was to sail under the Italian flag, but the declaration of peace between North and South made it unnecessary to start.

Col. Fazzari says Garibaldi was much grieved at the murder of Lincoln, and that one of his grandsons, born about that time, was named after the American President.

Plan to Lessen Street Car Discomforts

To the Editor of The New York Times:

After reading the article in THE NEW YORK TIMES of April 5 on "New Transit Facilities," I take the liberty of asking if the following suggestion would be out of place:

Why not introduce the system of compelling all passengers, when going out of a car, to leave by the front door, and those going in to enter by the rear? This would naturally leave the platform clear at the point of egress and stop the present congestion of two opposing streams of people. In the Subway it is now a matter of brutally fighting your way out. I am satisfied that this plan would practically empty and fill a car almost automatically, and result in the aggregate in an immense saving of time.

On the surface cars there is too much latitude to men crowding on the rear platforms. It is sometimes almost impossible to push through them. A change like the above would cure that trouble. READER.

The Planter Speaks.

From The Louisville Courier-Journal.

Says The Baltimore Sun:

"Nihil menius nihil homine libero dignius quam agricultura."

Without venturing to contradict the statement, it may be said that a majority of those who are able to express themselves so beautifully would go to jail rather than pluck the worms from an acre of tobacco.

NEW YORK.

Her feet are on the rolling Earth, her face
looks from the Sun, Gigantic Soul, but glorious Woman, whose soft whispers run
Over the roll'd Atlantic, firing the stubble
Earth with Joy—
Surely a million men sweat worlds in her god-great employ.

We have basked in other centuries' suns,
we are captives of old Kings;
Strangely our hearts stir when her call on the west sea-gale swings,
That pulls us overseas, that bares the primal men we are—
Over the great Ten Days of Ocean she shines our Pilot-Star!

Within her star-hung canyon walls, where one may walk a plank
From the Dipper to the Pleiades, and where at night each flank
Sparkles like the white Milky Way and joy breeds love and laughter,
Surely among her millions we shall find our home hereafter.

But Paris has an equal call and London
roars with mirth?
Wherever stars beam on mankind breaks
laughter from the Earth?
No, to New York, only stout souls,
Earth's best, by love are hurled—
We ache to burn in your foundry-fires, O
Workshop of the World!

That is your glory, Star-City! that you are the City of Work!
That is your Gospel, Star-City! In the face of your slums and the murk
Of your traitors, through the wild panics, the terrors, it shall bear you straight to your goal,
Till your Vision shall steep your strong man-millions and flash out every Soul!

SOCIETY TURNS OUT FOR MANY WEDDINGS

Clergymen Were Kept Busy in All Parts of the City Yesterday.

MISS COSTER • MARRIED

Weds Lewis Spencer Morris In Her Home—Devens-Wetmore Ceremony—Other Weddings.

The wedding of Lewis Spencer Morris, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lewis Morris, and eighth in descent from Lewis Morris, who signed the Declaration of Independence, and Miss Emily Pell Coster, elder daughter of Mrs. Charles Coster, took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, at Park Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street.

The entrance to the drawing room in which the wedding was performed by the Rev. Dr. William R. Huntington of Grace Church was through an arbor of roses illuminated with electric lights. The room was decorated with pink roses and growing plants. A large wedding bell hung at one end of the room, from which garlands of pink flowers were drawn back and so fastened as to form a canopy over the bridal party.

The entrance hall was decorated in roses, and an orchestra was stationed behind a rose covered lattice work screen. The reception room was decorated with American Beauty roses and the library held white flowers. The dining room was decorated in yellow.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Herbert Pell. She wore a gown of white satin and point lace, her point lace veil was caught with orange blooms, and she carried lilies of the valley. Her sister, Miss Helen Coster, was her only attendant. She wore a pink frock and carried pink roses. Mr. Morris was attended by Gordon Macdonald as best man, and the ushers were Bayard Hoppin, Clarence Pell, John Hooe Auerbach, and George Peabody.

Relatives only were asked to the ceremony, which was followed by a small reception. After a brief bridal trip in this country Mr. and Mrs. Morris will sail for Europe to travel until October, when they will return to New York. Among the guests asked were these:

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Roger Tyler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church of Hamilton, Va. They will reside in Chicago.

Walter Wellman, the father of the bride, who will attempt to reach the north pole in an airship this Summer, came from Paris to attend the ceremony.

WEDDINGS TO COME.

Miss Blun to Marry Dr. Bookman—Date for Lindheim-Levy Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Blun of 15 West Seventy-sixth Street have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Olga, to Dr. Samuel Bookman, at Delmonico's on the evening of Tuesday, April 23.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Levy of 102 East Seventy-third Street have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Irma, to Norvin Rudolph Lindheim on the evening of Thursday, April 25, at Delmonico's.

An Engagement Announced.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 6.—The engagement is announced of Miss Katherine Hun, younger daughter of Mrs. Edward R. Hun, and William Law Learned Peltz, son of Mrs. John Dewitt Peltz. The wedding is to take place on April 29.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 6. The Ambassador from Mexico and Mme. Creel were hosts to-night at a brilliant reception. The embassy was decorated with Easter lilies and American Beauty roses, and part of the Marine Band played. Mme. Creel was assisted in receiving by Mme. Godoy, wife of the Mexican Minister to Cuba, and Miss Mercedes Godoy. The guests included the members of the Diplomatic Corps and 300 members of official and resident society.

Miss Maude Pauncefote, daughter of the late British Ambassador to this country, who has been spending several months here as the guest of friends, is now visiting Mrs. Lodge in her handsome residence on Dupont Circle. Mrs. Lodge will entertain quite informally several times at dinners and luncheons in her honor, and April 14 will be hostess at dinner for Miss Pauncefote and Mrs. Burgoyne, who is expected to arrive from Europe some time next week.

Social Notes.

Mrs. J. Kearney Warren of 135 East Thirty-sixth Street gave a luncheon and theatre party yesterday for her niece, Miss Susan Ludlow Gould. Among the young women invited were the Misses Rachel Lenox Kennedy, Gladys Endicott, Mercedes de Flores, Mildred Gilbert, Townsend, Antoinette Hechscher, Jane Thompson, Natalie Chauncey, Anna Pellew, Miss Schroeder, Miss Brown, Miss Gardiner, and Miss Helen Frith. After the luncheon the young people attended a performance of "Salomy Jane."

Mrs. Thomas E. Shaw gave an informal tea yesterday afternoon for Miss Jane Carlisle, who is visiting Miss Elsie Berlin Shaw. Miss Carlisle's engagement to Frederick L. Allen of this city was announced in THE TIMES on Friday. This was Miss Carlisle's birthday.

Courtland D. Barnes, who is to marry Miss Katharine L. Barney on April 10, gave his farewell bachelor dinner last night at Delmonico's. His guests included his brother and best man, Henry Burr Barnes, Jr., and the ushers, Lawrence Blanchard Rand, Reginald Fincke, Louis Crawford Clarke, Jr., Thomas Markoe, Mr. Robertson, and Ashbel H. and James Whitney Barney, brothers of the bride.

Mrs. Henry Titus Frost, whose daughter, Miss Gladys Frost, is to marry Herbert Gouverneur Ogden on Monday, April 8, gave a bridesmaids' dinner last night at Delmonico's. Those present included the bridesmaids, Miss Kathleen L. R. Bulkley, Miss Grace Tucker of Albany, Miss Elizabeth Lauder of Pittsburg, and the matrons of honor, Mrs. N. Darrell Harney of Providence and Mrs. Witherbee Black of Pelham Manor, N. Y.

Signor Novelli and his company are to give their farewell performance at the Waldorf-Astoria on Monday evening, April 15, in aid of the Society for Italian Immigrants and the Italian Benevolent Institute. "Il Burbero Benefico" ("The Good-Natured Bear") and "La Tempeste fra un Bicchier d'Acqua" ("A Tempest in a Teapot") are to be produced, and then Novelli will appear in a monologue, "Sixty Minutes Too Soon." A number of society women have bought boxes and seats for this performance. Tickets and boxes can be procured from Miss Doane, 18 West Thirty-fourth Street.

A benefit performance of "Aida" will be held on Tuesday evening at the Manhattan Opera House for the Garibaldi memorial at Clifton, S. I. Many boxes have already been sold. Among those who have taken boxes and tickets are Mrs. Lindly Hoffman Chapin, Mrs. J. Ives Plumb, Mrs. Andrew Cuneo, Dr. Antonio Stella and Mrs. Stella, A. J. Stefani, Jacob Ruppert, William Hermann, Harry Steinhardt, Mrs. Sheridan S. Norton, Celestino Piva, Mrs. Garcia, and Mrs. Diaz.

"GUS" FROHMAN AGAIN A MANAGER

Dean of the Frohman Family to Stage Short Plays for Vaudeville Trust.

MANY NOW IN REHEARSAL

Plays Will Be Written Expressly for the Keith-Proctor and Williams-Hammerstein Circuit.

Gustav Frohman, the elder brother of Charles and Daniel Frohman, is again coming before the public in a prominent managerial capacity, as an ally of the Keith and Proctor and Williams and Hammerstein vaudeville circuit. "Gus" Frohman was a well-known manager when his brothers had yet to make their theatrical reputations, and it was he who first employed Marc Klaw as an advance agent. It was recently announced that Lawrance D'Orsay, the English actor, had been booked for vaudeville through the United Booking Agency, under the direction of Gustav Frohman, but the plans revealed yesterday are of far broader importance.

Mr. Frohman is to prepare for the circuit of the United Booking Agency a series of short plays, staged under his own supervision and produced under his personal direction. Yesterday the plans were completed at a conference which he held with Mr. Keith and Mr. Albee, General Manager of the booking agency. This plan is evidently a move on the part of the established vaudeville managers to elevate the character of their programmes and to counteract the new schemes recently evolved by Marc Klaw and Frederic Thompson for the newly organized Klaw & Erlanger circuit of "Advanced Vaudeville."

Mr. Frohman, who was found last night at the Montauk Theatre, Brooklyn, explained his plans in detail. "I have had this plan of presenting short plays or 'sketches' of legitimate value in vaudeville for the last eight years," said Mr. Frohman, "and I made an experiment with one piece about three years ago. Now I hope actually to accomplish all that I have had in view. Of course the established vaudeville managers want to do everything they can at the present time to offer programmes which can't be surpassed.

"The United Booking Agency has offered me time in 240 theatres, and my first piece is already being rehearsed here at the Colonial Theatre. It is entitled 'A Music Lesson,' and is to be produced with Carol Haverton as the star. After each play has been thoroughly rehearsed, it will be given a trial presentation at the Colonial Theatre for the advantage of the managers. If it is voted to be the right sort of entertainment, I shall send out five companies of each piece—just as I sent out five 'Hazel Kirke' companies years ago when I had the Madison Square Theatre. I am not yet prepared to publish the names of the other plays in the series, or the names of the people who will star in them.

"These plays will all be produced under my direction and management, and will have the genuine Frohman stamp. They are necessarily short and are calculated to run for about 25 minutes.

"The pieces must all be perfectly clean. I shall tolerate no murders, and, in pieces of a lighter order, no 'slapstick.' These productions will include no condensed musical comedies or anything of that sort. The plays will all be plays, written expressly for the purpose, and not excerpts from existing plays or manuscripts. They must be as thoroughly good plays and as thoroughly well acted and staged as if arranged to fill an entire evening."

"LION AND THE MOUSE" ENDS.

Played Here 606 Times Since November, 1905, to $750,000.

Charles Klein's play, "The Lion and the Mouse," ended its run last night at the Lyceum Theatre, where it was originally presented by William Harris on Nov. 20, 1905. The performance last night was the six hundred and sixth consecutive presentation. At the close of the third act Edmund Breese, on behalf of Mr. Harris and Mr. Klein, both of whom are absent from the city, made a brief speech, citing the long run of the play as proof positive that the American public was no less loyal to plays and players than the British theatregoers.

"The Lion and the Mouse" now goes to Washington and Brooklyn, where contracts call for the appearance of the original New York cast. Arrangements are being made for the return of the drama in September for a run at another New York theatre. The managers state that the total gross receipts of the play while in New York have amounted to not less than $750,000.

SPEECH BY MISS BINGHAM.

Her Second Effort Is an Apology—Rumor About Her Next Season.

Amelia Bingham made another speech at Weber's Theatre yesterday afternoon, but only to apologize for the disappearance of two of the principal players in her cast and the substitution of their understudies.

The twn players, Frederick Powell and Margaret Powell, turned up about 5:30 o'clock and asked for their mail. They were so thoroughly English that they had never thought of a Saturday matinée. Their parts were taken in the afternoon by George F. Lloyd and May Fish.

A report was circulated last night that Miss Bingham would appear next year under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger. Miss Bingham would neither confirm nor deny it.

PEACE FORSAKES PLAYGOERS

Since Charles Henry Meltzer Began to Boom Himself for President.

According to all indications there is still a scrimmage ahead for the members of the American Playgoers. An election is soon to be held in the society, and, from the notice of an independent ballot which has been circulated, it is evident more trouble is in the wind. The Board of Governors, which was sustained after a recent attack by Charles Henry Meltzer, has obviously to undergo a second siege.

The letter forwarded to members says: "In the interest of the American Playgoers we, the undersigned, hereby nominate an independent ballot for Governors, which we have already sent you. We ask you to vote for them, and we believe they may be relied upon to restore to the club the power to elect its own President and officers, of which it has been deprived by the new Constitution." The names of the nominees to hold office for three years are Charles Henry Meltzer, Eden E. Greville, Jerome Siegel, Emerson, McMillin, Andre Tridon, and Maximus A. Lesser.

THIS WEEK AT THE CIRCUS.

All Sorts of Doings Planned—Orphans' Day to be Kept Up.

Next week will be a busy one for the Barnum & Bailey circus, in Madison Square Garden. There will be changes in the programme and a rearrangement of acts "for the road" will be made on Monday night.

On Tuesday night the Shriners of Mecca Temple and their friends will take possession of the middle section of the big auditorium for their annual "circus outing." Some special stunts by the clowns will give the occasion timely interest for the Nobles of the Shrine.

The authorities announce that the annual "Orphans' Day," established by the late James A. Bailey, will be repeated this year. At the suggestion of Mrs. Bailey the charity will be continued, and Tuesday afternoon, April 16, has been set apart for the purpose.

TRIANGLE CLUB'S PLAY.

Large Audience Applauds "The Mummy Monarch" at the Waldorf.

"The Mummy Monarch," a musical comedy in two acts, was presented by the Triangle Club of Princeton University at a matinée yesterday in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. The performance was repeated in the evening.

The action of the opera centres around the return to life of two mummies, a King and Queen of Egypt in 2000 B. C., and affords much opportunity for fun. The mummies are blown out of the pyramids by an enterprising American college professor, who is assisted in his efforts by one Nitro Bomski, a Russian.

Vivian Dasher was the star of a stranded comic opera troupe. This rôle was played by R. S. Barbee, prima donna of the "Dashing Widows" company. G. A. McClintock was Alexander III., Grand Mogul of Egypt, and J. P. Myers took the part of Lemmon, his secretary. C. Murray took the rôle of Q. Maximillian Smith the Yankee professor, and G. S. Warren played Geraldine, the professor's captivating daughter. J. R. Chislett was Clarissa, a daughter of the Nile, and R. S. Durstine played Queen Egypta I.

The play was attended by a fashionable audience, and the patronesses included Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. John W. Alexander, Mrs. William Baylis, Mrs. C. Ledyard Blair, Mrs. Grover Cleveland, Mrs. Alfred Ely, Mrs. Henry Clay Frick, Mrs. Charles D. Haisey, Mrs. Chester Griswold, Mrs. Richard Irvin, Mrs. Benjamin Nicoll, Mrs. Cleveland H. Dodge, Mrs. Parker D. Handy, and Mrs. J. Borden Harriman.

La Belle Dazie to Dance in Paris.

H. B. Marinelli, the European agent, cabled an offer yesterday to Mlle. Dazie, premier danseuse of the Manhattan Opera House, proposing an engagement of three months at the Folies Bergeres, Paris, and promising that she should be featured in the forthcoming Summer revue which is to open on June 1. A special part has been written introducing her first as "Le Domino Rouge," but requiring her to unmask in the second act. If other arrangements can be altered, Mlle. Dazie says she will accept the offer.

BIG HOUSE FOR "RIGOLETTO."

Gilbert Appears as Monterone for First Time with Great Success.

A performance of "Rigoletto" at the Manhattan Opera House last evening at popular prices drew another capacity audience. Treasurer John Ward stopped selling admissions at 7:30 o'clock, and when the curtain rose on the first act all available space was filled.

The cast was in some respects different from that of previous representations. Mr. Muguoz stepped from his usual rôle of Monterone to Mr. Arimondi's part of Sparafucile. In which he was scarcely as successful as his predecessor. On the other hand, Mr. Gilbert for the first time appeared as Monterone, with great success.

The rest of the cast was the familiar one, and included Mme. Pinkert and Messrs. Bonci and Sammarco. Mr. Campanini conducted.

"Aida" at the Manhattan.

"Aida" was presented for the tenth time yesterday afternoon at the Manhattan Opera House with the same cast as at the other performances. With the exception of "Carmen," this opera has been more popular than any other at the Manhattan. The audience was a large one yesterday and enjoyed one of the best performances of the season. Mme. de Cisneros was Amneris.

SATURDAY'S DANCES.

Last Metropolitan for the Season—Saturday Dances Close.

The last of the metropolitan dances for the season, made up chiefly of young girls not yet out, was held at Sherry's last night in the small ballroom. Mrs. C. B. Alexander, Mrs. Bayard Tuckerman, and Mrs. John Alexandre received the guests.

The cotillion was led by Schuyler Schieffelin, who had Miss Beatrice Carpenter as his partner. The favors included baskets filled with flowers suspended by ribbons, also baskets of fruit, including cherries and large strawberries, bananas, and apples. Then there were pincushions, whiskbroom holders decorated with ribbons, large rabbits and chickens and ducks. There was also an arbor of dogwood lighted with small electric lights, from which the flowers were pulled by ribbons attached to them.

The last of the Saturday evening dances, which have been successfully conducted by Mrs. C. P. Huntington, took place last night at Delmonico's. It was well attended. Lindley Tappin led the cotillion. The favors were fancy card cases for the women and pin cushions for the men.

There was dancing until 12 o'clock, when a midnight supper was served. Among the young people present were Miss Antoinette Hechscher, Miss Grinnell, Miss Natalie Chauncey, Miss Anna Pellew, Miss Nathalie Bailey, and Miss Alice Anderton. George Russell Peabody, James Duane Pell, Bayard Livingston, Schuyler Schieffelin, Aubrey Vibbert, Smith Ely, Dongan de Peyster, Theodore Lawrence Bogert, Augustus Barnard, Peter B. Olney, Jr., Louis Nelson, and Morin Hare.

OUTDOOR LIFE AT LAKEWOOD.

Hotels and Cottages Thronged—Hosmer Orchestra Concert.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 6.—Outdoor life is the rule at Lakewood these warm, bright days. Early every morning merry parties leave the hotels for a ride or drive through the pines or a jaunt around Lake Carasaljo. The golfers and tennis enthusiasts are in high feather just now, the pleasant weather affording them plenty of opportunity for the enjoyment of these pastimes.

Many of the Easter visitors at the Lakewood Hotel and the Laurel House are prolonging their stay another week, and both these hotels are still well filled. Many attractions have been planned for the entertainment of Spring visitors.

The theatre of the Lakewood Hotel was crowded on Thursday evening at the performance of "Twelfth Night" given by the Amherst College Dramatic Association. The college players received an enthusiastic greeting. A dance was given in honor of the students at the hotel by the members of the villa colony.

Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Oakley Rhinelander were among the Easter visitors at the Laurel House. Other New Yorkers who spent Easter at this hotel were Dr. and Mrs. Edward B. Dench, Edward H. Milliken, Henry Bedlow, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clemingsham. Ex-Attorney General John W. Griggs arrived here by automobile with a party of friends yesterday. They are staying at the Laurel House over the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert H. Gallatin of New York and ex-Senator James Smith, Jr., of Newark were among the Easter arrivals at the Laurel in the Pines. Mrs. Kingdon, mother of Mrs. George J. Gould, left this week for Canada to visit relatives. She will sail for Europe in June. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Degnon were among the New Yorkers registered at the Lexington over Easter. The Bartlett Inn, Hotel Wrisley, and the Manhattan are still well filled with holiday visitors.

FAST WALK KILLS ARCHITECT POST

He Drops Dead in Paterson Street from Over-exertion.

PHYSICIAN HAD WARNED HIM

Family Unable to Make Him Give Up Active Business Life — Known as "Pitch-in-Post."

PATERSON, N. J., April 6.—John H. Post, a veteran architect, dropped dead in Ellison Street, near Cross Street, shortly before noon this morning. He was smoking a cigar and walking briskly when he was noticed to throw his hands up to his breast as though in great pain. He fell back dead.

Mr. Post had been cautioned by his family physician, Dr. Frank Agnew, against too much exertion. His family had been unable to make him give up active participation in business. Mr. Post was born in New York City in 1833. His father was an architect, and he followed that business from his school days.

He was a practical mechanic, and was known as "Pitch-in-Post," from a characteristic remark, "Pitch in there," when he had men working on a building.

He was a charter member of the Arts and Crafts Society of New York. He built many of the largest silk mills in Paterson, the Paterson Opera House, Barnert Memorial Temple, and schools and silk mills in Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Virginia.

The sudden death of his son at Fort Schuyler a short time ago was a blow from which he did not recover. He leaves a widow and several children.

CHARLES STRINE DEAD.

Well-Known Operatic Manager a Victim of Appendicitis.

BOSTON, April 6.—Charles W. Strine, the operatic manager, died at the Boothby Hospital in this city this morning. Mr. Strine's death resulted from appendicitis. He entered the hospital a week ago Wednesday, and was operated upon the following Friday. Last Monday the attending surgeons pronounced his case hopeless.

The body will be taken to Mr. Strine's former home, 1606 Poplar Street, Philadelphia, where the funeral will be held on Thursday afternoon.

Charles Strine was born in Philadelphia forty years ago, and his family now resides there. He has been both a theatrical manager and newspaper man, having been associated with The Philadelphia Record and other papers.

For the last few years, however, he has been a theatrical manager. For a time he managed the Tivoli Opera Company, in San Francisco, and also was part manager of the Grand Opera House in Philadelphia during a season of opera.

When Sarah Bernhardt made her last tour of America Mr. Strine was one of her managers. He left her to undertake last year's tour of the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company. The season before he had managed Mr. Conried's affairs in San Francisco.

Last year's tour of the opera company ended with the earthquake, and Mr. Strine lost all his profits, as well as a new San Francisco theatre of which he had just been made manager.

In the Fall of 1906 he undertook the management of Henry E. Irving and Dorothy Daird, and at the conclusion of that engagement he went on the road to prepare the way for the Spring tour of the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company. He was in New York less than two weeks ago, and left for Boston in advance of the company, where he was taken ill. He leaves a widow and a little daughter.

CHARLES WELDE DEAD.

Friend of Richard Croker and Former Police Judge Dies in New Home.

Charles Welde, for more than fifteen years the leader of the old Twenty-third Assembly District, which included East Harlem, died yesterday at a country place he had purchased a few weeks ago in Peekskill of Bright's disease. He was the father of the Sagamore Club in 125th Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, to which Richard Croker and the older Tammany politicians had belonged.

When the districts were reapportioned he was succeeded as leader by Isaac A. Hopper, at which time he retired from politics. Mr. Welde, who was 67 years old, appeared in Harlem as a young man when the section was undeveloped. In East 124th Street, near Pleasant Avenue, he established a sawmill, the first in the section, which subsequently grew into a large business. Later he engaged in building and contracting and made a large fortune.

For fourteen years he was a Police Magistrate. Personally he was a warm friend of Richard Croker. He leaves two sons, Bert and Charles, Jr.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

John Duer Irving.

John Duer Irving of Irvington, formerly a broker on the Stock Exchange, died yesterday in this city after a week's illness. He was a son of Alexander Duer Irving, Resident Manager of the Phoenix Insurance Company, and Ellen E. Du Pont Irving, and a great-nephew of Washington Irving, the author.

Mr. Irving was born in 1879 and was graduated from Columbia University when he was 20 years old, soon afterward entering business. He had lived recently with his brother, Frank Irving, in bachelor apartments at 31 East Twenty-eighth Street. He sold his seat on the Exchange four months ago, intending to travel in Europe with his mother.

He was a member of the Union, Knollwood, Ardsley, and Racquet and Tennis Clubs.

The body was taken last night to Sunnyside, Tarrytown, formerly the home of Washington Irving. The funeral will take place there to-morrow.

Dr. Ashbel P. Grinnell.

Dr. Ashbel P. Grinnell, Vice President of the Medico-Legal Society and an expert in medico-legal practice, died in his apartments in the Hotel Colonial, Eighty-first Street and Columbus Avenue, early yesterday morning, after a long illness. The immediate cause of his death was septic endocarditis, following a severe attack of grip.

Dr. Grinnell was for years Dean of the Medical College of the University of Vermont, and a leader in the practice of medicine in New England. In recent years he was closely associated with the leading men in medico-legal work in this city, and for several years Vice President of the society of that name.

For the last two years Dr. Grinnell had been established in this city as a medico-legal specialist, with offices at 500 Fifth Avenue.

The burial will be at Burlington, Vt., where he formerly lived, to-morrow.

Charles Edward Lawrence.

Charles Edward Lawrence, for many years a banker and broker in New York, died at his residence, Hamilton Park, New Brighton, S. I., yesterday, of heart disease. He was born in New York City seventy years ago. He was a member of the New York Stock Exchange for more than forty years. He retired from business two years ago, when he transferred his seat to his oldest son, Ashton C. Lawrence, who is also a banker and broker. He leaves a widow and four children—Ashton C. and Ernest M. Lawrence, Mrs. James Chrystal, and Mrs. Ralph L. Pritchard.

Funeral services will be held at the residence on Tuesday, and will be in the charge of the Rev. Mr. Carter, pastor of Christ Church, New Brighton. There will be a committal service later in Old Trinity Churchyard, and the body will be placed in the Watson E. Lawrence vault.

Fire Chief Croker's Brother Dead.

Richard Croker, 38 years old, brother of Fire Chief Croker, and a nephew of Former Tammany Chief Richard Croker, after whom he was named, died at the home of Thaddeus S. Genin, 19 Park Street, Bloomfield, N. J., yesterday, of paralysis. His only daughter, Florence, died last week. Her demise had affected him greatly. He was born in Chatham, N. Y., and was a son of the late Edward Croker. For some time past he was supervising engineer in the Department of Buildings in New York and had been prominently identified in politics for many years. He leaves two sons.

Lansing Van Wie.

ALBANY, April 6.—Lansing Van Wie, Albany's oldest lawyer, died here yesterday. He was 93 years old, and was a student until the end of his days. He devoted much time to the study of languages. His family was one of the oldest on the Hudson, the homestead having been established at Van Wie's Point in 1737. His late wife, who was Miss Abigail Perry Dodd, was a relative of Commodore Perry.

Theron Rudd Marshall.

Theron Rudd Marshall, father of Charles H. Marshall, member of the banking firm of Wardwell & Adams, died last night at his home in Chatham, N. Y. He was 75 years old. Mr. Marshall was identified with the gold mining interests in California in 1857. He was engaged in the banking business in Columbia County for a great many years, and was associ

BRYCE TALKS ON CITY OWNERSHIP

Municipal Control Safe When Citizenship Is of a High Standard.

TREATMENT OF MONOPOLIES

Contention in England That Profits Due to City's Growth Ought to Belong to the Public.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 6.—James Bryce, British Ambassador to the United States, after spending a busy day in Chicago attending luncheons and visiting a score of large commercial and industrial establishments to-night was the guest of honor at a banquet given by the Commercial Club at the Auditorium Hotel. There were 175 prominent business and professional men about the board. Red, white, and blue in the form of St. Andrew's cross faced from one end of the hall, the red, white, and blue of the Sars and Stripes at the other. Ambassador Bryce was the only speaker during the evening. His topic was "The Modern City in Relation to the State." Mr. Bryce said:

"What are the functions of a proper City Government, and what kind of work ought it to undertake for the benefit of the community?

"Municipal work seems to fall into three classes. There are certain functions which are vital and indispensable, because the individual citizen living in a very large community cannot do them for himself or herself. They must be done by an organization which covers the whole city. One of these is the maintenance of public safety—that is to say, the police. Among other functions are drainage, street paving and cleaning, the care of public health and making of sanitary regulations, and general building regulations and protection from fire.

"A second class of municipal functions covers those which might possibly be left to individuals or to large corporations—what we call in England 'public companies.' Such are the provisions of water, the provisions of light, whether of gas or electricity; street railways, the telephone, and the provision and regulation of markets. There is also the care of the poor and public education.

"A third class of municipal activities covers matters which may or may not be given to a public local authority, and which in Britain are in a few places only undertaken by such authorities. One of these is the provision of public lodging houses, of public baths and washhouses, and of dwellings for the laboring classes. What has been done in this direction is still in the stage of experiment, and opinion is not yet fixed as to the desirability of making this a part of municipal work.

"Much depends on whether the particular work to be done is in the nature of a monopoly. For instance, the supply of water is almost of necessity a monopoly. You cannot have a number of water companies undertaking to supply each citizen by their own pipes. Still less can you have rival street railway companies laying down their rails in the same streets because there would not be room. This must be a matter either taken over by the city or handed over to one corporation which would become a monopolist, and at least for one particular part of the city. And the same thing is true of lighting. Now, where there is a monopoly, it is strongly urged in England that the profits which a monopoly may earn and the increased value which the growth of a city gives to such a monopoly as that of street transportation ought to belong to the public.

"The financial results of some branches of municipal work are much disputed, and to present general conclusions on the subject would be at this moment premature. This much, however, may be said. It is a precondition to the giving to a municipal authority of any control over public work and public utilities not necessarily involved in the varying existence of that municipal authority, that the authority itself should be honest and capable; that is to say, that the administrators should be upright men and intelligent men. Whether they are will depend on the conditions of the particular city. It will depend mainly on the public spirit of the citizens and the sense of civic duty which animates them. If there is a lively sense of public duty and of the responsibility of each individual citizen for the good government of the community; if he gives an honest vote based on his judgment of the character of the candidates; if he watches the conduct of those who administer on his behalf and calls them to strict account for any misdoings, it will obviously be safe to intrust to the municipality functions which otherwise might be desirable to withhold."

READY FOR THE BIG SHOOT.

President Roosevelt to Fire the First Gun by Electricity.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 6.—President E. H. Jahnz of the National Schuetzenbund, which will hold its fifth triennial National shooting festival in this city from May 6 to May 14, has received a letter from President Roosevelt, commending the purposes of the organization and the service it is doing for the country in raising the standard of marksmanship among citizens.

The President will fire the first shot at the festival, discharging a rifle, carefully sighted and secured in position, by electrical connection leading direct from the White House to the target box at the Schuetzenplatz at Charleston. The President was invited to attend the festival in person, but his engagements would not permit him to accept. Consul General Karl Buenz of New York has promised to attend, and other distinguished visitors are expected.

The German Emperor is an honorary member of the Charleston Club, this being the only association in the United States in which he has accepted such membership.

Sealer Southern Cross Missing.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., April 6.—The sealing steamer Southern Cross, which left this port on March 11 with 172 men, has not been seen since that time, and it is feared she has met with an accident. The steamer Adventure, which arrived here to-day with 25,000 seals, and the Panther, which came in with 9,000, report that with the exception of the Southern Cross the entire sealing fleet has been accounted for. While on her way to this port the Panther was crushed in the floes and badly damaged.

Strangled Herself with a Stocking.

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J., April 6.—Mrs. Annie Hiles, a widow of Medford, committed suicide in her home early this morning by tying a stocking around her neck and fastening the other end to a bedpost. She assumed a sitting position and slowly strangled to death. Since the death of her husband she had been in a weak mental condition from grief.

PASTOR APOLOGIZES FOR BOOK HE WROTE

The Rev. Dr. Warren Causes Stir in Methodist Conference—To Suppress Novel.

PREACHERS APPLAUD SPEECH

Minister Who Wrote "The Land of the Romberg" Leaves Session to Interview His Publishers.

A preacher rising to apologize with a deep show of feeling to 500 of his fellow-clergymen for a book of fiction of which he was the author, and then, amid the plaudits of the gathering, seizing his hat and overcoat in dramatic fashion, to hurry downtown to his publishers to suppress the volume, created a sensation at the session of the New York Methodist Conference in the Union Church, West Forty-eighth Street, yesterday.

The preacher-author was the Rev. Dr. Benjamin C. Warren, pastor of the Centenary Methodist Church, Washington Avenue and West 166th Street, and the book in question was "The Land of the Romburg," which caused a storm of disapprobation in Poughkeepsie and much newspaper comment in this city subsequently.

Bishop Joseph F. Berry was presiding and advising six preachers who are to be ordained this morning. The incident of the preacher's apology gave the conference such a stir as it has not had in years.

Published some months ago, the book at once attracted the widest attention and got pretty nearly every Methodist church south of Albany and north of Yonkers by the cars almost immediately.

Burlesques of Preachers.

In the book, it is said, there are burlesques of a dozen or more preachers whose characters are strangely familiar to members of the New York Conference. They are set forth in an odd light, and two Presiding Elders in particular are held up to ridicule. The book tells of the domination of the land by a big manufacturing concern and of the evil conditions that have resulted therefrom.

The book was suppressed in a woman's college up the Hudson, and it could not be purchased in the book stores of Poughkeepsie, where the Rev. Mr. Warren was some years ago pastor of the Washington Street Church.

When most of the regular conference business had ended yesterday, Bishop Berry arose and said: "I believe that Brother Warren desires to address the brethren."

The clergyman walked down the aisle. Speaking with a good deal of feeling and with a noticeable tremor in his voice, he said:

"Some years ago I wrote a book. Recently, for sundry reasons, I saw fit to write another book. There were certain evils, it seems to me, which should be attacked, there were certain evils against which there should be laid a cry. Severe criticism, it seemed to me, could best picture those evils and draw attention to them. At some of those severe criticisms, I understand, my brethren feel umbrage.

Efforts Not Appreciated.

"Where the efforts I made, I thought, would be most appreciated, I find on every hand hardened, set, pale faces turned toward me. By those marks I find my efforts appreciated least. So be it.

"It appears that I am guilty in having drawn certain characters too close to life. I know a woman author who had the same difficulty, and she said in the next book she wrote she would go back to the eighteenth century for her characters. I shall go back to the days of Caesar for mine.

"It appears that a man can say things in a sermon that he cannot say in a book. If I have animadverted upon any man or woman inside or outside of this conference, I am heartily sorry for it, and I heartily beg pardon. I think I can have that book suppressed and the plates destroyed.

"I am going to bend my utmost endeavor in that direction. I do not care what the financial cost may be; I shall insist that it be done."

Assemblage Applauds Him.

Handclapping started over in one corner of the church and spread quickly over the throng. Men and women, preachers and laymen joining in. In the midst of it the minister walked over to his seat, picked up his overcoat and high hat, and started down the aisle toward the entrance. Hands were thrust out into the aisle toward him, and the apologist halted on his way to grip them.

To-day is to be ordination day in the conference meeting and a number of young men are to be made deacons and elders. The preparation of the six young men who are to take Elders' orders occupied most of the session yesterday. The candidates were W. M. Nesbit, E. E. Hart, Obed Mace, J. T. Van Barkalow, A. A. Vradenberg, and W. L. Comstock.

"John Wesley, visiting Newport," said Bishop Berry, addressing the young men, "found a hell and a steeple on the Methodist church there. He lamented, fearing that in time Methodist churches would have organs and choirs. Well, we've got 'em, and we still survive. Boys, don't fear changes in our polity.

Bishop Berry on Heretics.

"But that is not so with dogma. It is God-made, and I want you to be loyal to the Bible. There is a scholarship that is reverent and prayerful, and when it finds little flaws in a study of the Bible does not shout them from the housetops. There is all the difference in the world between a scholar and a heretic. To be a fossil does not make a man a Christian.

"Abraham, patriarch; David with his song, Isaiah still looking roward, Daniel, still standing in his accustomed place, are with us. Ruth is not a character in fiction, and Jonah is still here, though he has had a stormy time of it."

Closing by directing an attack at professional evangelism, the Bishop urged his hearers to be evangelical always.

"Professional evangelism doesn't fit into our machinery," he said.

The conference continues with the ordination services to-day, and a conference sermon by Bishop Berry in Union Church this morning.

The Rev. Dr. B. C. Warren, who is pastor of the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church and lives near the church, at 1,074 Washington Avenue, said last night that he had ordered his publishers to destroy the plates and suppress the edition of his novel.

He said he had done this without having yielded to outside pressure or the persuasion of friends, but because the women of Poughkeepsie had felt that the book was a reflection upon them. However, the book wasn't meant as a satire on Poughkeepsie women, he declared.

A DAY IN SCHOOL OF CIRCUS CHILDREN

Daily Sessions in Green Room at Barnum & Bailey's for Little Ones.

ALL MUST LEARN ENGLISH

Children of Performers of All Colors and Creeds, but Equality Rules.

The friendly cow, all red and white,
I love with all my heart;
She gives me cream with all her might,
To eat with apple tart.

When Mrs. Minnie Johnson, the manege driver, read this little poem of Stevenson's to the children of the Barnum & Bailey Circus, who had gathered in the greenroom yesterday for their first session of school, which is an important adjunct of the circus, a new idea entered the little head of Estelle Brown, daughter of George Brown, clown, and Marie Meers, equestrienne, and she promptly sought enlightenment.

"Why don't we have cows in the circus, Mrs. Johnson—teacher, I mean?" she asked.

"Why, there are cows here, Estelle," said the teacher. "Don't you remember the buffalo cow, the Kerry cow from Ireland, the sacred cows from Burmah, and the yak cow from the Himalaya Mountains?"

"Yes," said little Estelle, "but they ain't friendly, and they ain't all red and white, and they don't give cream."

There was much to be accomplished at the first session of school, and Mrs. Johnson did not have time to explain to the inquisitive child just why the public would not be interested in such a cow as Stevenson described, so she dismissed the question with:

"You ask your papa, Estelle, and he'll tell you."

What Circus Children See.

Then the school work was resumed. The reading of the poem was merely a part of the "opening exercises," and after it came the first instruction. At yesterday's session there were no severe strains upon the juvenile intellects, but the whole hour was devoted to informing the pupils what would be done during the school year both here and "on the road." It created the liveliest interest among the children, and no wonder, for no child ever had planned for it such a course as has been devised for the circus boys and girls. The teacher told her class: "There will be lots of things for you to see this Summer. In a couple of weeks we will get into the trains and fly across the country. It will be just like this." And she opened her "Child's Garden of Verses" again and read:

Faster than fairies, faster than witches,
Bridges and houses, hedges and ditches;
All changing along like troops in a battle,
All through the meadows the horses and cattle.
All of the sights of the hill and the plain
Fly as thick as driving rain;
And ever again in the wink of an eye,
Painted stations whistle by.

"And then," continued the teacher, "we will stop in many towns and cities and see big churches and schools and museums with things in them even more wonderful than these in the circus—only they will be dead, of course; and 'Doc' Elliott (who has charge of the ring stock and loves children immensely) will take you for rides into the country, like he did last year. Some of you remember what 'Doc' did for you last year? Don't you remember when we were at Canton, Ohio, he hitched up one of the big chariots and took the class out to the tomb of President McKinley, and told you what a great and good man Mr. McKinley was and how a wicked man killed him?"

"Yes," cried Ethel Johnson, the 15-year-old daughter of Spader, the clown who runs the "Brain-storm" automobile, "and we put flowers on his grave, didn't we?"

"Well," continued the teacher, "'Doc' Elliott will take us for more rides this Summer, and when he can he will let us all fish in the brook—when there happens to be a brook near where we show."

Boy's Idea of Best Fun.

"Can't we go in swimmin'," piped up Harry Brown, Estelle's brother.

"Possibly," said the teacher, smiling.

"I guess I'd rather wade," said Verona Ruch Oakley, the three-and-a-half-year-old daughter of Slivers, the famous clown.

"And all the time we will travel on and on," said the teacher, "seeing more people, more towns, more churches, more schools—"

"And more rivers to swim in?" interrupted the little Brown boy.

"Yes, and more rivers. But we must not forget our lessons," said the teacher.

And then she showed them the new schoolbooks—readers, language books, grammars, geographies, and the quite generally disliked arithmetics—which had just come from Ginn & Co., the publishers. When she had given these out to the pupils she told them to listen to another poem from the same book, and read this simple preachment:

A child should always say what's true
And speak when he is spoken to,
And behave mannerly at table—
At least as far as he is able.

When most of the boys and girls had taken their books to their mamma's or papa's dressing room for safe keeping some scurried to the little holes which the good carpenter had bored in the big wooden gates, that shut the greenroom off from the arena and peeked through to see their parents at work. After that there was a good romp with the friendly acrobats and clowns, who happened to be awaiting the tap of the bell which calls them to the ring.

A few minutes later little Etta Diaz, daughter of Emanuel Diaz, a member of the Siegrist-Silbon group of acrialists, was performing on a little trapeze which her father had provided for her. He is eager to have his little girl be an aerial performer, and instructs her daily in the art. For her it is play, and she enjoys it immensely. Wearing a suit of tights and a short, fluffy shirt, the child is a miniature of the older trapezists, and most attractive. Her father guards her carefully while she turns somerssulta and "skins the cat" on the trapeze or hangs by her knees or toes.

Nearly All to be Performers.

Nearly every parent connected with the circus wants his children to be performers. "What's good enough for the father is good enough for the child," seems to be their motto. A majority of the persons in the show grew up in it. This practice accounts for the fact that some names have been on circus programmes for many generations. For 30 years the name of Meers has been familiar to circus goers, and all of the performers of that name have been of the same stock. To-day Marie Meers, an equestrienne, is the wife of George Brown, a clown, and her sister is with her in her performing. The Browns have two boys and one girl—all small—and it is likely that all of them will remain with the circus when they are grown up. Mr. and Mrs. Broda, riders, have a boy of 4. Ignacio and Marie Castrillion, acrobats, have a girl of 10. Fred Ledgett and his wife, known as Dallie Julian, have a boy of 8. These are but a few of the circus children. Altogether they number about twenty.

The coming of new children—by importation, not by birth—is a great event for the little folks. This year the Novellos, Germans, who do an acrobatic act with trained animals, came to Barnum & Bailey's with four children, from 16 to 20 years old. At first the young Novellos stood around awkwardly and discussed the situation in German. It was only a few days, however, before the other circus children made cautious overtures, which, being kindly received, soon brought about close friendship.

No Race or Color Line.

There is no race or national or color line among the children of the circus. The Japanese, German, Italian, Arabian, Irish, and native American boys and girls are intimate playmates. And their association often makes them able to speak in several languages. This is especially true of those who come from abroad.

In the school, however, no attempt is made to teach anything but the English language. The two hours each day—one in the forenoon and one between the afternoon and evening performances—are occupied with lessons like those studied by the ordinary child. When the show is on the road the same sessions are kept up, and then, besides the "book learning," the pupils get object lessons in the various cities and towns, and thus gain a practical knowledge that is often denied to the stay-at-home child. In the Winter, when the circus goes into quarters, many of the performers who have children go abroad or to Central and South America, and there the youngsters get a still broader view of life.

SLAYER SAVED BY HUGHES.

Court of Appeals Recommended Commutation of Broncado's Sentence.

ALBANY, April 6.—On the recommendation of the Court of Appeals, Gov. Hughes to-day commuted to life imprisonment the sentence of death imposed upon Leonardo Broncado of New York City. He was convicted of murder, first degree, and the court confirmed the conviction, but said, "we fully appreciate that there are circumstances in this case which, while not controlling the legal character of the defendant's crime, tend to diminish his moral fault, and on an appeal for clemency should relieve him from suffering the extreme penalty of the law."

Broncado shot and killed Francesco Lapaglia June 1, 1906, in New York City. The evidence was to the effect that Lapaglia threatened Broncado on several occasions, and assaulted him before the fatal shot was fired. This is the first conviction of murder in the first degree that the Governor has commuted. Broncado was to have been put to death during the week beginning May 20.

BOY'S EYE BLACKENED BY SCHOOL TEACHER

Who Is Arrested in Court When Magistrate Sees the Lad's Face.

PUPILS TELL OF BRUTALITY

Parents and Schoolmates Testify—Board of Education Will Investigate the Case.

Accompanied by his parents and half a dozen schoolmates, 10-year-old Harry Pause of 212 West Thirteenth Street appeared in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday as complainant against his teacher, Julius Reich, who has charge of the class known as Grade 2 A in Public School No. 16, in West Thirteenth Street.

The boy's face was done up in bandages, and the skin beneath the right eye was blue and yellow. There was a knob of swelling over the eye that made the boy look as though he had been in a fight. He charged the teacher with punching him several times in the face.

Reich, who is 22 years old, had been employed as a substitute teacher in Public School No. 2, in Henry Street, for about a year, and only last Monday was appointed to take charge of the class in the West Thirteenth Street school.

Pause's father, who is the owner of a restaurant at 72 University Place, had obtained a summons for the teacher, and when Reich appeared in court Magistrate Whitman ordered him under arrest, after seeing the condition of the boy's face. The teacher said he lived at 161 Seventh Street.

The Pause boy said that when Reich appeared as the new teacher on Monday last the children of the class immediately became afraid of him, as he yelled at them frequently. Finally the teacher attacked him, Pause, slapping his face that day. On the following day, Pause said, the teacher again attacked him, punching him in the face several times with his clenched fist.

Joseph Gibson, a 12-year-old boy, living at 241 West Thirteenth Street, corroborated the story told by the complainant. Young Gibson said he was a classmate of Pause, and had seen the teacher hit Pause several times.

"Did you hit that boy in the eye and produce that discoloration?" inquired Magistrate Whitman, addressing the teacher.

Reich shook his head to indicate a negative answer.

"Did you hit him?" again inquired the Magistrate.

Reich replied finally that he only slapped Pause to make him behave in the classroom.

"I am told that he struck the boy with his clenched fist," said William J. Fogerty, a special agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. "And then," continued Agent Fogarty, "he picked Pause up and bumped him down upon the desk where he had been seated."

Reich whispered with his counsel and the latter asked for a week's adjournment of the examination.

"What do you want?" put in Agent Fogarty. "Do you want to get the boy's eye well before the case is tried?"

"No," said the lawyer, "I want a week's time to prepare my case."

"The discoloration would all be gone by that time," suggested Magistrate Whitman, smiling.

"Your Honor has seen the eye," replied the lawyer, "and also the discoloration, so it would not make much difference."

"It would make some difference as an exhibit in evidence," remarked Magistrate Whitman, "but I'll adjourn the case for a week and parole the defendant in the custody of his counsel."

Agent Fogarty of the Children's Society said he intended to summon the Principal of the school, Josiah H. Zabriskie, and call as witnesses some of the older boys of Pause's class.

The Board of Education will make an independent investigation of the charge of brutality against Reich.

NOISES WE HOPE TO LOSE.

Mrs. Rice Cites Specimens and Tells Why They Should Be Suppressed.

Mrs. Isaac L. Rice, whose energetic campaign against the useless tooting of tugs and useless street noises has been rewarded by an act of Congress regulating harbor noises, and by the gratitude of countless sufferers from unnecessary noise, has an article in the April Forum on "Our Most Abused Sense—The Sense of Hearing," in which she pleads for the suppression of all unnecessary noise, not for the sake of invalids alone, but to promote the welfare and happiness of everybody. Mrs. Rice tells of her crusade against the tooting tugs that made night hideous, and which led to the passage of the Bennet bill, giving the Supervising Inspectors of Steamboats the right to regulate the whistling done by boats on the waters under their jurisdiction.

But the greater part of Mrs. Rice's article deals with the larger problem of the future—the suppression of all unnecessary noise on land. Under the stimulating influence of her success, which was due to the fact that she established beyond question the fact that real physical injury was done by the tugs tooting at night, the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noise was organized. She is its President, and men distinguished in every walk of life are on its Advisory Board and in its Directorate.

"The new crusade, which is actively under way, aims at the suppression of such unnecessary noises as these: The blowing of whistles on factories, trains, and boats; the clanging of bells of trains, trolley cars, churches, and clock towers; the loud advertising of street vendors with cries, whistles, horns, and bells, and of amusement parlors with phonographs, &c.; noises due to defective mechanism, such as the pounding of flat wheels and the sounding of improperly lubricated motors; the rattling of loose parts of wagons; noises due to badly paved streets; free exhaust of steam from shunting engines in freight yards, and cries and street brawls.

In her article Mrs. Rice says in part:

"Certainly in these days of cheap timepieces it is hard to find any reason for blowing factory whistles in the early morning to announce the hour for beginning work. Our city schools are not equipped with whistles to call the poor little mites of the tenement-house districts to their morning tasks, so why should it be necessary to summon grown-ups to their work? Besides this, it is the starting up and slowing down of the machinery that announce the proper moments for beginning and stopping work. 'If the factory whistle is necessary,' asks Prof. Morse of Salem, who for years has fought to suppress it, 'why do not all factories sound it? It is never to call men to work, for they are already there; it does not even signify the moment to begin work.'

"Quite recently William M. Wood, President of the American Woolen Company of Massachusetts, openly favored abolishing bells and whistles on all the mills in his State, on the ground that great benefit would result to the sick. Prof. Morse has already cited cases of large industrial concerns, like the Pope Manufacturing Company and the Natural Food Company of Niagara, which use neither the whistle nor substitutes for it. Can anything be more pathetically absurd than a case cited of a file factory, employing a man and two boys, where a whistle was blown that not only disturbed the entire neighborhood, but also awakened invalids in the next county?

"I believe that the ringing of church bells causes more suffering to the sick and nervous than is generally imagined. Bernard Shaw said that the worst of all noises were the 'State-aided' ones, such, for instance, as church bells and military bands."

POSTAL COMPANY LOSES.

Court Rules It Must Repay $592 Collected by Dishonest Messengers.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has affirmed by a majority vote a judgment obtained by John C. Wilmerding, J. Curry Wilmerding, Cornelius B. Mitchell, and John C. Morris, composing the firm of Wilmerding, Morris & Mitchell, against the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company. The action was brought to recover $592.99, paid to messenger boys employed by the company on forged memoranda or bills purporting to be records of messages supposed to have been sent by the firm but never sent in reality.

The company denied responsibility for the dishonesty of such employes, and maintained that its messenger boys were not in any sense its general agents. Two boys, one named Murphy and the other not named, had been employed to collect money on such memoranda, and were well known at the firm's office.

Justice Clarke writes the opinion of the Appellate Division. Presiding Justice Patterson and Justice Ingraham concurred with Justice Clarke. Justice Laughlin writes a dissenting opinion, in which Justice Scott concurred.

ITALIAN CEILINGS UNSOLD.

They Were Held for Duties, Which the Owner Finally Pays.

At the office of Charles D. Stone & Co., customs brokers, at 32 Broadway, it was said yesterday that the Italian ceilings which had been held for duties in Providence since December, are only copies from the work of an old master. The ceilings were shipped to this country by S. Bardini, an art dealer of Florence, for the purpose of selling them.

No purchaser was found, however, and the ceilings remained in the Providence Custom House until last Friday, when Charles D. Stone & Co., acting as agents for Bardini, paid the duties and had the ceilings brought to New York. They will probably be sold to a man in Boston.

GIRL KIDNAPPER CAUGHT.

Moved by Marvin Case, She Abducted a Child in Utica.

UTICA, April 6.—Agnes Graves, 18 years old, the servant who left the city Thursday evening with Frances Sylvester, 6 years old, was found to-day at a farmhouse a mile from Canastota.

She said she had read of the Marvin kidnapping case, and wanted to create a sensation like that. She and the child were brought to Utica this afternoon.

MORE STANDARD OIL STOCK?

A Subsidiary Makes an Increase and Parent May Do So.

Another of the Standard Oil Company's subsidiaries, the Ohio Oil Company, it became known yesterday, has increased its capital stock in keeping with the movement for the enlargement of nearly all the Standard's subsidiaries. The Ohio Oil Company's stock, which had stood at $2,000,000, has been increased fivefold, to $10,000,000. Similar increases had previously been made in a number of other oil companies owned by the Standard.

These capital increases have been watched with interest because of the belief that they are intended as a forerunner of an increase in the capital stock of the parent company. It was learned some months ago that the Standard Oil management had had under discussion, unofficially, the question of raising the capital of the Standard Oil Company from the present total of $100,000,000 to $500,000,000, the intention being to distribute the additional stock as a stock dividend.

It was popularly supposed that this step was contemplated for the purpose of disarming some of the criticism that has been leveled against the company on the ground that its profits and the dividends to its stockholders were excessive. By increasing the capital to five times the present amount the dividend rate would be reduced to 8 per cent. or 10 per cent. and the stock instead of commanding a premium of over 400 per cent. would be quoted close to 100.

"CANADIAN CLUB" WHISKY GUARANTEE

With the object of injuring the sale of "CANADIAN CLUB" WHISKY, certain persons are stating that it is not guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act.

SUCH A STATEMENT IS ESSENTIALLY MISLEADING, BECAUSE THE GUARANTEE REFERRED TO IS IN NO SENSE WHATEVER A GUARANTEE TO THE PUBLIC THAT THE GOODS ARE ACCORDING TO LAW.

THE ACT provides simply that DEALERS shall not be prosecuted for selling Unlawful Goods, if such goods are guaranteed by Residents of the United States from whom purchased, but that the Guarantors shall then be "amenable to the prosecutions, fines and other penalties" under the ACT.

IF THE GUARANTEE WERE A PROOF THAT THE GOODS ARE ACCORDING TO LAW, NO PERSON COULD POSSIBLY BE LIABLE TO PROSECUTION, FINES AND PENALTIES.

Not being residents of the United States, it is clearly out of our power to give this particular guarantee to Dealers; but we have already undertaken, and we hereby again undertake, to hold every dealer absolutely harmless in the sale of "CANADIAN CLUB."

The object of the FOOD AND DRUGS ACT is to suppress impurity and misrepresentation.

Inasmuch as "CANADIAN CLUB" is a pure whisky, labelled with absolute truthfulness, bearing the Canadian Government guarantee as to age, there is nothing about it to suppress.

SPECIAL CAUTION.

Some Dealers are calling what is only a MANUFACTURER'S GUARANTEE a GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE, which is itself a very serious misrepresentation and a violation of the Law.

PERSONS MAKING MALICIOUS MISSTATEMENTS REGARDING OUR WHISKY WILL BE RIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED. FRIENDS OF OUR BRAND WILL OBLIGE US GREATLY BY REPORTING ANYTHING OF THE KIND WHICH COMES TO THEIR NOTICE.

GIANTS BEAT YALE IN OPENING GAME

College Pitcher Exploded and There Was Nothing to the Contest Thereafter.

NO WORD ABOUT DONLIN

Club Officials Say They Expect Him Back from Chicago To-morrow—Good Crowd Sees Match.

If a young college pitcher named Cushing had not "blown up" in the second inning of the game at the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon, the crowd of 1,500 enthusiasts that braved the icy edge on the breeze that blew across the field for the opening day of the New York season, might have seen a close contest as well as an interesting one. As it was, four runs resulted from the mixture of hitting by the Giants and loose playing by the collegians in that second inning, and the contest was robbed of the flavor of uncertainty. Four more runs were scored by the Giants before the game ended, while Yale only managed to acquire three all told, but there were plenty of interesting incidents in the play that followed.

It was not a well-chosen day for the opening of the baseball season by any means, and any other team than Yale might have drawn a much slimmer crowd to the grounds. The enthusiasts were pretty anxious to see how McGraw's aggregation would show up in the field after the long trip across the continent, and they determined to brave the rigor of a day that promised to be biting in inactivity. They were well satisfied with what they saw, although the Giants hit rather lightly, were a bit unsteady in the field, and played far from a perfect game of ball. The long lead and the cold day undoubtedly counted for a great deal.

Yale, on the other hand, played a pretty alert game that was brilliant in spots. It was just as erratic at other times. They could not connect with any one of the three pitchers McGraw sent into the box against them. But, taken all in all, the Yale team showed promise, and neither Princeton nor Harvard will have a sure thing by any means when it comes to settle the intercollegiate championship in June.

Manager McGraw chose Wiltse to open up on the firing line. After he had served three innings McGinnity was sent in to take a turn. The Iron Man was hit more freely than the southpaw, and each yielded a run. Then in the eighth inning Taylor was trotted out, and he finished the game for the Giants. He, too, yielded his run to the collegians by a let-up in the closing inning. Cushing, on the other hand, served the game through, and except for an opening wildness in the first inning that might have ended disastrously and the explosion in the second pitched very creditable ball.

McGraw used fifteen men in the field, giving every one a chance. The only absentee was Donlin, whose reported defection has had the fanatics agitated for the past three days. There were many inquiries of Secretary Knowles and Manager McGraw as to his whereabouts and the truth or falsity of the reports, but to all the same answer was returned that the officials of the club knew absolutely nothing other than the promise to return immediately upon the expiration of his leave of absence to go home to Chicago. Neither appeared to entertain any grave fears as to the seriousness of the calamity that had befallen them, and there were not a few rooters who were disposed to hold that the absence of the unruly might be more beneficial than his presence. The score:

WINDS UP WITH VICTORY.

Manager Griffith Ends Training Trip by Beating Atlanta, 9 to 1.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 6.—New York marked its farewell game in Atlanta today by the booming of many safe hits. They ranged all the way from singles up to a home run knocked out by Kleinow in the fifth, when he connected with a swift one from Ford's delivery, and sent it over centre-field fence. The score was 9 to 1, with the New Yorkers bearing off the larger number.

Hogg was in fine form, and during the first five innings struck out nine men. After his departure Griffith went in the box and amused his backers by bending over a choice selection of slow ones, at which Atlanta batters lunged frantically. The only run of the locals was made in the eighth inning off Griffith, as the result of two singles, a wild pitch, and an out at first. Many thought, however, that La Porte should have made a double play of the ball hit to first, and thus put the "Crackers" out without a run.

There was no feature to the game other than the continued hitting of the visitors, who started the run-getting, and after that gathered in the tallies about when they felt like going after them. When Atlanta outfielders were not chasing safe hits they were going back to the fence for long flies. Scorc:

COLUMBIA WON EASILY.

Morningside Collegians Beat N. Y. U. Baseball Team, 14 to 2.

In an eight-inning game played on South Field yesterday afternoon, Columbia's baseball team gained an easy victory over the New York University nine by a score of 14 to 2. The game was attended by a crowd of about 600 people, who shivered in a cold wind that also bothered the players. Bradke officiated in the box for the Morningside team, and pitched good ball. He was much more effective than Lillis, and allowed no bases on balls, while eight took advantage of the latter. The score:

Fordham Vanquished Princeton.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 6.—Princeton's baseball team received its first hard jolt of the season when Fordham College beat it decisively here this afternoon by the score of 3 to 1. The visitors' victory was due to their ability to bunch hits and to take advantage of Princeton's errors. Pitcher Mahoney contributed largely to the result by his splendid twirling, allowing Princeton only two safe hits during the whole nine innings. Drewes pitched fair ball for the Tigers, but he was unsteady at critical times. Hartman, the Fordham left fielder, distinguished himself by making several difficult catches. Wistar played his usual strong fielding game for Princeton. Score by innings:

Stevens Won in Ninth Inning.

In a well-played game Stevens Institute yesterday defeated the strong nine of Pratt Institute at Ridgewood Park, Brooklyn. The result of the game at the end of the eighth inning favored Pratt by two runs. Costly errors in the ninth, however, combined with opportune batting of the Stevens team, won the game for the latter. The score by innings:

Among Future "Major Leaguers."

Harry Ebberspeacher, who was sought by the New London, Conn., team, will do most of the pitching for the "Mops," the favorite title of the Missouri Pacific Baseball Club, this season, while his brother Harry, who caught for the Sea Cliff, L. I., nine last year, will handle Harry's curves. Tom Denby will cover the initial bag, together with Frank Howe, who will also alternate in the box with Ebberspeacher. The team is complete, and the positions will be determined upon after the tryout games the latter part of this month. The "Mops" had the most successful season in the history of the organization in 1906, losing but one game, against the Paramount Field Club, by the score of 4 to 1. The "Mops" have arranged dates with the leading semi-professional clubs, notably Cranford A. C., at Cranford, N. J.; New Brunswick Club, at New Brunswick, N. J.; Caldwell A. C., at Caldwell, N. J.; Paramount Field Club, at Brooklyn, and Brighton A. C., at Brooklyn. Teams within a radius of 150 miles wishing to play the "Mops" should address Joseph W. Connolly, Post Office Box 1,798 New York.

The St. Josephs of New York, champions of the Inter-Settlement Athletic Club and West Side League, with a record of 24 out of 28 games played last year, are making vigorous preparations for the coming season. The team will be as appended: Meyers and Palmer, pitchers; Banter and Murphy, catchers; Ward, first base; Finley, second base; Johnson, short stop; Denton, third base; Stanton, right field; La Banta, centre field; Squires, left field. Games have been booked with the Rutherford, N. J.; Carlstadt, N. J., and the "Indians," Staten Island, nines. Teams desiring dates should address Edward Finley, care of Walter Quisser, 194 Vernon Avenue, Rutherford, N. J. A suitable guarantee must accompany each challenge.

"Unless all indications fail there will be plenty of sport with the Equitable Department League this season. The league is composed of teams representing the various departments in the Equitable Life Insurance Company, including Loan, Dividend, Agency, Policy Register, Cashiers, and Foreign and Domestic Collections. All of the teams have been strengthened and expect to make a fine showing.

E. Reinacher will have charge of the Equitable Life Insurance baseball team, composed of the pick of the nines in the league. The players and positions are as follows: Lindermann, pitcher; La Mar, catcher; Driscoll, first base; Reinacher, short stop; Steinmetz, second base; Friedberg, third base; McTierney, right field; Hopper, centre field; Biesel, left field; Svensen, substitute. Manager Reinacher would like to hear from any commercial or insurance semi-professional teams. Address care Loan Department, Equitable Life Insurance Company, 120 Broadway, New York.

The Intercity Baseball Association numbers 165 clubs. It includes all of the larger teams with twenty-five miles of New York.

Harvey Day announces that Laurence & Co. of the Dry Goods League has organized a baseball team with the following players: Hicks and Burgtoroff, pitchers; Gillespie, catcher; McGovern, first base; Pigott, second base; Charles, shortstop; Higgins, third base; Appelyard, right field; Boyson, centre field; Smith, left field. Teams wishing to arrange games should address Harvey Day, Post Office Box 1,560.

The next regular meeting of the Inter-City Baseball Association will be held to-morrow evening at Lyric Hall, Sixth Avenue and Forty-second Street. This association is growing rapidly, and is now up to the mark of 150 clubs in Greater New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

Baseball "rooters" of the Bronx will be pleased to know that Bronx Oval, 163d Street and Southern Boulevard, will be reopened for the season to-day with a game between the Bronx Stars and the celebrated Philadelphia Giants. The Stars are composed of the members of the old Cedars, who played at the oval for the last three or four years, and the new team promises to make as fine a record as the old one.

Morningstar Defeated Slosson.

Ora Morningstar defeated George F. Slosson at 18.2 balk line billiards yesterday before a gathering of enthusiasts of the game at Fordham University. The final score was 200 points to 149. The winner finished with an average of an even 25 and throughout his nursing exception was exceptionally clever. Slosson had accumulated 108 points to 14 for Morningstar before the latter started to show his balk-line skill. Then he gathered the points rapidly, despite the fact that Slosson had run 69 from the regulation opening spot shot. The score:

Morningstar—8 0 6 43 51 33 7 52. Total, 200 points; average, 25¼; high runs, 52, 51, and 43.

Slosson—69 30 10 6 0 0 21 0 4. Total, 149 points; average, 18¾; high runs, 69, 30, and 21.

THIRTEENTH'S MEN WIN ATHLETIC MEET

Soldier Athletes in Keen Competition for Annual Military Championships.

RECORD-BREAKING GAMES

Regimental Rivalry Brings Out Big Crowd—22d Regiment Takes Handicap Point Cup.

Soldier athletes competed last night at the Thirteenth Regiment Armory, Brooklyn, for regimental athletic honors. It was the second evening of the Military Athletic League's annual carnival, and one of the biggest crowds ever seen at an indoor athletic meet in Greater New York witnessed a series of exciting and interesting contests. The principal interest was centred in the championship, for which the Thirteenth and Twenty-second Regiments, were the leading contenders. The splendid work of Lawson Robertson, Harry L. Hillman, and O. J. Devine won premier honors for the Thirteenth, with the Twenty-second Regiment second.

The performances of the contestants were far above the average, and many records were created. It was a continual series of new figures which attested the claims of the regiment that the track is the fastest in the country.

Individual honors were divided between Lawson Robertsun and O. J. Devine, both of whom captured two events, while the point trophy for the handicap events vested these contests with more than usual interest.

The Thirteenth Regiment opened the programme with an easy victory, Lawson Robertson capturing the 100-yard championship dash in easy fashion from A. J. Crockett of the Twenty-second Regiment. Hillman's hollow victory in the quarter-mile run gave the Engineers the second win, Waters securing second place in this event for the same organization. The one-mile bicycle race was a heart-breaking contest between O. J. Devine of the Thirteenth Regiment and W. Van der Dries of the Twenty-second Regiment, in which Devine secured the verdict at the finish by a scant two yards. This registered the third consecutive victory for the Thirteenth team, and reduced the record for the time by 2⅘ 1-5 seconds.

The 220-yard dash brought Lawson Robertson, S. C. Northridge, C. J. Clark, and W. M. Miller together in the final heat. Robertson lost several yards at the start, but quickly picked up his men and assumed the lead 100 yards from the tape, which he held to the finish, winning by 10 yards in 23⅗ seconds, breaking his own armory record for the distance by 1-5 of a second. The defeat of Harry L. Hillman in the 220-yard high hurdles was unexpected. He had the outside position throughout, and was twice thrown out of his stride. The finish was one of the closest ever witnessed, Eller winning by three inches from Bacon, who was the same distance in front of Hillman. Summaries:

Point Competition.—Thirteenth Regiment, 61; Twenty-second Regiment, 37; Twenty-third Regiment, 11; Seventy-first Regiment, 10.

Annual Sports of Y. M. C. A.

Good competition and close finishes marked the second annual games of the Eastern District Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, held last night in the association gymnasium, Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn. The most exciting event was the mile run, handicap, which was won by H. Kramer from an eight-yard handicap, with S. Kramer second, a foot in advance of W. Kuhn, the scratch man. The summaries follow:

25-Yard Dash (Boys Under 90 Pounds.)—Won by H. Hamilton, E. March second, W. Reintanz third. Time—0:03 4-5.

25-Yard Dash, (Boys Over 90 Pounds.)—Won by G. Klinck, O'McKinney second, W. Fash third. Time—0:03 3-5.

25-Yard Dash, Senior.—Won by J. J. Bausch, E. R. Jaffe second, C. Hauxhurst third. Time—0:03 3-5.

220-Yard Dash, (Boys Over 90 Pounds.)—Won by O. McKinney, William Fash second, C. E. Burke third. Time—0:28.

220-Yard Dash, Senior.—Won by R. Huber, C. Hauxhurst second, A. Fisher third. Time—0:27 3-5.

Sack Race, (Boys Under 90 Pounds.)—Won by W. Reintanz, H. Hamilton second, B. Hardenberg third.

440-Yard Race, Senior.—Won by C. Hauxhurst, J. J. Bausch second, S. Rignel third. Time—0:58 4-5.

Potato Race, (Boys Under 90 Pounds.)—Won by H. Hamilton, W. Reintanz second, B. Hardenberg third. Time—0:24 3-5.

One-Mile Run, Handicap: Senior.—Won by H. Kramer (8 yards,) S. Kramer (15 yards) second, W. Kuhn (scratch) third. Time—6:00 1-5.

Running High Jump.—Won by E. H. Armstrong with 5 feet 3¼ inches; G. Hathaway second, H. Bruenner third.

Standing Broad Jump, (Boys Over 90 Pounds.)—Won by F. M. Buermann, with 8 feet 3 inches; R. Hinfebern, second; J. Spindler, third.

Standing Broad Jump, Senior.—Won by P. E. Jordan, with 0 feet 1¼ inches; P. Spindler, second; W. R. Mille third.

12-Pound Shot Put.—Won by R. Huber, with 30 feet 3 inches; W. Beppler, second; P. E. Jordan, third.

Motor Boat Club Minstrel Show.

The Motor Boat Club minstrel show, to be held in the Concert Hall of Madison Square Garden next Wednesday evening, will surpass anything ever before attempted by the Committee on Entertainment in this line. This will be the last of the season's events. All professional talent has been secured, and several of the performers are old-time minstrel favorites. A number of boxes have been secured by prominent yachtsmen who expect to be present. One of the features will be the fact that it will be the first Motor Boat Club "ladies' night" held under the auspices of the club.

Balloon Ascension Postponed.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., April 6.—On account of a high wind, which prevailed until sunset, the balloon ascension which was to have been made to-day by Alan R. Hawley and Leo Stevens, both of New York, was postponed. An ascent will be attempted on Monday, when Mr. Hawley will probably go up alone in the balloon L'Orient.

CHAMPIONSHIP BASKET BALL.

Manhattan Schools Take Senior and Junior P. S. A. L. Titles.

Basket ball teams representing Public Schools No. 188 and No. 109, both of Manhattan, won championship honors yesterday. The play was fast on the court marked out in the armory of the Twenty-second Regiment, Sixty-eighth Street and Broadway. Boys of No. 188 captured the Senior Division title of the annual tournament of the Public Schools Athletic League, while No. 109 won that of the Junior Division.

The finals of the championship series attracted a big crowd. They were intensely partisan, but the teams never wavered, and the boys played cleanly basketball, especially for deciding competitions. In the Senior final No. 188 defeated No. 84 of Brooklyn by the score of 19 points to 5. No. 109 defeated No. 43 of Brooklyn in the Junior final by 25 points to 10. Throughout both of these matches, which alternated their halves on the count, there was a hubbub of cheers and encouragement. This was as marked from the teachers and principals of schools of the five boroughs and officials of the Board of Education as from the schoolboy element among the spectators. Lineups:

WOMEN IN CONFLICT OVER GOLF AWARDS

Boston Players Have No Claim Upon Eastern Championship, Say Philadelphians.

MERION CLUB WANTS EVENT

Executive Committee Will Meet Here To-morrow to Act Upon the Rival Applications.

Differences of opinion, it was learned yesterday, have cropped out within the last few days regarding the place for the holding of the annual championship tournament of the Women's Eastern Golf Association. Tho tri-city team match for the Griscom Cup is to be played at the same time, and two applications have been sent to the Executive Committee of the association, which will meet to-morrow at the Hotel Hargrave, West Seventy-second Street. It has been taken for granted among the golfing women of the association ever since last season that the double event this year would be awarded to the Boston locality, and, indeed, the Oakley Country Club, near Boston, has already announced the tournament for the week of June 10. It now appears that, according to the agreement drawn up three years ago, whereby the tri-city cup match was to be awarded in rotation to the New York, Boston, and Philadelphia Associations, the Philadelphians have the right to insist that the tournament be played in their territory, and the delegates from Philadelphia have notified the Executive Committee that they intend to stand by this agreement. The Merion Cricket Club has therefore applied for the tournament.

Mrs. E. F. Sanford, President of the association, said yesterday that she regretted very much that this difference of sentiment had arisen.

"Boston," she explained, "waived her right to hold the tournament last year, and the contest took place in the metropolitan territory at the Nassau Country Club. While there was no formal agreement that Boston should get the event this year, there was a general understanding that the members of the association would allow the Bostonians to have the contest. We had supposed up to a few days ago that no conflict over the award would occur. The Philadelphians, however, claim that by waiving their right the Boston women cannot rightly lay claim to the rights that belong by the original agreement to any other association, and, as Philadelphia is entitled to it by the system of rotation, I do not see that anything can be done but to give the tournament to the Merion Cricket Club. The Bostonians, I know, feel the position very keenly. The metropolitan delegates have tried to observe strict neutrality in the matter. It is not a question of New York voting in favor of any one club. We are

OPPOSE AUTO BILL GIVING CAR AS BAIL

Would Benefit Chauffeurs Who Take Out Machines Without Owners' Permission.

DEMAND ALBANY HEARING

Legislative Committee Endeavoring to Secure More Lenient Regulations for New Jersey Touring.

Automobile legislation in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut has been occupying the attention of the Legislative Board of the American Automobile Association during the past week. Charles G. Terry of this city, Chairman of the board, attended hearings during the week in Trenton and Hartford on bills which, if passed, will affect motorists from this State fully as much as the residents of the States where the bills may become operative. Mr. Terry will go to Albany this week, where he will meet a delegation from the State Association to oppose some of the numerous bills introduced into the present Legislature.

A hearing will be held on the bill recently introduced into the Senate by Senator McManus which permits the driver of a machine, if arrested, to leave the automobile, if he so wishes, as bail.

"While on the face of it this appears to be fair enough," said Mr. Terry yesterday, "the benefits would really accrue chiefly to the chauffeur who takes out his employer's machine without permission and perhaps gets arrested for reckless driving. It would be easy for him to put up his employer's car as bail. This would entail a double injustice and penalty upon the owner, for besides his troubles with an unfaithful chauffeur, he would be forced to put up bail for him in order to release the machine. Automobilists have been trying to secure the enactment of some law to prevent the practice of using cars without permission, but Senator McManus's bill would have exactly the contrary effect."

In New Jersey Mr. Terry's committee is endeavoring to secure modifications of the law in favor of more generous touring facilities to non-residents and in respect to the use of anti-skid chains on tires. No touring facilities at all were allowed last year without paying the full State license. An amendment his been introduced this session to the Frelinghuysen bills, unanimously offering non-residents the privilege of three days' touring without registering, but a fee of $1 is to be exacted.

"I have been trying to point out to some of the lawmakers in New Jersey," said Mr. Terry, "the unsoundness of the discrimination against non-residents and the violation which is caused thereby to well recognized principles of comity among the States. Eventually I hope that the author of the bill, or at least a sufficiently large number of the legislators may be persuaded to adopt the views of comity. If have been adopted in an overwhelming majority of the States of the Union having motor vehicle laws."

In order to secure a modification of the present New Jersey statute in respect to the prohibition of chains as a non-skidding device, a bill was introduced by Assemblyman Dash of Hoboken requiring their use when the roads were in a wet, slippery or slimy condition, or so as to make the use of a motor vehicle dangerous to passengers or to the other users of the highway.

AMERICAN CARS ABROAD.

Swiss Consul Says European Demand Is Increasing for Light Machines.

Evidence that the 4,000-mile tour of American cars through Europe this Summer has attracted wide spread attention in foreign motor circles, combined with some severe criticism from foreign manufacturers, have not been lacking since the success of the undertaking seems assured. L. R. Marsden, the United States Consul at Lucerne, Switzerland, has perhaps expressed most clearly the prevailing sentiment abroad in a recent report upon the subject to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

"It is not the tour alone," he says, "that is causing the protest, but what is regarded as the 'presumption' of American manufacturers, who announce their intention of entering into competition with Continental cars in the foreign field. There is an increasing demand on the Continent for light and inexpensive motors, a type of car common to the American trade.

"In the construction of big, powerful, and expensive cars France has always maintained her supremacy; but the increasing and almost universal interest in automobiles, especially in Europe, where good roads invite all classes to indulge in the pleasures of motoring, has created a demand for lighter and less expensive machines, practically unknown to and ignored by the European and especially the French manufacturers.

FUEL TEST RUN A SUCCESS.

Autos Do Well with Alcohol and Kerosene in Long Run.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 6.—The three Maxwell cars which left Trenton at 10:25 this morning for Atlantic City on the commercial fuel test run, reached here at 6 P. M. Every car making an excellent performance. The run was in charge of H. M. Dant of Tarrytown. He drove the alcohol car, while the one using gasoline was driven by Harry Caywood, and the car using kerosene was in charge of Charles Flen.

The run from Trenton to Philadelphia was without incident other than, notwithstanding the variation in density of the three hydro-carbons used as fuel, the cars all made admirable time, reaching the latter city shortly after 12. After an hour's delay for luncheon the run was resumed to Atlantic City, taking the usual route along the Atlantic Pike.

The official observers were Stanley Y. Beech and H. de H. Robinson, representing the Automobile Club of America. The car, which utilized a mixture of kerosene and gasoline demonstrated the truth of the theories which J. D. Maxwell and H. A. Grant had formed as to its efficiency and its successful demonstration may mean much to the industry in consideration of the constant decrease in quality and increase in price of gasoline.

NEW AUTO RACE DRIVERS.

Poole, Strang, and Owen Will Join Veterans in Big Events.

A number of new automobile racing drivers will be seen this year in charge of American cars in the various speed events. Joe Tracy's recent statement that he will not drive in the Vanderbilt Cup race this season has aroused considerable speculation as to who will pilot the Locomobile entry. Tracy's mechanician in the last two cup races, Al Poole, will be seen in the touring car race of foreign machines driving one of the two Italian Isotta Fraschini cars. Poole is an expert mechanician and a careful driver.

Louis Strang, who was Walter Christie's mechanician last year, will undoubtedly drive the new Christie car in the Grand Prix race in France, and as it is expected that the same car will be entered for the Vanderbilt Cup race, Strang will, in that case, appear among the drivers for the big American trophy in the elimination trials. Ralph Owen will also be a newcomer in the Vanderbilt Cup event. He has been selected to pilot the new Oldsmobile racer, the selection being largely due to the excellent showing he made in the Ormond Beach races and the splendid touring car run he made from this city to Florida in the Winter.

Auto Causes Abandonment of Show.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., April 6.—It was announced to-day that, owing to the fact that comparatively little interest has been manifested in the annual horse show of the Orange Riding and Driving Club, East Orange, announced for April 18, 19, and 20, the exhibition has been abandoned. The automobile is blamed for the lack of interest.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Word was sent yesterday by Jefferson Seligman, Chairman of the Signboard Committee of the Automobile Club of America, to the Mayor of Matawan, N. J., asking him to place a signboard on the road to South Amboy warning autoists that the new bridge across the Raritan River at Perth Amboy is closed. The bridge was opened last season, and materially shortens the distance between this city via Staten Island and New Brunswick to Philadelphia, but it has recently been closed for repairs.

The Richmond County Automobile Club of Staten Island will hold a club run on April 28 from the club quarters at St. George to the Tera-Marine Inn at Huguenot, near the extreme end of the Island. The committee in charge of the affair consists of Emil H. Poehn, W. O. Sprigg, G. H. Waters, Charles A. Schultz, and J. J. Worrell.

The automobile show season still goes merrily on. During the coming week exhibits will be in progress in Pittsburg, Denver, and Montreal. The Pittsburg show will open to-morrow, being the first one ever held in that city, and will continue throughout the week.

Under President Hotchkiss the American Automobile Association has become a great promoter of harmony. The few dissenters of Pennsylvania and Long Island are reconsidering, and the prospect is that before the present administration ends the motorists of all the States will express by their active support of the national body their faith in the adage that "in union there is strength."

In a small building on the grounds of the Peerless Motor Car Company's factory at Cleveland there stands a unique engine testing establishment. Six years ago, the low building has been the field of study for many manufacturers and their representatives, and members of owners who visit the factory. In it the engines, after assembling and having their first test, are set on blocks and run at various speeds for the purpose of taking out "knocks." Those who visit the testing room see at all times about ten engines in operation with cooling pipes connected with tanks and oiling pumps in operation. If the first test proves satisfactory, the engine is then kept going as long as forty-eight hours. By that time the testers are ready to deliver it for placing in the chassis.

A comparatively new instrument for testing the cylinders of a motor car is the monograph, which within the past year has been installed in the laboratories of many automobile factories. Joe Tracy brought the first one to America, a single-cylinder monograph. The first used to test four-cylinders was imported a year ago by the Oscar Leer Automobile Company of Columbus, Ohio. It was set up in Tracy, and used to test the motors of the three Thayer-Miller racing cars entered for the 1906 Vanderbilt Cup race, one of which qualified. Each of the Thayer-Miller motors, as used in the regular touring cars, before it is placed in the chassis, must now stand a rigid two-hour test before it is passed as a perfect engine.

E. R. Gallinier of 230 West Fifty-eighth Street, who conducts a European touring department, which arranges for foreign licenses, duties, permits, &c., says that this department has never before been so busy as this year. For the past two weeks he has received orders nearly every day to box, ship, and deliver one or more automobiles at various ports in Europe.

Walter Martin is driving a new 30-40 horse power Rolls-Royce touring car with a Quimby body. Mr. Martin reports that he is now in a position to make prompt delivery of the Rolls-Royce touring cars, as well as the new Cadillac 20 horse power touring cars.

Good roads will soon be the rule in Mexico, and automobilists will be the cause, in the opinion of Edward G. Westlake of Chicago, who recently made an extended trip through the country with William A. De Gress in the latter's Thomas car.

Notwithstanding the fact that the season for auto reliability competitive events is just beginning, the two Oldsmobile touring cars have three remarkable performances to their credit. When the present year was ushered in an Oldsmobile touring car was plowing its way from New York to Florida. This run of 1,500 miles was accomplished in eighteen days. A few weeks ago C. L. Matheson of Denver drove his Oldsmobile from that city to Colorado Springs, 81 miles, over mountainous roads, in 2 hours and 30 minutes, a record of 32 miles and 4 minutes on the return trip. On the first Saturday in March an Oldsmobile touring car, driven by Ralph R. Owen, won a match race from Los Angeles to San Francisco, 600 miles, in 46 hours and 50 minutes.

Work was started last week for a large addition to the plant of the Diamond Rubber Company at Akron, Ohio. The new factory will add nearly four acres to the floor space, and practically all of it will be devoted to the manufacture of tires.

An illustration of the work and expense involved in combining simplicity and strength in a motor car is found in the model of parts in the modern Locomobile car is found in a factory display. Fifty-three James Jones, General Manager of the American Locomotive Automobile Company, has an interchangeable half-time shaft, having a gear integral with it, is a distinctive feature of the Sterling car. For making these gears to the limit, so that each one will fit any car precisely, machine work of great precision was required, and this necessity called upon the resources of the locomotive concern for a new piece of machinery, which was created. By means of it the shafts and cams are turned out from the solid steel bar, with a master cam, compelling accuracy.

Making the engine act as a brake on steep hills is becoming common practice, but when the foot of the incline is near the car should be allowed to pick up speed before the throttle is opened, especially if the high gear is thrown into action.

Trophy for 7th Regiment Riflemen.

One of the special features of the Seventh Regiment's rifle shooting season on the armory ranges is the contest for the trophy presented by ex-Capt. Francis D. Landon. This year Company E Sprang to the honors with a score of 1,147, the match being open to teams of eight men from each company, volley firing prevailing. The scores of the winning team follow:

SCHOOLBOYS TRAIN FOR ROWING RACES

200 Candidates Will Be at Work on Machines by End of This Week.

CREWS ON HARLEM RIVER

New York Athletic Club and Other Organizations Lending Aid to Latest Project.

The enthusiasm shown by boys at the various high schools over the interscholastic eight-oared race on Decoration Day exceeds all expectations, and at least six and probably more crews will take part in the race. Should the entry list reach six it will be necessary to hold trials for elimination purposes, as only five at the most can be started in one heat. The effort to introduce rowing at the high schools has been attended with remarkable success, a result due largely to the interest manifested by the Harlem River rowing clubs in placing the boathouses and competent instructors at the disposal of the boys. The absence of any preliminary training school for rowing has been severely felt in the past, but with the prospect of the development of the schoolboys, rowing seems destined to occupy a more prominent niche in the temple of sport than heretofore.

Sixty-three boys are registered at the Harlem Rowing Club, where Capt. J. E. Nagle has begun a systematic course of training for the youngsters. The boys were tried on the rowing machines, and will be kept at this work for at least two weeks before any attempt is made to boat them. One requirement will be rigidly enforced, and that is every boy selected for crew training must be able to swim. This is done to minimize the possibilities of drownings from any upset that may arise in the river. The boys located at the Harlem Rowing Club are from the De Witt Clinton High School and Commerce High Schools. More new candidates are expected this week.

There are twenty boys anxious for seats in a boat, who attend the Townsend Harris High School, and they will be housed either at the Dauntless or Lone Star boathouse. The Stuyvesant High School candidates will report this week either at the Nassau or First Bohemian Club, while the Morris High School rowing headquarters will probably be at the Metropolitan Clubhouse. James A. Denbigh, Principal of the Morris High School, in a letter to the President of the Harlem Regatta Association stated that he had posted a notice for candidates. Forty-five boys have signed the roll of applicants, and it has been decided that any boy who may be selected for the crew must pass the school examination, and if they fail they will not be allowed to row. This rule applies to all the schools, being laid down by the Public Schools Athletic League.

The boys from the St. Mary's schools ship will train at the New Rochelle Rowing Club's house. These boys have had some experience in rowing, and will not need the same instructions. Erasmus Hall, Brooklyn, has taken up rowing, and it is probable that boys will make their headquarters at the Seawanhaka Boat Club or the Sheepshead Bay Rowing Club. Judge James G. Tighe, President of the latter organization, is an enthusiast on the schoolboy rowing question, but it is felt that the distance of the clubhouse from the school will prevent the acceptance of the invitation. The Crescent Athletic Club is interested in the project, and will lend its aid to the development of the schoolboys. It is likely that the Boys' High School of Brooklyn will be located at the Bay Ridge boathouse, which is admirably situated for the purposes. It is estimated that by the end of the week nearly 200 schoolboys will be receiving rowing instruction.

Travers Island will be the scene of much activity. In line with its liberal policy, the New York Athletic Club will be one of the most important factors in the development of the schoolboys. Although Travers Island is far removed from the schools, the increased facilities at the Island will more than compensate for this drawback, and Coach Giannini has consented to set apart special afternoons during the week for the boys. The matter of eight-oared shells, probably the most serious question involved, has been satisfactorily adjusted. The New York Athletic Club, Columbia University, Harlem Rowing Club, and other rowing clubs have come to the rescue, and there will be no lack of shells for both practice and racing. No training for the schoolboy races will be done on Sunday, and the time during the week is to be arranged to suit the convenience of volunteer coaches.

AT BAY RIDGE TRAPS.

Crescent Defeats Boston A. A. in First Match of Series.

As a wind-up of the trap shooting season of the Crescent Athletic Club at the Bay Ridge traps yesterday the "New Moon" gunners led the eight-men team of the Boston Athletic Association in the first match of a home-and-home series by a score of 662 to 638. It was a fitting conclusion to a most successful year of the Crescents at the home grounds, and while the decision of the match remains in doubt until the final series is decided at Boston next Saturday, it is the general belief that the Crescents will win a substantial victory.

In yesterday's contest Capt. Henry Kuyn's team did not shoot up to its usual mark, the high score man being Lowell M. Palmer, Jr., with 90 out of 100. For the Bostons D. Hallett broke 93 out of 100, while Dr. Gleason, the best average holder of the club, scored only 80. The scores:

Hibbard Makes Clean Score.

There was not a very large attendance of the trap shooters of the New York Athletic Club at the Travers Island traps yesterday, but those who faced the traps had good sport under favorable weather conditions. W. N. Bavier, the famous rifle shot, took the first leg on the April Cup, but the best performance of the day was that of J. William Hibbard, who made a clean score of twenty-five in a club trophy competition. The scores were:

April Cup, 50 Targets.—W. N. Bavier, 46; F. A. Dugro, 45; J. W. Hibbard, 44; F. Schauffler, 44; George F. Pelham, 42; J. Loomis, 42; C. N. Kuchler, 40; E. F. Crowe, 28.

WANT FOUR-POINT SHOW FOR BUFFALO

Entry List Which Closes To-morrow Indicates Good Bench for Championship Honors.

COLLIES IMPROVING IN WEST

Greystone Kennels Champion Beaten at Pittsburg—American Fox-terriers Are Best.

The expressed hope or conviction of the Buffalo Dog Show Committee that it will have an entry of over 750 dogs, and thus make it a four-point show for championship honors, is not altogether far fetched, as the premium list distributed last week is a most attractive one. Buffalo is now about holding its fifth show, and it has always been one of the most popular of the season's events, obtaining good support from the entire Eastern section, also good entries from west of New York State, and by far the largest number of dogs from Canada of any show held in the States. For this reason the Canadian owner is catered for by arranging classes confined to dogs from north of the line. The schedule has a total of 410 classes, and deducting the 67 winners' classes as not being entry ones there are 350 in which to enter, and the hoped-for 750 dogs for the four-point mark is not at all visionary. The appearance of the premium list was delayed much later than usual and the entries close to-morrow. This will be the last show until that of the Ladies' Kennel Association in New York at the close of May.

Collies have taken on a new lease of life in California, and the classes at the Oakland show were large and filled with many good dogs. It is a hard climate for collies, which lose their coats in the long dry season, and are then but a shadow of their former greatness in a more humid climate. In 1885 Mrs. Hearst was interested in collies with Mr. John E. De Ruyter of San Francisco, and exhibited imported Old Hall Admiral Heather Mint, and a few other good dogs which had been shown in the East before going to the Coast. Others took up the breed for a time, but it langulshed after a few years. Now, however, Mr. Ellery's recent purchases as well as Mr. Albee's and their home-bred stock have made quite a change in conditions in the San Francisco and Los Angeles districts. Mr. Ellery has also imported the famous English stud dog Anfield Model, which is expected to do much toward the further improvement of this popular breed.

The Pittsburg show opened with a very unfortunate event for J. F. Kelley of New York, whose high-class French bulldog puppy, Cadeau, considered one of the best of the breed for his age, died from nervous excitement. The owner had just refused a very high offer for his dog, but declined to sell, because he had bred Cadeau himself.

Pittsburg was a three-point show, the total entries, including duplicates, being 878, by far the largest ever made for this show. The St. Bernard prizes went to the Rananna Kennels of Lansdowne, with Crusader at the head of the breed. There was an excellent entry of beagles, and the Windholme Kennels had on its best exhibits, taking the team cup, and in the winners' class Robino III. was in front. Collies were also large classes, but the Greystone Kennels did not do so well as was expected, for in the dog division Dr. Jarrett's Welleshourne Conquest beat everything, repeating his good win made at Philadelphia last Fall. In bitches the struggle was between the Greystone Kennels and the entries of D. G. Trench of Chicago, who shows as the Trelawney Kennels. Greystone Belinda was the best bitch, and next to her came Trelawney Sylvia.

Jack Holgate, a visitor from England at the time of the New York show, reported on his return that the fox terriers shown at Madison Square Garden could beat anything in England. He also let it be known that he offered Mr. Winthrop Rutherfurd $4,000 for his best two terriers, both of which were bred by the owner. Mr. Rutherfurd would not sell at any price. This incident only shows how dog men on the other side cannot tell the exact price paid for a dog of any reputation, and why American buyers who have given about $250 on $500 for a dog read in foreign journals that Mr. Blank has sold his great prize-winner to an American buyer for $1,000 or $2,500.

Yale "Grads" Defeat Harvard at Chess.

Graduates of Yale and Harvard Universities played a team chess match, eight on a side, at the rooms of the Harvard Club yesterday, with the result that the sons of Old Eli emerged with flying colors. The Harvard Club was beaten by the score of 6 games to 2. Among those who took part were J. H. Watson, President of the Brooklyn Chess Club, and J. L. Lockwood, and W. Catchings, members of the Intercollegiate Alumni Chess Committee.

The Craig-Toledo

$4,000 WITH COMPLETE EQUIPMENT

Do you know Joe Tracy? Probably as a driver of motor cars—a good one. As a constructor he is still better.

All that Tracy knows—all—is spent upon the perfection of the Craig-Toledo. He is the Mechanical Engineer. So much for Tracy.

There is much more of the Craigs, who build the car. They are world famous. What they don't know about mechanics and metals is still unknown. All that they know is spent upon the Craig-Toledo.

We know that there is not another Four Thousand Dollar car—nor Five, for that matter—that shows as much engineering and mechanical skill nor construction so perfect as the Craig-Toledo.

The Craig-Toledo is absolutely guaranteed. Other than those made necessary by a violent accident or gross abuse, we will make all repairs for at least a year without charge.

Ask us to take you somewhere and back—anywhere—any time.

MOTOR BOAT CLUB'S PLANS.

Novel Events Projected for Racing Season for Craft of All Kind.

The racing schedule of the Motor Boat Club of America for the coming season was announced yesterday by the Regatta Committee of the club to include eleven days of racing in addition to the cruise of the club. The events will all take place on the Hudson. The dates are as follows:

May 30—Opening day; club and open events.
June 8—Racing to Bermuda for the Bennett Cup.
June 15—Club races.
June 29—Club races.
Aug. 24—Start of the annual cruise.
Sept. 23—Start of race week; six continuous days of racing.
Oct. 5—Club races.

In all the events of the club the boats will be divided into racing and cruising classes and contests will be provided for racers rating 26 feet, 33 feet, 40 feet, and over 40 feet; and for cruisers of under 40 feet length; between 40 and 60 feet length, and over 60 feet.

The Bermuda race for the Bennett Cup will be open to all home-fide cruising boats of from 30 to 60 feet in length. It will be the longest ocean race ever open to motor boats. From the club station on the Hudson to Hamilton, Bermuda, is 650 nautical miles. The race is not only a test of the boats and their motors, but also endurance and seamanship of the crews, and should bring out a type of boat seaworthy and staunch and useful. The event will establish the reliability of motors for deep-sea work and serve to prove, many experts believe, that the use of internal combustion motors for deep-sea work in boats of a fairly large size will supersede steam entirely.

Brooklyn Horse Show This Week.

The fifteenth annual Horse Show of the Riding and Driving Club of Brooklyn will be held Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings at the clubhouse of the Riding and Driving Club, Prospect Plaza, Brooklyn, and promises to be the most successful ever held. With the exception of the string of A. G. Vanderbilt, which is now in England, nearly all the horses which competed in the National show at Madison Square Garden will be on hand.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Display Strength—Banks Increase Surplus to $19,441,000.

MARKET REFLECTS SHOWING

Discount Rates Down In London, Where Improvement in English Bank Position Is Expected.

In yesterday's short session of the stock market prices advanced again with the same vigor as on preceding days, and at the hour of the publication of the regular weekly return of the associated banks the active stocks of the trading had secured gains running from 1 to 3 points. The bank return itself, which carried out fully the promises of an exceptionally good showing in regard to cash increases and addition to surplus, was the signal for profit-taking, and this was extensive enough to reduce substantially the earlier gains. The selling of this character also affected issues which had not participated in the rise of the first hour, and the appearance of the market, therefore, in the final half hour was one of considerable irregularity. The main consideration was once more the prevailing ease in the money market and the day was practically barren of other news of interest to the financial community. There was more or less indefinite talk of the possibility of a demand by labor organizations for higher wages from the Eastern railroads, following the partial success which attended similar steps in the West, and some attention was devoted to the varying earnings statements submitted during the day by different railroads, that of the Great Northern in particular showing an increase in gross earnings for the month of March, where the reports of previous months from this property have displayed rather heavy losses. Advices from foreign markets were of a cheerful tenor. The Bank of England lost substantial amounts of gold through withdrawals for Egyptian and Turkish points, but its reserves should show rapid replenishment from this time on, since it will meet with no American competition in its bidding for the gold reaching London almost daily from South Africa. This seems to be the view of the matter taken in London also, for private discount rates are now well under the official minimum of the Bank. Sales of stocks for London account were comparatively heavy for a Saturday session, and it is estimated that the offerings from this quarter have been not less than 170,000 shares in the week just closed.

A gain of not less than $11,500,000 by the banks had been foreshadowed by the movements of money during the week, but the return itself made the figures $10,533,900. This is the second apparent understatement of the cash gain of local institutions, that of a week ago having been even further out of line with the preliminary figures. An increase of $6,143,000 in loans was by no means excessive, in view of stock market activity through the week and the shifting of loans which undoubtedly went forward. As a result of the various changes, including the increase of $16,895,000 in deposits, the surplus of the banks was augmented by $6,360,000, bringing the excess above legal requirements to $19,441,000. This is by far the best showing made at this season of the year since 1900, with the single exception of the same week in April, 1904. It compares, for instance, with a deficit of $2,560,000 at this time a year ago, when money rates rose as high as 30 per cent.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Surplus Increases Over $6,000,000 on Cash Gain of $10,500,000—Loans Up.

The buying of stocks which brought about the improvement in prices last week was reflected in yesterday's bank statement by an increase of $6,143,000 in loans. The gain in cash, amounting to $10,533,900, closely approximated the previous day's estimates, based on the known movements of money. There was a very heavy increase in deposits, $16,895,800, which raised reserve requirements by $4,223,950. This reduced the gain in surplus to $6,309,850, or to about two-thirds of the reported gain in cash.

At this time a year ago the banks reported a deficit of $2,560,625, against which there is now shown a surplus of $19,441,225. How largely this satisfactory comparison is the result of the Government's operations with the banks is indicated by the fact that the statement yesterday showed an increase of $12,296,100 in the volume of United States deposits, an amount more than $1,760,000 in excess of the total gain in cash. The United States money now on deposit with the National banks in this city amounts to $30,389,700.

IRON AND STEE

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Despite the increase of more than $6,000,000 in loans, yesterday's bank statement was better than had generally been expected. This fact did not serve, however, to strengthen the market after the figures had been published. On the contrary, prices eased off after 11:30 o'clock in a way that indicated that all the bank statement was being used for was to sell stocks on. The expectation of a good statement was made, in part, the basis for the strength of the market on Friday, and there were many who profited by the further advance in the first hour yesterday to get out of their stocks. By the time the statement came out this selling had reached sufficient volume to turn the market downward again.

In a few instances, notably in St. Paul, Pennsylvania, Reading, and Steel common, this selling resulted in net declines for the day, but in most cases the reaction was not sufficient to wipe out all of the advance which took place in the first hour.

A year ago the banks, instead of the surplus of more than $19,000,000, which they reported yesterday, showed a deficit of $2,560,625. The first week of April last year saw call money range from 15 to 30 per cent., while the maximum rate last week was 4½ per cent., and the average about 2¾ per cent. In the following week last year, the second week of April, conditions became so bad that Secretary Shaw felt impelled to relieve the situation by facilitating gold imports, a thing that had never before been done by any Secretary of the Treasury. On the movement stimulated in this fashion about $50,000,000 gold was brought from the other side. Now the question of our exporting gold is under discussion in Wall Street.

Mr. Harriman's announced intention of getting in closer touch with the public has taken practical form, in so far as the shippers may be included, in a tour afield by his Traffic Manager, J. C. Stubbs, who has just returned from a three months' trip through the territory traversed by the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Oregon Short Line, and Oregon Railway and Navigation Company. During this canvass of the field he is reported to have been in effect a Grievance Committee of One and to have come back with a full understanding of the needs of everybody. In the days of rebates such canvasses by Traffic Managers were looked upon with suspicion.

The list of underwriting syndicates which have found it impossible to unload securities taken over before the reign of tight money was increased yesterday when it became known that the syndicate which underwrote $10,000,000 3½ per cent. bonds of the Washington Terminal Company two years ago had been dissolved with 53 per cent. of the securities still on its hands. The bonds will be distributed among the underwriters.

An offering of $300,000 of the new preferred stock of the Ingersoll-Rand Company has been announced in a circular to stockholders, which states that the proceeds of 2,250 shares will be used to acquire the capital stock of the Imperial Pneumatic Company of Athens, Penn., and that the funds received from the remaining 750 shares will be expended for extensions.

One of the crumbs of information picked up by the minority stockholders at the meeting of the Nipissing Mines Company at Augusta, Me., on Monday, was the fact that the Guggenheim option on 400,000 shares of the company's stock, which was abandoned last Fall with the result that the stock broke nearly 50 per cent., had been taken through Mr. Thompson, and that the stock represented was apportioned from the holdings of Messrs. Converse, De Lamar, Earle, and Monel.

ASHES AS FUEL.

First and Only Offering of $50,000 Worth of Stock in the

CHEMICAL FUEL CO. OF AMERICA

CAPITAL . . . . . $100,000.

SHARES, $10.00 Each.

This company has secured the sole right to manufacture and sell a wonderful compound that, when mixed with two parts ashes and one part coal, produces from 50 to 150% more heat than can be secured from the best coal. This has been demonstrated by numerous tests made during the past three weeks under supervision of some of the most prominent experts of this country.

This discovery will undoubtedly revolutionize the Fuel industry of this country, and it is impossible for the average mind to even estimate the possible profits, as the cost of manufacturing is but 10 cents per ton of ashes treated, and TWO TONS OF ASHES mixed with ONE TON of coal will PRODUCE MORE HEAT than FIVE TONS of the BEST COAL.

The officers of the Company, together with the discoverer, have subscribed to 5,000 shares of the capital stock, and I am now authorized to receive subscriptions for the remaining 5,000 shares at par, $10.00 per share.

Owing to the fact that the Company is undercapitalized instead of overcapitalized, as is the general rule, the $50,000 worth of stock I am now offering will no doubt be largely oversubscribed. I therefore reserve the right to refuse any or all subscriptions, or to pro rate them.

Subscription books will be open at my office, Presbyterian Bldg., 156 5th Ave., five days, April 8th to 12th inclusive.

All stock must be paid for in full upon subscription, and all checks, drafts, etc., made payable to

JOHN KENNETH BAIRD,

Fiscal Agent,

Presbyterian Building, 156 Fifth Avenue,

Telephone 2458 Gramercy. NEW YORK CITY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

This Company is now prepared to accept orders from manufacturers and others for our product in quantity after May 1st, 1907. Prices and full particulars upon application.

POLICE SAVE FOUR AT TENEMENT FIRE

Carry Two Women, a Boy, and an Overcome Rescuer to the Roof.

FLAMES CUT THEM OFF

Fire Threatens Adjoining Houses in Avenue A, but Reserves Stop Panic.

A dozen families were made homeless, four persons were nearly suffocated, a new five-story tenement was destroyed, and another tenement badly damaged by a fire in the department store of Frank Brothers, at 1,575 Avenue A, late yesterday afternoon.

The rescue of the four persons who were endangered was made by Policemen Graney and Seligman, of the East Eighty-eighth Street station, who, in order to save them, had to drag them up three stories to the roof of the Frank Brothers' building, and then carry them down a ladder to the roof of the adjoining house.

According to Graney, who was the first policeman on the scene, the fire was discovered at 4:45 o'clock by George Herbold, a saloonkeeper whose place is just opposite the Frank store. Herbold was standing in front of his place when he saw that the articles in the show window of the Frank Brothers' store were afire. Herbold shouted the alarm, and Graney, who was on post half a block away, turned in the alarm. He then hurried to the building to get the tenants out.

So rapidly did the fire spread that Graney had no more than ordered the tenants on the second floor into the street before the entire ground floor was a mass of flames. Rushing up to the third floor, Graney, who had been joined by Seligman and John Gregory, a citizen, found Mrs. Eliza Wehrman, an elderly woman, in hysterics. The house was full of smoke by this time, and the policemen could hardly see their way about. Taking Mrs. Wehrman, who is a stout woman, in his arms, Graney started down the stairs with her, but he had not gone half way when he saw that escape by that route was impossible. The entire lower part of the house was burning fiercely.

Graney shouted to Seligman and Gregory to come to his aid, and the three managed to get Mrs. Wehrman up the three flights of stairs to the roof and then take her down to the roof of the adjacent building, where the old woman was cared for by neighbors. The policemen and Gregory then went back into the burning building, and on the fourth floor found Mrs. Frederick Theuer and her six-year-old son. They were both unconscious, and the policemen had the hardest kind of a time getting them to the roof. Gregory succumbed on the fifth floor, and as soon as they saw that Mrs. Theuer and her boy were safe, Graney and Seligman had to go back a third time to get him.

In half an hour after the fire was discovered the building was ablaze in every story. Two alarms were turned in. While the fire was at its height there was a loud explosion in the building, followed by a shower of bricks, mortar, and burning wood which made it necessary for the firemen to desert their hose for a few moments. It is supposed that the explosion was caused by gas.

The top floors of the tenement adjoining the Frank building also caught fire and were badly damaged before the flames were gotten under control. At one time, when it looked as if several other tenements in the district, which is one of the most crowded in the city, would go the police had much difficulty in preventing a panic in some of the nearest of the houses. The reserves from the East Sixty-seventh, Eighty-eighth, and 104th Street Police Stations had to be called out to preserve order.

$200,000 COFFEE FIRE.

Traffic Squad Quickly Clears Up Big Jam of 4,000 Trucks.

Police Inspector George McCluskey showed the public yesterday just what the traffic squad was able to do in case of an emergency. The opportunity arose at a fire in the plant of the Ragus Tea, Coffee, and Spice Company, a six-story brick building, at Washington and Laight Streets. The fire was at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when more than 4,000 loaded trucks and express wagons, it was estimated, were leaving the great freight depots along the North River front for cross-town points to make Saturday night deliveries. With sixty men from the traffic squad Inspector McCluskey managed to get them all on the move.

The fire burned up more than $100,000 worth of tea, coffee, and spices, and left a trail of other damages which footed up a total of $200,000. The building covered a space equal to a city square block. The fire was under control in an hour and a half.

Watchman Edward Murphy, in charge of the building, discovered the fire and turned in an alarm, which brought the fireboats New Yorker and the McClellan with three engine companies. Deputy Chief Guerin, on arriving, immediately turned in a second alarm, bringing four more engine companies. The fire spread so rapidly that Guerin sent in a third alarm a few minutes later, bringing five more engine companies and Water Tower No. 1.

Chief Croker, who reached the spot on the third alarm, immediately took charge and was soon at work inside the building with tongues of flame shooting from the windows near him. He remained in the hottest part of it on the fourth floor until the Fire Department surgeons reported that pepper and other spices were burning on the first floor and might injure the eyesight of the men at work there.

Chief Croker then took his men out and set them to work from the outside of the building, but he himself remained on the fourth floor directing the work of the firemen. The flames finally drove the Chief out on a ladder, and he stuck there working until he got a chance to climb back into the building.

The dry spices and green coffee, however, burned so rapidly that within half an hour from the time the fire was discovered the entire building was in flames, which ate their way up to the roof.

In the meantime a great congestion of wagon traffic, one of the biggest jams ever witnessed in New York, had tied up thousands of tons of perishable freight, which had been loaded on trucks along the docks. The Fire Department pipe lines had been stretched through the neighboring streets.

In West Street there were a thousand trucks huddled together, with their drivers fighting and cursing at each other and bumping their vehicles together in an effort to drive out of the tangle. Laight, Washington, Greenwich, and Hubert Streets were all choked with loaded trucks, and al in a hurry to get across town.

The truckmen stormed and declared that an hour's delay would mean thousands of dollars' loss, as they had to connect with trains and boats before 6 o'clock, and that a night's lay-over would result in their freight perishing.

It was while this chaotic condition existed that Inspector McCluskey made his appearance and called out all of the available traffic squad policemen in the city. He quickly grasped the situation, and within a few minutes had his men at work, clearing a roadway for the trucks to move. To do this it was necessary for the traffic squad men to begin work a mile away from the fire. In fifteen minutes the Inspector had all the wagons moving.

Villagers Fight a Bad Fire.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, April 6.—The village of Otisville, eight miles from here, very narrowly escaped destruction by fire this morning, when the Bailey bakery caught fire shortly after midnight. Men and women turned out and fought the flames for several hours. A high wind was blowing, and at one time twelve buildings were blazing, and the Fire Department of this city was asked for assistance. All except two buildings were saved.

FATAL SANITARIUM FIRE.

Insane Woman Rushes Back Into Flames After Being Rescued.

SOUTH WINDHAM, Conn., April 6.—Mrs. Laura Backus, an insane patient, lost her life in a fire which destroyed the Grand View Sanitarium here early today. The sanitarium was a three-story frame structure, formerly used as a Summer hotel, but of late years conducted as a private hotel for dipsomaniacs.

There were sixteen patients, and many of them objected to being taken out without their clothes, and several of them had to be removed by force. Mrs. Backus was taken from her room and placed in a lower hall, but rushed upstairs again and was burned. The loss is placed at $20,000, with insurance of about $5,000.

INSPECTOR HUSSEY FINED.

Deputy Hanson Compliments Him, but Finds Him Guilty.

Inspector James E. Hussey of the Third Inspection District was on trial before Deputy Commissioner Hanson at Police Headquarters yesterday on two separate charges of neglect of duty. One was that he had failed to bring charges against Capt. John H. Russell of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station for allowing a prisoner, John Sweeney, to escape from the station house on Jan. 21. The other was for failing to report to the Commissioner the unsafe condition of the station house.

Inspector Hussey conducted his own case. He made several motions, one that the case be tried by some one other than Commissioner Hanson, as he wished to use Hanson as a witness, and another that the first charge be dismissed on the ground that it was not mandatory on him to make charges against Capt. Russell, inasmuch as Mullins, the doorman, already had been tried and punished for the escape of Sweeney. All the objections were overruled.

Hussey explained that he had been appointed Inspector only sixteen days before the occurrence, and that he had inspected the station houses of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Precincts, but had not had time to reach the Twentieth.

"I think, Commissioner," said Hussey, "that I have the distinction of being the only commanding officer who has appeared for trial here without counsel."

"And you did well," replied Commissioner Hanson. "I find you guilty on the charge of neglect of duty on the first, but not on the second arraignment, and shall recommend that you be fined one day's pay."

HAD PULL IN TAX OFFICE.

Lawyers Got Advance News of Suits and Settled with Profit.

Corporation Counsel Ellison and his assistant, Frank B. Pierce, continued yesterday their investigation into the affairs of the Bureau for the Collection of Arrears of Personal Taxes. They found that it had apparently been the custom for large foreign corporations to compromise for very small sums, suits brought by the city to recover large amounts of personal taxes. A very radical change in the conduct of the bureau is anticipated.

"One thing that I would like to know," said Mr. Ellison, "is how these lawyers who manipulated taxes found out in advance what suits were to be brought by the city. Here is an instance of the E. W. Bliss Company, which was charged with $150 personal taxes. On Feb. 23 an affidavit was filed by the company. The suit was not commenced until March 12, and on March 13 the suit was settled by the payment of $5."

Apparently these lawyers obtained in advance lists of those who were in arrears and then visited some of the firms mentioned and obtained them as clients, with the promise of payment of half the amount saved if the taxes were remitted or the suit compromised. Having done this presumably, the lawyers came into the department and said, 'Sue this firm.' Thereupon suit was commenced, and straightway settled. In almost every case suits were not started save where the lawyers had obtained a client."

State Senator Martin Saxe, who is also a member of the law firm of Saxe & Powell, is said to have been very active in the business of having the taxes of foreign corporations reduced. Among his clients have been the Keep Shirt Company, the Pope Manufacturing Company, and the Whitehead Brothers Company. In all cases the reductions have been heavy.

Under the present law the city has little or no chance of recovering by means of a suit. Mr. Ellison intends henceforth, however, to bring the suits and let the city take its chances. There will be no compromising.

Choked to Death by Her Supper.

While Miss Lillian Kinners, 23 years old, of 12 Fleet Street, Jersey City, was at supper last night a piece of meat lodged in her throat. Her parents were unable to dislodge it and she died before a physician could reach the house.

City Must Pay Big Explosion Verdict.

The Appellate Division has affirmed the judgment obtained against the city by Margaret Shea for the death of her husband, Dennis Shea, as the result of the explosion of fireworks in Madison Square Garden on the evening of Nov. 4, 1902. Judgment was given against the city for $24,266.66, principal and interest.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—A depression central in Alabama Friday night is passing out to sea from the Carolina Coast, after causing rain and snow. West of the Mississippi pressure is low, with one centre of depression in North Dakota and another in Texas.

Winds along the New England Coast will be light and variable; middle Atlantic Coast, light to fresh southeast; South Atlantic Coast, light and variable.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York—Fair and warmer Sunday; Monday increasing cloudiness, probably rain in west portion, light to fresh southeast winds.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Cloudy Sunday, probably rain in south portion; warmer Monday, increasing cloudiness, fresh southeast winds.

HUNT FOR BODIES ON CITY OF TROY

Rumor of Lives Lost on Burned Steamer Starts an Investigation.

NOT TRUE, SAYS CAPTAIN

Two New Steamers to be Built for the Line—Skipper's Story of the Fire.

All that is left of the Citizens' Line steamer City of Troy—a sunken charred hull, apparently a mass of iron fit for the junk heap, and one gaunt paddle wheel high above the water—lies off Edwin Gould's private pier, Dobbs Ferry. Capt. Charles Bruder and his crew got in yesterday and reported at the office of the company.

Late last night there was a rumor in Ossining that lives have been lost in the fire. Coroner Squire announced that he proposed to have the hull of the sunken craft examined to find out if there were any bodies in it. He swore in as a special officer for this purpose W. E. Hooper, who will make a careful examination of the wreck. It is not known who started the report, but it is denied by the Captain and officers of the company that any lives were lost.

The skipper yesterday told the story of the burning of his craft and his successful run to land his passengers. He said that the fire was discovered in the pantry about 8:20 o'clock Friday night. The pantry was located just aft the galley, and it was Michael Smith, the chef, who discovered the blaze.

The alarm was sent to Capt. Bruder, in the pilot house, and the crew were at once called to quarters. A number of stewards were told off to reassure the passengers.

"There was great difficulty in getting at the fire," said Capt. Bruder. "It spread rapidly into the hold, and soon the galley was a mass of flames. The men responded promptly to the call to quarters and did good work in helping the passengers. I soon saw that the fire was beyond control and as the Gould pier was the nearest landing point, I headed in that direction. The landing was made with as much order as though there was not a furnace under our feet, and at no time was there danger of our going aground."

Capt. Bruder said that many of the eighty-five passengers had retired for the night, and had to come ashore wrapped in overcoats. The women were all landed first, and the skipper denied that any one had jumped overboard.

Nehemiah H. Campbell, Secretary of the Citizens' Line, estimated the loss at $190,000, without taking into consideration the valuable general cargo which she carried. How the fire started has not been determined, and the officers of the line are investigating. The wreck will probably be raised. The Merritt-Chapman Wrecking Company will probably do the work.

The company announced that two new vessels will be built as soon as possible, and it is planned to have them ready for the opening of the service next Spring. They will be of the most improved type. They will be at least forty feet longer than the City of Troy.

The last trip was the third made by the vessel since the season opened, on the 1st of the month.

The regular schedule of the Citizens' Line between this city and Troy will not be interrupted as a result of the loss of the vessel. The Lister will be substituted for the City of Troy, and the Dean Richmond will soon be placed on the regular route.

SEA BATTERS ATLAS LINERS.

The Sarnia Damaged in Hatteras Gale —Saw Six Waterspouts.

Three Atlas Line steamships, the Valdivia, the Sarnia, and the Virginia, all from West Indian ports, got in yesterday, bringing stories of rough weather. All were delayed by storms, and the Sarnia had to put into Newport News for coal.

The Sarnia left Kingston on March 28, and when off Hatteras ran into a three days' gale which left her with one lifeboat crushed and deck fittings damaged. During the gale she could make but little headway, and, her coal becoming exhausted, Capt. Duvantier was glad to make the Virginia port. Dr. Mitchell of Fordham Hospital, who is ship's surgeon, was kept busy applying healing liniments and putting stitches in the cuts the crew got in their work about the decks.

On Friday afternoon when the Sarnia was about 60 miles off Cape Henlopen she saw the side-wheel steamer Jane Moseley, from Baltimore, flying signals of distress. Capt. Duvantier ran down to her, when, according to the skipper, she put out toward the open sea without attempting to explain the signals for help that were then flying. The Moseley is believed to have been bound for Norfolk.

The Virginia arrived with her crew nearly exhausted and with seven more or less injured. In a storm the like of which Capt. Gech said he had never before encountered the vessel was continually swept by big seas. Galleys and cabins were flooded and the scuppers were unable to carry off the floods which came aboard.

To add to the danger six waterspouts made their appearance, but soon passed off to sea. The bruised men were all injured by being thrown against the sides of the deck houses. On Wednesday came a giant wave, which broke over the port bow, and smashed a number of port lights and a lifeboat.

The Valdivia arrived late last night and also reported having had a rough trip.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—The sidewheel steamboat Jane Moseley arrived here to-day from Washington, D. C., to receive a general overhauling at a local shipyard. There was no one on board the vessel to-night who could explain the action of the Captain in steaming away from a steamer that had gone to the steamboat's assistance in response to distress signals while off the Delaware Capes.

N. Y. CUSTOMS $750,000 A DAY

Government's Receipts at This Port Have Reached an Enormous Total.

With customs receipts daily averaging $70,605.98 in excess of last year, Collector Stranahan believes that with the close of the Government's fiscal year on June 30 the heaviest twelve months' business in the history of the Port of New York will have been transacted.

During the fiscal year of 1905-6 the daily receipts at the local Custom House amounted to $678,973.09, whereas this fiscal year aggregates $749,579.07. The revenue derived from the New York Custom House the last fiscal year was $200,698,240.93, and, as the receipts to date foot up to $173,152,764.20, it will not surprise the Treasury officials if the current fiscal year surpasses the record of 1906 by from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000.

It is said that the extraordinary increase in importations will soon force Congress to provide an addition to the Appraiser's Warehouse.

Sues City Under Patent Law.

A complaint was filed yesterday in the United States District Court wherein Charles R. Taylor appears as plaintiff against the city, ex-Fire Commissioners John J. Scannell, Thomas F. Sturgis, Nicholas J. Hayes, and John H. O'Brien, and Fire Commissioner Francis J. Lantry, and asks for $2,800 because of alleged violations of the patent law in putting erroneous patent credits on devices made by the department.

SURETY CO. WITHDRAWS

The McNally Company, Water System Contractors, Are Having Trouble.

The McNally Company, which recently obtained the contract for the construction of the first section of the Catskill water supply system, and behind which is supposed to be Congressman Timothy Sullivan, is having trouble with the surety companies, which, according to Controller Metz, have been charging contractors for city work enormous percentages. There are four or five of the surety companies in the city which have become known as the Surety Trust.

Under the contract the McNally Company will enter into with the city it will be required to furnish bonds in $500,000. Controller Metz decided recently that no one surety company shall go on the bond of a contractor for more than a certain per cent. of its capital stock. The McNally Company had the necessary five sureties until yesterday, when the Empire State Surety Company withdrew, leaving the whole matter up in the air. The company has until Monday to get another company to take the place of the Empire. If it fails Mr. Metz will advise the procuring of private surety.

There are eleven surety companies in the city, and the majority of them are fighting Controller Metz. According to Mr. Metz, they put up rates until they were charging contractors as high as 10 per cent., and their rates never went below 2½ per cent. While the contractor, nominally, had to pay this, it really came out of the City Treasury, because the cost of the bond was figured in the bid.

When the so-called Surety Trust put up its rates Mr. Metz advised contractors to procure private surety, and this was done in the case of the Ryan-Parker Company, which obtained a contract for the building of the Manhattan Bridge. The surety companies wanted the contractors on that contract to pay a premium aggregating $5,000 on a contract worth about $150,000, whereas about 1 per cent. is considered a fair premium.

SHOT IN CLASH OF GANGS.

Two Men Wounded, One Perhaps Mortally, in East Side Street Fusillade.

Straggling members of the "Humpty" Jackson gang and another gang clashed at Fourteenth Street and Avenue A about midnight last night, and in the fusillade of shots that were exchanged two bystanders were shot, one perhaps mortally. The police of the East Twenty-second Street Station sent out thirty reserves on the jump, but no arrests were made.

The man who will probably die is John McCullen, a street-car conductor of 501 East Fourteenth Street. He ran out of Thomas Kelly's saloon, on the corner, when the shooting began, and was shot in the abdomen. John Elliott of 932 First Avenue staggered into the saloon a few minutes later with a hole in the top of his head. Both were taken to Bellevue Hospital.

When the reserves were called out they found at Fourteenth Street a mob of 1,000 people in front of Kelly's saloon. The police learned that McCullen was a member of a party drinking in the saloon when the shooting began. He put down his glass, said "Here's some fun, boys," and in spite of warnings ran into the street. As he passed through the door he fell to the sidewalk, shot. The police hunted through the neighborhood, but got no trace of the members of the gang.

WILMERDING SEEKS DIVORCE.

Names James Coates of London, to Whom His Wife Is Married.

A suit for absolute divorce has been begun by John C. Wilmerding against Marie de Lee Wilmerding. An order for the service of the summons on the defendant by publication was signed yesterday by Supreme Court Justice MacLean.

It is declared in the petition for the order that Mrs. Wilmerding now lives at 44 Ashworth Mansions, Elgin Avenue, London. Mr. and Mrs. Wilmerding were married in the chantry of Grace Church on March 24, 1892. They separated in 1897, and since then the defendant has lived in Europe.

The complainant states that after the separation Mrs. Wilmerding married James Coates in London on Jan. 14 of this year. In the application for her license to marry Coates she described herself as a daughter of Vanderbilt Allen, deceased, a Colonel in the Egyptian Army.

REAL JOURNALISTS NOW.

Columbia Spectator Editors Proud of Their First Libel Suit.

College journalism at Columbia received a blow yesterday when the students who publish The Daily Spectator learned that a hoax which they published was likely to get them into trouble with the authorities. They are also made defendants in a $5,000 libel suit.

The suit has been brought by C. E. T. Scharps, a former newspaper correspondent at Columbia. He made an offer of a cup for athletics which was criticised in a letter published in The Spectator. On this the action for libel is based.

HUNGER MAY END STRIKE.

Shipbuilders Out at Lorain Are Nearly Penniless.

Special to The New York Times.

LORAIN, Ohio, April 6.—The complaints of hungry wives and children are likely to end the strike of the shipbuilders at the yards of the American Shipbuilding Company here. The strikers, hundreds in number, have very little money and cannot hold out much longer.

Manager La Marche of the shipyards said to-night that his company had contracted with the American Building Industries Association of New York for 1,000 strike-breakers, and that they would begin to arrive soon.

The steel plant of the United States Steel Corporation closed down to-night for two weeks for repairs, and 8,000 men are idle. As these steel workers are all union men, it is feared that they will espouse the cause of the striking shipbuilders and that serious trouble will result. The authorities share this fear, and Mayor King has ordered Capt. Grove of Company F of the Fifth Regiment to keep his men at the armory, ready for a call at a moment's notice.

A crowd of strikers attempted to-day to hold up a wagon carrying bread to the shipyards. When the driver refused to halt stones and clubs were thrown at him. The driver drew a revolver, and the strikers retreated.

President Bird of the local branch of the Shipbuilders' Union refused to-day to confirm or deny the report that no further strike benefits were being received by the strikers.

STRIKING PAINTERS WARNED.

Arbitrators Will Declare a Lockout Unless They Return To-morrow.

The Executive Committee of the General Arbitration Board of Building Employers and Unions yesterday ordered the Brotherhood of Painters to return all its men to work at once. They were ordered out on strike a week ago.

It was estimated yesterday that about 1,500 members of the Brotherhood of Painters are on strike in violation of the arbitration agreement. If they are not all back at work to-morrow the union painters will be locked out, and possibly the open shop will be declared.

Before the committee issued its order it heard complaints from representatives of the two associations of employers and then representatives of the union. The latter said they were forced to strike because they could not obtain advances in wages by any other means.

TO BREAK BOSTON STRIKE.

300 Outside Teamsters to Go to Work on Monday.

BOSTON, April 6.—A special train brought 135 men to-day to take the places of striking teamsters here. It is understood that an effort to start teams will be made by the several firms whose business has been tied up by the strike. There were few teams of the firms affected by the strike on the street to-day.

It was announced this afternoon that 175 more strike-breakers and detectives would leave New York for Boston to-night. They will go to work on Monday.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT AT WOODLAWN CURVE

Car of a New Haven Train Jolts Over the Ties When an Axle Breaks.

PASSENGERS IN A PANIC

Nobody Hurt, but Traffic Delayed Several Hours—Derailment Near Grand Central.

Passengers on the Boston express of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Road, running south on the New York Central tracks and due at the Grand Central Station at 3:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, were thrown into panic when the train began to bump and jolt over the tracks and ties on the Woodlawn curve but a few rods from where the fatal wreck of the White Plains express occurred on Feb. 16. The train was traveling at a fair speed along the south express track, known as Track No. 1, and it swayed and smashed its way along for some distance before the engineer could bring it to a stop. No one was hurt.

At the first shock the conductor had signaled to the engineer for brakes. Once the train had been halted, a hasty investigation showed that the axle on the rear truck of a Pullman car had snapped in half.

The train was made up of the Pullman and four day cars, the Pullman following next after the tender. The jolting of this car, which was thrown from the track when the truck dropped down onto the ties, was communicated to the other cars, although these did not leave the rails.

As soon as it was found that the train could not progress word of the accident was wired to the Grand Central Station. From there a wrecking train and crew were hurried to the scene, and a relief train was made up. It was more than an hour, however, before either of the trains reached the stalled express.

Then the passengers were transferred to the second train, an electric one, and carried to the Grand Central. Many, however, who had tired of the wait had left the train and reached this city by trolley.

So badly had the tracks and ties been damaged that it was found necessary to use track No. 2 for all incoming trains. Up to a late hour last night the Boston express still blocked the south express tracks.

In the New York Central yards, near the temporary Lexington Avenue station, at 1:50 o'clock yesterday afternoon, a partial derailment frightened many passengers on train No. 138, an express from White Plains, and delayed traffic for about an hour.

The rear truck of the last car ran on to another track than that which carried the rest of the train. The cause had not been determined, officials of the company said, but it looked as though the towerman had thrown the switch before the train had passed. It was a multiple unit train, like those in the Subway, and the motorman, A. Schuck, stopped it within twenty feet, so the car that was trying to run in two directions was not damaged, though it was severely jolted.

The passengers rushed excitedly for the doors and climbed out onto the tracks, with many a shouting warning against the third rail, though there was no danger, because the contact rail is covered. Nobody was hurt.

THE WORK HORSE PARADE.

Competition Arranged by S. P. C. A. Auxilliary to be Held Decoration Day.

Society is much interested in the work-horse parade arranged by the Woman's Auxiliary of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of which Mrs. Cadwalader Jones is President, Mrs. Edward Wharton Vice President, Mrs. James Speyer Treasurer, and Mrs. F. D. S. Bethune Secretary pro tem. The parade will take place on the morning of Decoration Day. The line of march will extend from Washington Square to Madison Square, and the parade will be held after the awards and prizes have been given. The reviewing stand will be in Madison Square. This is the first time such a parade has been attempted in New York, although Boston and London have found them a wonderful incentive to drivers and owners to care for their horses properly.

Prizes are to be given those longest in charge of their teams and for those whose horses show the best care. The prizes are to consist of cash, diplomas, and badges. It costs about $6,000 the first year for such parades, including the prizes, and every one interested in the welfare of animals is invited to contribute. Checks may be sent to Mrs. James Speyer, Treasurer, 257 Madison Avenue. Many contributions have been received since the project first became public, but it is only within two or three days that Memorial Day was decided upon for the parade.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary is composed of well-known women. They are Mrs. Gordon Knox Bell, Mrs. F. D. S. Bethune, Miss Katharine Cary, Miss E. Mabel Clark, Miss M. H. Dehon, Mrs. Thomas L. Manson, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Frederick W. Whitridge, and Miss Marie Winthrop.

Many men prominent in society have consented to act as a Board of Directors for the parade, and of this board Col. William Jay, President of the Coaching Club, is President, Thomas F. McCarthy is Vice President and Gordon Macdonald Treasurer. The rest of the committee is made up of August Belmont, George Blumenthal, G. Howard Davison, Stuyvesant Fish, James W. Gerard, Hugh J. Grant, Archer M. Huntington, Adolph Lewisohn, W. Goadby Loew, Clarence H. Mackay, Paul Morton, Leonard E. Opdyke, M. Taylor Pyne, Reginald Rives, Douglas Robinson, William D. Sloane, Frank K. Sturgis, Henri P. Wertheim, James T. Woodward, Thomas Darlington, Health Commissioner; Mosee Herrman, Park Commissioner, and Francis J. Lantry, Fire Commissioner.

Undertaker W. J. Hart Bankrupt.

William J. Hart, general manager of the American Funeral Corporation, at 507 Madison Avenue, and for several years one of the undertakers for St. Patrick's Cathedral, yesterday filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities $61,256 and no assets. Among the items of Hart's indebtedness are $18,000 borrowed from Charles J. Flood, $7,000 in notes indorsed by Thomas J. McLaughlin and $8,000 in damages to J. A. Wendle of Stamford, Conn.

THE THAW TRIAL NEARING ITS END

Only an Hour Needed to Complete the Taking of Testimony.

DELMAS WANTS TWO DAYS

For His Summing Up—Not Likely to Recalle Dr. Hamilton — Thaw Happy in Hope of Release.

With Mr. Delmas and Mr. Jerome hard at work yesterday on their speeches in the summing up of the Thaw trial, and with Harry K. Thaw talking over with his wife the plans he has formed for the release to which he looks forward confidently, there appeared every prospect yesterday that the long-drawn-out case will soon come to a close. The only thing which is now at all likely to cause any delay is the possibility of a renewed examination of Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton.

He is still on the stand and was in attendance on the court at the last sitting, in case he should be called for, as soon as the report of the commission had been disposed of. Some of the lawyers for the defense are of the opinion that, as he cannot now be questioned about the present condition of the defendant, it would be a good thing to ask him if Thaw was not insane at the moment of the killing. Other counsel for the defense, however, believe that the jury is weary of alienist testimony, and that the sooner Mr. Delmas gets fairly started in his summing up the better.

It was suggested to Mr. McPike yesterday that there was a chance his partner might weary the jury if he spoke for two days, as it has been said he is meditating doing.

"I don't see how it is possible for any one to sum up the evidence of two months in one day," replied Mr. McPike. "As for wearying the jury, I never knew Mr. Delmas to do that. I have known him for twenty years, and heard him sum up in very many trials, and he has always kept the jurors interested as long as he was addressing them."

Mr. Hartridge yesterday afternoon discussed the case and expressed the opinion that not more than an hour would be consumed to-morrow morning in rounding out the evidence on both sides.

"We could traverse some of the statements of Hummel," he said, "but I hardly think it would be worth while."

"That would involve recalling Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw?" was suggested.

"It might," he replied; "but I don't want to say so, as it is not settled, and I might give you a wrong lead."

Mr. Hartridge had this to say about the District Attorney's attitude toward the case:

"I don't see how Mr. Jerome," he said, "can consistently ask the jury to convict Thaw. He has declared his own personal belief in his insanity, and he should now ask the Judge to instruct the jury to bring in a verdict of 'Not guilty.' We have had the evidence of fifteen experts in this case, and they all agree that Thaw was insane at the time of the killing. But part of them think he is able to consult with counsel now, and part of them think he cannot. There is a hopeless division among them. In my own mind I am quite sure that he was out of his mind on June 25 last, but I know that the rest in the Tombs has restored his balance and that he is now perfectly capable of advising his counsel."

Mr. Hartridge explained why he had been called before the Lunacy Commission when Mr. Jerome and all the other lawyers were excluded. He said that he had told the defendant to answer everything except questions touching upon the trial. Thaw followed his instructions, and the Commissioners summoned him to modify them with regard to a certain matter they wished to probe. He immediately told Thaw to answer freely, and that was all he heard of the proceedings before the commission.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw visited her husband yesterday as soon as the hour for visitors arrived and stayed with him for the whole time allowed. Mrs. William Thaw came down later in the morning. They appeared in the best of spirits, and the effect of the decision of the Lunacy Commission upon the defendant himself has been marked. It is understood that in the event of Thaw being released, the family will not be willing that he should go away alone with his wife for any prolonged time. They believe that his health will require great care, and that it will be well for him to have others with him to see that he looks after himself.

PORT TERRE CLUB'S HOME.

Built at Port Jefferson, L. I., in the Early English Style.

The newest, and what is said to be the most elaborate country clubhouse on Long Island is to be the new home of the Port Terre Club, at Port Jefferson. The building is of the early English type, broken by innumerable gables and balconies. There is a clock tower, and a particularly elaborate main entrance, the carvings over which show the monogram of the club. The house is 180 feet above the water, and from the dining piazza a splendid view will be had of the Sound.

The interior finishings are of white enamel and green throughout. There are two private dining rooms, a living room, a ladies' writing room and parlor, and over forty rooms for use of the members. All of the furniture is either bird's-eye maple or mahogany. The club garage is said to be the finest on Long Island.

The grounds, which were laid out by Charles W. Leavitt, Jr., contain four tennis courts and a bowling green.

BUCKET FELL SEVENTY FEET.

Two Workmen Hurt in Pennsylvania Station Excavation.

A steel hoisting wire which was lifting a bucket filled with cement broke yesterday afternoon, and pieces of the rope and bucket fell about seventy feet, injuring two Italians who were working in the Pennsylvania excavation at Thirty-first Street and Eighth Avenue.

The men were hurried to the Roosevelt Hospital, where it is said that their condition was serious. One man, whose name could not be had, was found to be suffering from a fractured skull, and it is thought that he will die.

About a dozen men were working at the bottom of the excavation, where the contractors are erecting a cement wall; but all got away but the two. One is Rondello Calocu, 45 years old, who lives in West Forty-fifth Street. All information about the accident was refused by the representatives of the contractors.

TRAIN HITS WAGON, KILLS THE DRIVER

Wreckage Tears the Steps from a Long Island Road Express.

GOING 60 MILES AN HOUR

Accident at a Crossing in Laurel Hill, Near Where Many More Have Occurred.

While running through Laurel Hill, Long Island, yesterday afternoon at a rate of speed said to have been about a mile a minute, the Port Jefferson express on the Long Island Railroad struck an ice wagon belonging to the American Ice Company. Peter Short of Borden Avenue, Long Island City, was so badly injured that he died in an ambulance on the way to St. John's Hospital. Both horses were killed and the wreck of the wagon scraped along the train for a distance of six cars, carrying away woodwork and smashing every one of the steps. There was almost a panic among the 150 passengers on board.

The Laurel Hill crossing is reached by a broad bend of the road, and is but seldom used. It is on a down grade, which runs all the way to the station in Long Island City, and it is over this stretch of grade that engineers usually make up lost time. The Port Jefferson express was due in Long Island City at 4:10 o'clock, and, according to witnesses, Engineer Coglan was pushing her along at about sixty miles an hour.

Short was driving in the direction of Brooklyn and his wagon approached the crossing at a rather fast rate of speed. He caught sight of the train just before the engine struck his wagon and leaned forward as though to urge his horses on, when the engine struck the vehicle in the middle. The man was thrown against the side of the wagon and dragged some feet before he rolled clear of the wreck.

As the train plunged forward the crashing and bumping of the wagon against the steps added to the excitement occasioned by the collision and the passengers were much frightened before the train could be brought to a stop. Many of the passengers were bruised and cut by being thrown from their seats and by flying glass, but no one was seriously hurt.

The crossing where the accident occurred is just a block west of the Penny Bridge crossing, where there have been many accidents.

PSI U'S TO MEET THIS WEEK.

Six Hundred Fraters Coming to the National Convention.

The Seventy-fourth annual convention of the Psi Upsilon fraternity will be held in this city this week, with the Delta Chapter of the New York University. The convention is expected to be the largest ever held by the fraternity, and already more than six hundred members have signified their intention of coming.

The convention will meet on Thursday evening, when the New York University Chapter will give a reception and smoker to the delegates and visitors at the Waldorf-Astoria, which is to be the headquarters of the convention. The executive and business sessions of the convention will be held in the Delta Chapter house on University Heights on the morning and afternoon of Friday.

The annual dinner will be held in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on Friday night. Among the well-known members of the fraternity who will speak are Henry W. Taft, brother of the Secretary of War; John B. Stanchfield,

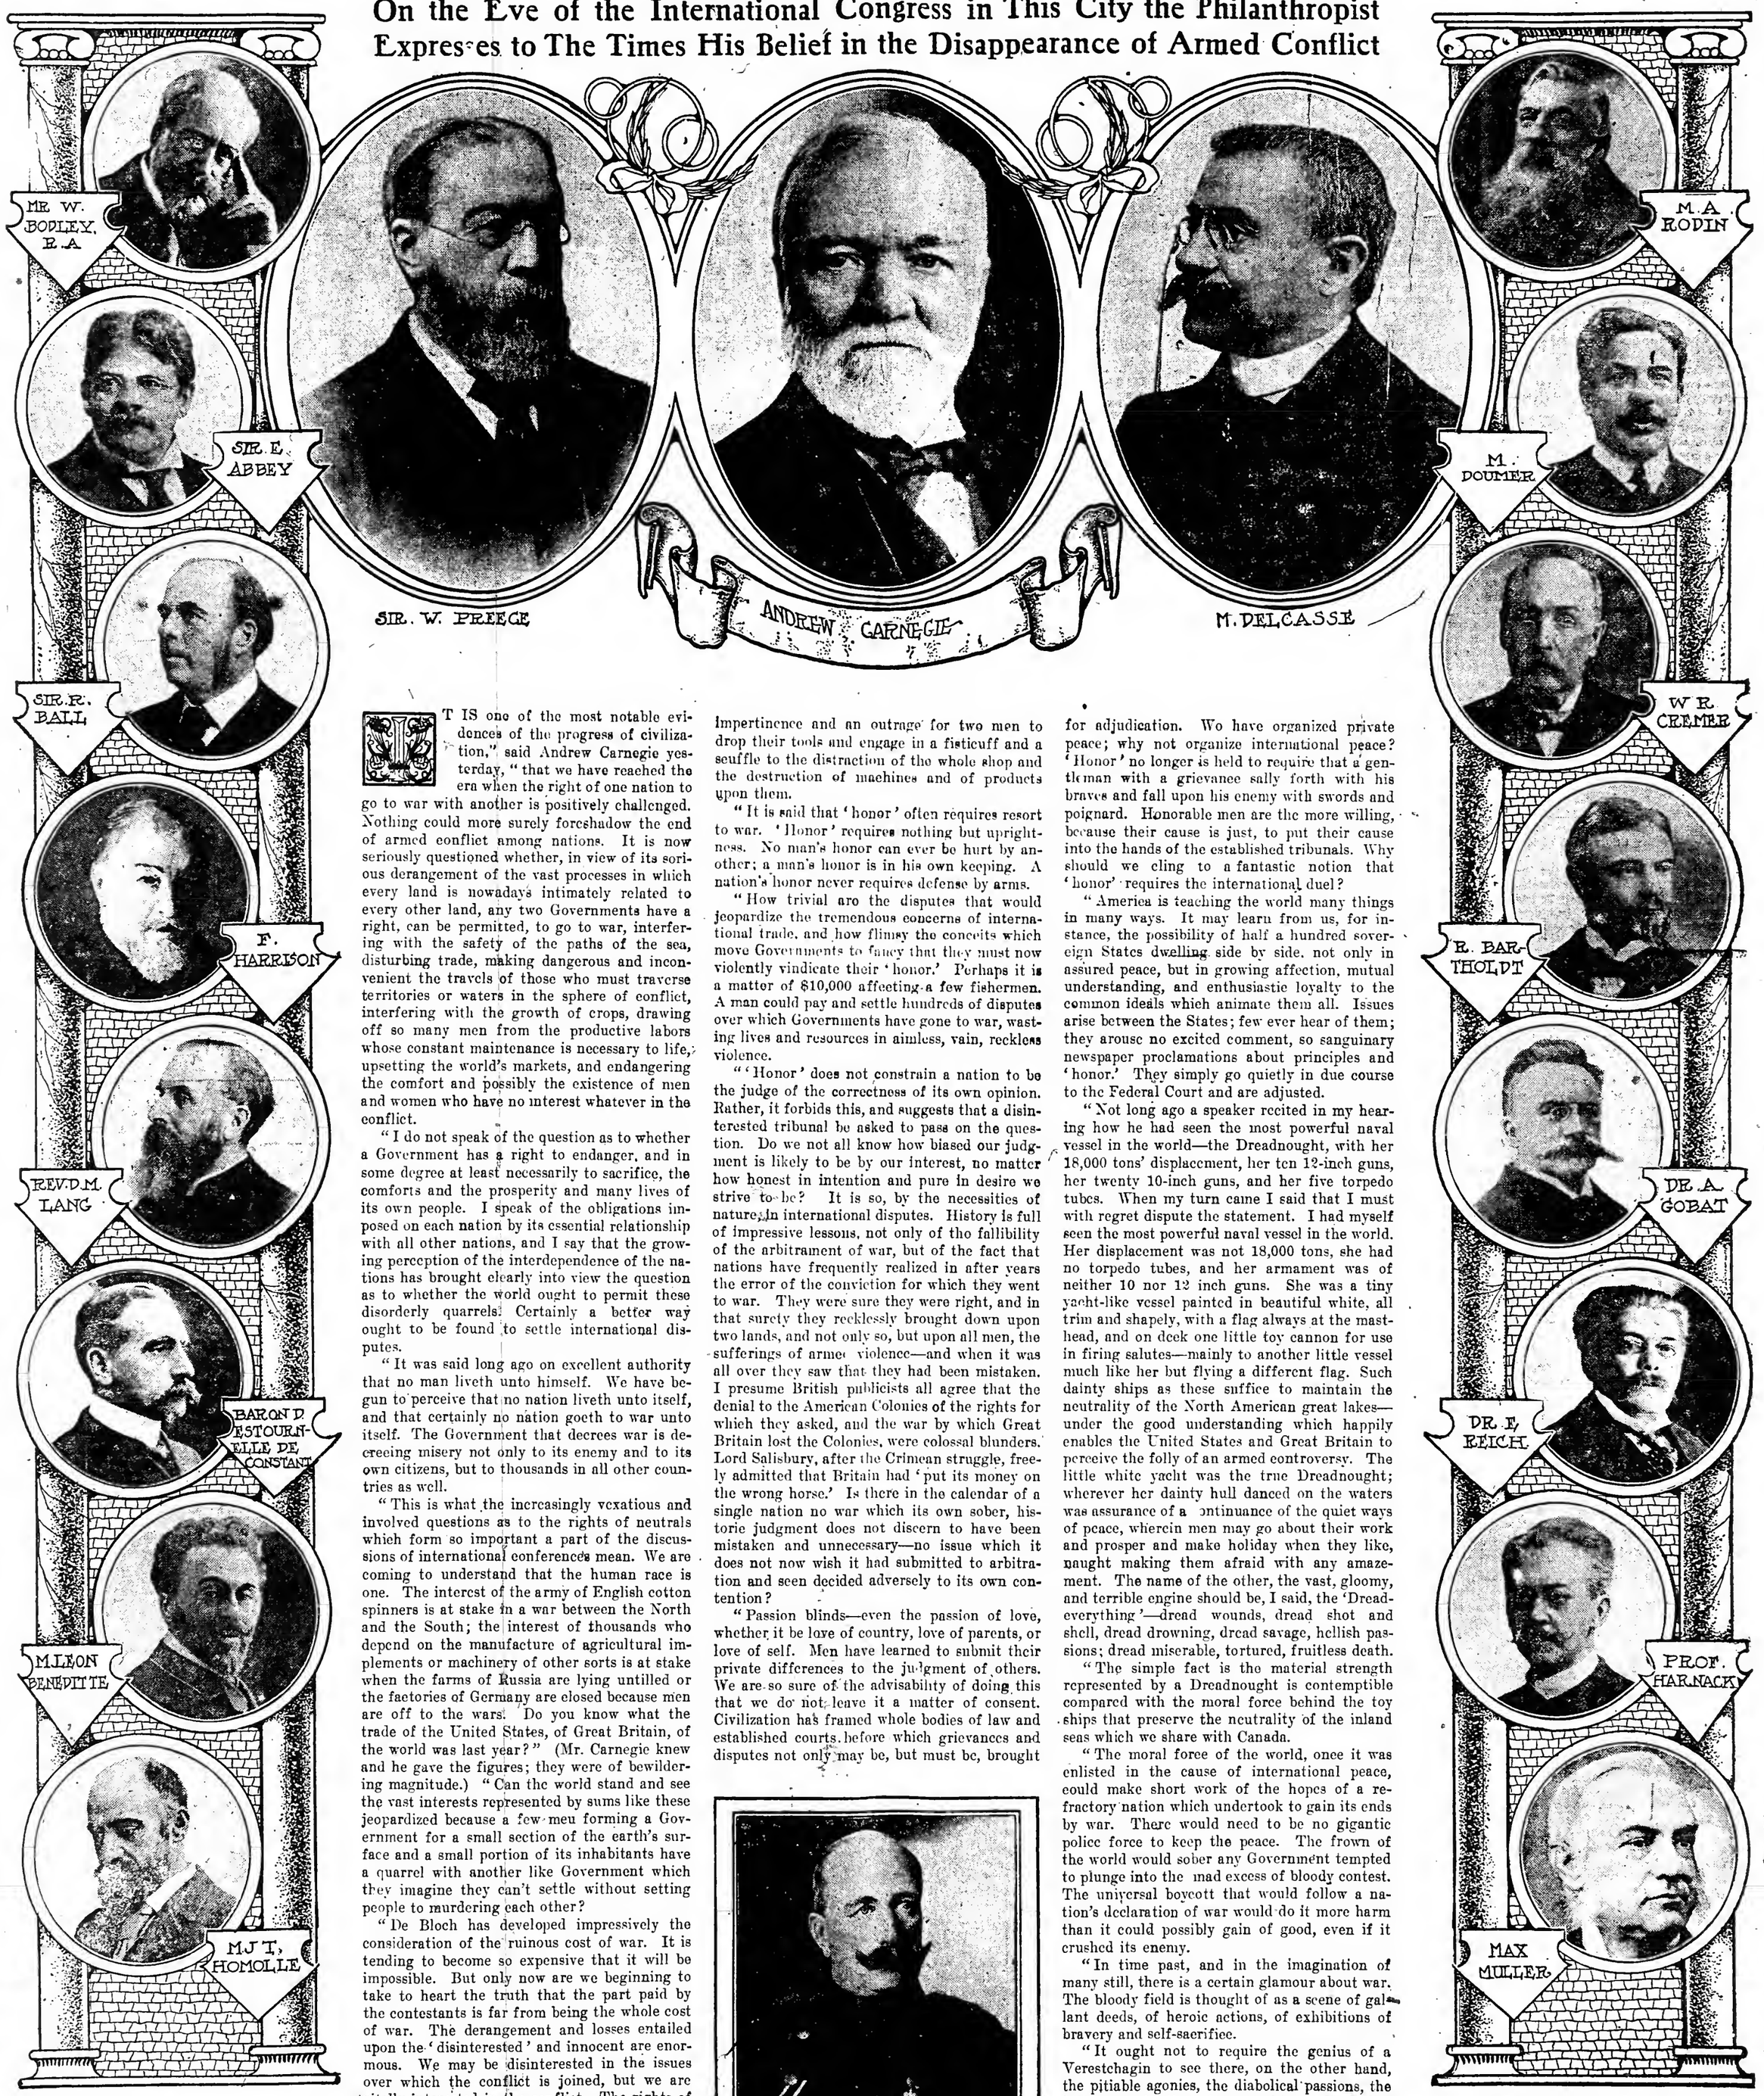
ANDREW CARNEGIE'S PLEA FOR PEACE

On the Eve of the International Congress in This City the Philanthropist Expresses to The Times His Belief in the Disappearance of Armed Conflict



IT IS one of the most notable evidences of the progress of civilization," said Andrew Carnegie yesterday, "that we have reached the era when the right of one nation to go to war with another is positively challenged. Nothing could more surely foreshadow the end of armed conflict among nations. It is now seriously questioned whether, in view of its serious derangement of the vast processes in which every land is nowadays intimately related to every other land, any two Governments have a right, can be permitted, to go to war, interfering with the safety of the paths of the sea, disturbing trade, making dangerous and inconvenient the travels of those who must traverse territories or waters in the sphere of conflict, interfering with the growth of crops, drawing off so many men from the productive labors whose constant maintenance is necessary to life, upsetting the world's markets, and endangering the comfort and possibly the existence of men and women who have no interest whatever in the conflict.

"I do not speak of the question as to whether a Government has a right to endanger, and in some degree at least necessarily to sacrifice, the comforts and the prosperity and many lives of its own people. I speak of the obligations imposed on each nation by its essential relationship with all other nations, and I say that the growing perception of the interdependence of the nations has brought clearly into view the question as to whether the world ought to permit these disorderly quarrels. Certainly a better way ought to be found to settle international disputes.

"It was said long ago on excellent authority that no man liveth unto himself. We have begun to perceive that no nation liveth unto itself, and that certainly no nation goeth to war unto itself. The Government that decrees war is decreeing misery not only to its enemy and to its own citizens, but to thousands in all other countries as well.

"This is what the increasingly vexatious and involved questions as to the rights of neutrals which form so important a part of the discussions of international conferences mean. We are coming to understand that the human race is one. The interest of the army of English cotton spinners is at stake in a war between the North and the South; the interest of thousands who depend on the manufacture of agricultural implements or machinery of other sorts is at stake when the farms of Russia are lying untilled or the factories of Germany are closed because men are off to the wars. Do you know what the trade of the United States, of Great Britain, of the world was last year?" (Mr. Carnegie knew and he gave the figures; they were of bewildering magnitude.) "Can the world stand and see the vast interests represented by sums like these jeopardized because a few men forming a Government for a small section of the earth's surface and a small portion of its inhabitants have a quarrel with another like Government which they imagine they can't settle without setting people to murdering each other?

"De Bloch has developed impressively the consideration of the ruinous cost of war. It is tending to become so expensive that it will be impossible. But only now are we beginning to take to heart the truth that the part paid by the contestants is far from being the whole cost of war. The derangement and losses entailed upon the 'disinterested' and innocent are enormous. We may be disinterested in the issues over which the conflict is joined, but we are vitally interested in the conflict. The rights of neutrals therefore are coming to be recognized as on a par with the rights of belligerents. We might be asked to guarantee a fair field and no favor to two nations who want to fight, if their fightning did not break our own windows and trample down our own gardens. But the world is getting to be like a workshop in which it is an impertinence and an outrage for two men to drop their tools and engage in a fisticuff and a scuffle to the distraction of the whole shop and the destruction of machines and of products upon them.

"It is said that 'honor' often requires resort to war. 'Honor' requires nothing but uprightness. No man's honor can ever be hurt by another; a man's honor is in his own keeping. A nation's honor never requires defense by arms.

"How trivial are the disputes that would jeopardize the tremendous concerns of international trade, and how flimsy the conceits which move Governments to fancy that they must now violently vindicate their 'honor.' Perhaps it is a matter of $10,000 affecting a few fishermen. A man could pay and settle hundreds of disputes over which Governments have gone to war, wasting lives and resources in aimless, vain, reckless violence.

"'Honor' does not constrain a nation to be the judge of the correctness of its own opinion. Rather, it forbids this, and suggests that a disinterested tribunal be asked to pass on the question. Do we not all know how biased our judgment is likely to be by our interest, no matter how honest in intention and pure in desire we strive to be? It is so, by the necessities of nature, in international disputes. History is full of impressive lessons, not only of the fallibility of the arbitrament of war, but of the fact that nations have frequently realized in after years the error of the conviction for which they went to war. They were sure they were right, and in that surety they recklessly brought down upon two lands, and not only so, but upon all men, the sufferings of armed violence—and when it was all over they saw that they had been mistaken. I presume British publicists all agree that the denial to the American Colonies of the rights for which they asked, and the war by which Great Britain lost the Colonies, were colossal blunders. Lord Salisbury, after the Crimean struggle, freely admitted that Britain had 'put its money on the wrong horse.' Is there in the calendar of a single nation no war which its own sober, historic judgment does not discern to have been mistaken and unnecessary—no issue which it does not now wish it had submitted to arbitration and seen decided adversely to its own contention?

"Passion blinds—even the passion of love, whether it be love of country, love of parents, or love of self. Men have learned to submit their private differences to the judgment of others. We are so sure of the advisability of doing this that we do not leave it a matter of consent. Civilization has framed whole bodies of law and established courts before which grievances and disputes not only may be, but must be, brought for adjudication. We have organized private peace; why not organize international peace? 'Honor' no longer is held to require that a gentleman with a grievance sally forth with his braves and fall upon his enemy with swords and poignard. Honorable men are the more willing, because their cause is just, to put their cause into the hands of the established tribunals. Why should we cling to a fantastic notion that 'honor' requires the international duel?

"America is teaching the world many things in many ways. It may learn from us, for instance, the possibility of half a hundred sovereign States dwelling side by side, not only in assured peace, but in growing affection, mutual understanding, and enthusiastic loyalty to the common ideals which animate them all. Issues arise between the States; few ever hear of them; they arouse no excited comment, so sanguinary newspaper proclamations about principles and 'honor.' They simply go quietly in due course to the Federal Court and are adjusted.

"Not long ago a speaker recited in my hearing how he had seen the most powerful naval vessel in the world—the Dreadnought, with her 18,000 tons' displacement, her ten 12-inch guns, her twenty 10-inch guns, and her five torpedo tubes. When my turn came I said that I must with regret dispute the statement. I had myself seen the most powerful naval vessel in the world. Her displacement was not 18,000 tons, she had no torpedo tubes, and her armament was of neither 10 nor 12 inch guns. She was a tiny yacht-like vessel painted in beautiful white, all trim and shapely, with a flag always at the masthead, and on deck one little toy cannon for use in firing salutes—mainly to another little vessel much like her but flying a different flag. Such dainty ships as these suffice to maintain the neutrality of the North American great lakes—under the good understanding which happily enables the United States and Great Britain to perceive the folly of an armed controversy. The little white yacht was the true Dreadnought; wherever her dainty hull danced on the waters was assurance of a continuance of the quiet ways of peace, wherein men may go about their work and prosper and make holiday when they like, naught making them afraid with any amazement. The name of the other, the vast, gloomy, and terrible engine should be, I said, the 'Dread-everything'—dread wounds, dread shot and shell, dread drowning, dread savage, hellish passions; dread miserable, tortured, fruitless death.

"The simple fact is the material strength represented by a Dreadnought is contemptible compared with the moral force behind the toy ships that preserve the neutrality of the inland seas which we share with Canada.

"The moral force of the world, once it was enlisted in the cause of international peace, could make short work of the hopes of a refractory nation which undertook to gain its ends by war. There would need to be no gigantic police force to keep the peace. The frown of the world would sober any Government tempted to plunge into the mad excess of bloody contest. The universal boycott that would follow a nation's declaration of war would do it more harm than it could possibly gain of good, even if it crushed its enemy.

"In time past, and in the imagination of many still, there is a certain glamour about war. The bloody field is thought of as a scene of gallant deeds, of heroic actions, of exhibitions of bravery and self-sacrifice.

"It ought not to require the genius of a Verestchagin to see there, on the other hand, the pitiable agonies, the diabolical passions, the infamous, ghastly ruin wrought on the bodies and souls of men whom mistaken patriotism has sent to slay each other in the mad superstition which appeals to physical prowess to decide between the right and the wrong.

"And it ought not to require much reflection

THE sessions of the Peace Congress will begin Sunday evening at Carnegie Hall with musical services and brief addresses. Meetings will also be held Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, morning, afternoon and evening. Wednesday evening there will be a large public dinner. After the close of the Peace Conference in this city many of the delegates will go to Pittsburg to attend the opening of the Carnegie Institute.

IN the page above are shown the portraits of a number of the most prominent persons who will participate in the First National Arbitration and Peace Congress of America, which will convene at Carnegie Hall, New York City, on the evening of April 14, and hold sessions on the following Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Meetings will be held in Carnegie Hall, Hotel Astor, Cooper Union, and Tabernacle Church.

PITTSBURG INSTITUTE TO BE OPENED THIS WEEK

The Result of 26 Years' Negotiations--Will Comprise 4 Departments--a Library, Art Gallery, Music Hall, and Scientific Collections--150 Notable Men to Attend.

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S greatest gift to learning will be thrown open to the public of Pittsburg on Thursday of this week. This new Carnegie Institute, as it is called, is the final development of an offer made by the great ironmaster twenty-six years ago to the city where he acquired his fortune, and represents an outlay of $12,000,000.

Twelve years ago Pittsburg's first Carnegie Institute was completed and dedicated. So pleased was its founder with the result of his gift that he announced his intention of increasing it by a further endowment of $7,000,000, from the expenditure of which the huge structure which will be dedicated this week has been built.

This new Carnegie Institute is planned on much broader lines than the institute which it will replace, and, in a general way, has been founded to literature, art, music, and science. The original idea of simply founding a public library, which was Mr. Carnegie's first intention, has thus been increased until it embraces four distinct departments. The first of these, the library, contains a collection of over 225,000 volumes, and occupies the entire building of the original institute. The old book stock, with its initial collection of 16,000 volumes, has been replaced by one with a shelf capacity for 1,500,000 volumes. Connected with this central library are ten branches scattered throughout the city, the whole system planned and operated by a head librarian, Andrew H. Hopkins, with a view to reaching the greatest possible number of readers. The library's efficiency in this respect is evident from the records of its past service, which show that since it was opened ten years ago 3,448,960 persons have taken out or used its books. The official estimate of the number of people visiting the institute during this period is 10,000,000.

The department of music in the institute has for its headquarters a great hall which is the home of Emil Paur's Pittsburg Orchestra. Paur has just been engaged for a three-year term at an annual salary of $12,000. For the support of the orchestra forty-two leading citizens of Pittsburg have subscribed a guarantee fund of $42,000 per annum for three years. This Music Hall is equipped with a Carnegie organ, and a city organist is employed at a salary of $4,000 a year to give free recitals every Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

In the eastern wing and part of the southern wing of the new building are housed the scientific collections, under the supervision of the Director, William J. Holland. Immense sums are said to have been spent in acquiring fossil remains for this department, many of these remains having been secured by special expeditions sent out by the institute. The museum also contains over 1,000,000 insects, one of the most complete collections of butterflies in the world, besides exhaustive collections of birds and coins. It is also particularly rich in minerals, while its departments of ethnology and zoology have many unique features.

In the same wing with the museum collections are the art galleries and the halls of architecture and sculpture. The establishing of these features of the institute represents the expenditure of a fortune on the part of the founder, as well as four years of unremitting labor on the part of the Director of Fine Arts, John W. Beatty. The halls and galleries contain reproductions of the world's masterpieces of architecture, sculpture, and painting.

The entire Carnegie Institute as it is to-day covers what would be the equivalent of nearly two city squares. The total floor space thus afforded is said to be much greater than that of the Congressional Library at Washington. The building stands close to the main entrance to Schenley Park, a 500-acre tract presented to the city by the late Mrs. Mary E. Schenley of London, formerly of Pittsburg. The city provides the ground on which the institute is erected, and has made liberal appropriations annually for the maintenance of the library and its branches. All the other expenses have been met by Mr. Carnegie.

The new institute, enclosing the old Carnegie Library, is as high as the ordinary eight-story office building, and the work necessary for its construction has extended over three years. Architecturally the institute is the unique feature of the city, and is greatly admired for the classic symmetry and massiveness of its design. Sixteen varieties of marble have been used in the embellishment of the building, while the roof is adorned with costly groups in bronze.

All the interior decorations, with the possible exception of the Music Hall foyer, have followed the classic standards, and are admired for their purity of conception. The foyer, however, departs from the cold white effect of the Greek and Roman architecture and stands out boldly in gorgeous colors, the dominating tones being green and gold, with occasional touches of vivid red. These effects are all obtained from marble and beaten gold. The foyer contains a group of twenty-four immense marble columns, supporting a balcony that is to form one of the principal promenades for the music hall audiences.

Notable features of the new building are the mechanical devices, including five great tandem Corliss engines to a like number of generators, which have been installed for ventilating, heating, and lighting purposes, at a cost of $635,000, the largest contract of the kind ever awarded in the world.

The dedication ceremonies which will mark the opening of the institute to the public this week will extend over a period of three days, and will be attended by men prominent in the arts and sciences from all parts of the world, including delegations of well-known educators from Great Britain, France, Germany, and Belgium, who will be the guests of the institute trustees while they are in Pittsburg.

The German delegation will be led by Gen. von Loewenfeld, one of the Kaiser's favorite Generals. It was Loewenfeld who presented the monument of Frederick the Great to the American people some time ago. Another distinguished German visitor will be the former Prussian Minister of Commerce, Theodor von Moeller, a prosperous manufacturer in Bielefeld, who first gained prominence in the Reichstag, where for many years he represented the National Liberal Party. The Kaiser, wishing a business man in the Cabinet, made Moeller Minister of Commerce, in which office he gave much attention to the question of the regulation of trusts in Germany. Moeller caused a storm of opposition by his attempt to buy for the State the Hibernia coal mines, and this effort led to his downfall. He was a candidate for the Reichstag in the last election, but was defeated.

Baurat von Ihne, who is one of the leading architects of Germany, comes to America to make a special study of our tall buildings, as well as to attend the opening of the Institute. He is a native of Elberfeld, and some of the finest buildings in Germany, especially those belonging to the State, have been erected by him. Ihne is one of the Commissioners under whose guidance the peace building at The Hague is now being constructed.

The German art world will be represented at Pittsburg by Prof. Fritz Schafer, whose chief works are the Goethe monument in the Berlin Thiergarten, Bismarck and Moltke monuments in Cologne, Luther monument, Erfurt; Liebig monument, Giessen; Krupp monument, Essen; statue of the Great Elector in the Avenue of Victory, Berlin; Gustav Freytag monument in Wiesbaden, Emperor William monument, Hamburg.

Another of the German visitors to the Carnegie Institute dedication ceremonies will be Dr. Friedrich S. Archenhold, the Director of the famous Treptow Observatory, near Berlin. This is a private institution, established mainly through the energy of this distinguished scientist. With the aid of a German sculptor, Herr Lehr, Archenhold constructed a relief map of the surface of the moon, now extensively used in the German public schools. He is also the first astronomer who has measured the energy of the sun by means of selenium cells, and is the father of the theory that sunspots exert an electric effect on the earth. He has likewise shown the intimate connection existing between sunspots and northern light. Archenhold is an enthusiastic peace advocate and will attend the congress which will be held here. Western Reserve University at Allegheny, Penn., will confer on Archenhold and the other delegates honorary degrees.

William T. Stead, delegate from England, is also expected to attend the dedication ceremonies at Pittsburg. Mr. Stead, editor of The Review of Reviews in Great Britain, has made frequent visits to this country, and as an international advocate of peace will take a prominent part in the Peace Conference which will be held in this city after the conclusion of the Pittsburg exercises.

Another leading authority on international peace who will go to Pittsburg as Mr. Carnegie's guest is Baron d'Estournelle de Constant, who was a member of the first Hague Conference and is now one of the French members of The Hague Court. Just at present Baron de Constant is deeply interested in organizing the representative men of every country into an international federation whose motto will be, "My country's good through the peace of the world."

The famous Dutch novelist, who writes under the pen name of Maarten Maartens, J. M. W. van der Poorten-Schwartz, is another delegate who will fittingly represent the literary men of Europe in this his first visit to the United States.

Then there are Sir William H. Preece, former Engineer in Chief of the British Post Office; Sir Robert Cranston, who has been commissioned by the Senate of Edinburgh University to deliver the congratulatory address at the University of Pennsylvania; Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, Secretary of the Zoological Society of London, who has been especially interested, since his arrival in this country, in making an inspection of the Bronx Zoological Garden; Lieut. Col. Gustav Dickmuth of the German General Staff, Sir John Ross, Dr. R. Koser, Leonce Benedite, William Robertson, Sir John Hall, Dr. John Rhys, Provost Macbeth, Sir R. S. Ball, and C. F. Moberly Bell are other noted men composing the European delegation to Pittsburg who have already arrived in this country.

Altogether about fifty representative foreigners have been invited by Mr. Carnegie to attend the Pittsburg dedication ceremonies. From the time they leave their homes until they return, these men are the guests of Mr. Carnegie. In inviting them, the latter has expressed the wish that they stay here as long as they desire and see as much of the country as they can.

How the Workingmen Are Spending Their Money

DURING the last year, and especially since January 1, the sums drawn from savings banks exceeded the deposits. The people using the institutions are spending more and saving less. It was reported last week that many thousands of dollars had been withdrawn from the banks and used to buy stocks during the recent slump in Wall Street. Other reasons assigned for the decrease were the increased cost of living, the extravagance of the people in prosperous times, and investments in more profitable enterprises. The Presidents of several of the savings banks were asked for an explanation of the state of affairs.

"It is true that the amount of withdrawals is larger, and that the deposits in the savings banks have fallen off," said Otto T. Bannard, Chairman and Treasurer of the Penny Provident Fund. "But the same is true of larger banks and trust companies in New York and other cities, like Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Pittsburg.

"The prosperity of the country explains a large part of the present situation. The people are putting their money where they can make it earn most. This means that it goes into business enterprises—mills, machinery, and goods. A great deal of money is also being spent by the small investor here for building lots. The investments have been especially large in Long Island lands. The investor pays for his lot on the installment plan. It becomes his house his saving fund.

"I do not see any evidences that the people lack confidence in the banks or their future, and are withdrawing their money for that reason. Neither do I think they are putting their money into stocks to an unusual extent. In such transactions the money they spend does not really leave the banks. A small investor may take his money from a savings fund to put it into ten shares of some good stock, for instance. The man who sells the stock deposits the money he gets for it with his bankers. The money is still in bank; the amount available is not diminished.

"In the recent report of the Penny Provident Fund I said that $106,678.21 had been deposited in the year ending Jan. 31 last, and that $111,010.05 had been withdrawn. The penny savings bank aims to encourage saving, especially among children. Saving is only a habit, after all. If a man has not learned to save by the time he is forty he never will. We cannot pay interest on penny deposits. The system of bookkeeping would be too complicated. When a deposit reaches a fairly large sum we advise the depositor to take it to a savings bank where it will draw interest.

"One cause I assign in the report for the falling off in deposits is the constantly increasing cost of living. Another is higher rentals. There is still another—a very important reason. The people are prosperous, life looks bright to them, and they are spending more money for little things.

"In prosperous times, workingmen spend as much for luxuries, in proportion to their incomes, as do the very rich. The wives have more for clothes. The family goes on excursions every Sunday. They eat more, and their food is likely to include delicacies. The men, perhaps, will drink more. They are not so eager to work. It is harder to get them back to their labors after a Sunday off. All of these little things reflect the prosperity of the country. The people assume a free-and-easy attitude—they give little thought to the morrow."

"There is no cause for alarm in the excess of the withdrawal over the deposits," said Frank M. Huribut, President of the Union Square Savings Bank. "The people we deal with show a disposition to take out their money and invest it in securities, many of them of the savings fund standard, so that they may get more interest on their money. In other words, they are doing the investing instead of having us do it for them, and are making the difference between what we receive and the interest we pay them. This is to be commended.

"Much of the money is doubtless being spent for mortgages and the better classes of bonds. Some of it may be spent for building lots. I have seen no indications that large sums are going into Wall Street. Some of the people who deal with us undoubtedly dabble in stocks. If this class of depositor withdraws his money it is usually to cover his margins. Another fact, often overlooked while considering the question, is that depositors frequently withdraw money to help their friends. They charge the same rate of interest that we pay them.

"The extravagances that come with prosperity may be partly to blame. It stands to reason that if a man is sure of his wages for an indefinite time he will not be inclined to save as he would if he did not know what day he would lose his position.

"I am inclined to think, however, that the heavy withdrawals are due chiefly to the difficulty of obtaining money. The general condition of their finances is shown by the reports of the New York State savings banks. In the last ten years the number of depositors and the amount on deposit have steadily increased. There is nearly twice as much money in the savings banks to-day as there was in 1897."

The congestion of business due to prosperity was also assigned as a moving cause of the withdrawals by Archibald Turner, President of the Franklin Savings Bank.

"The turn in financial affairs in the last few weeks," he said, "is likely to be a benefit to the country. Money has been scarce, mills have been tied up, and railroads have been unable to handle their traffic. Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou has done much to relieve the situation by depositing Government funds in the banks. The reaction in stocks after the period of great prosperity has also done much to restore a more normal and healthy condition.

"At the moment there are not the slightest indications that the people have lost confidence in their banks. I could cite instances of a decided surplus of deposits over withdrawals in the last week. The fact that the cost of living has increased does not affect the question seriously. People spend more money year by year for their living expenses, but their wages are growing higher every year, too."

Lighting "the Great White Way"

THEY were looking out from a high window on the glare that makes Broadway "the White Way." The woman saw it all for the first time. Although not ordinarily commercial, the spelling out of the diverse electric commands to drink this and eat that, to dine here and to sup there, made her reflective in a spirit that wasn't entirely alien to that which our foreign critics have attributed to America.

"I wonder what its value is?" she said.

"In dollars and cents?" he asked.

"Yes," she answered, "but of course you could not calculate that, since it is all a part of a system that does not hope to derive a definite profit from each sign—that is, the people who advertise in this way do not expect that you will really drink the stuff after you read the sign. What they seem to me to aim at is just this: They wish to make the name of their product as nearly standard as possible, so that when you think of that particular drink you will think at once of their electric scream. With the large number of makers who are advertising thus extensively of course the attaining of any such condition is merely the ideal. However, one can say that with many of the older products that were developed years ago this condition has been reached.

"So if you could figure the dollars and cents that came into the pockets of any concern as the result of its whole system of advertising—of making partially or wholly the name of its product standard—you might be able to ascertain a certain sort of figure for each sign by dividing the total by the number of signs. But of course this figure would in the end represent a sort of systematized guess."

The subject seemed to interest him. He took it up thus:

"It is quite certain that the total amount of publicity that is secured here in New York by these electric signs is tremendous. People come here from all parts of the country in each one of the seasons—each season having its class of visitors who have particular reasons for coming at just that time of year."

"Yes," she agreed, "the total publicity secured by the signs here in Manhattan is considerable."

"Yet it is gained," he continued, "at a comparatively slight cost per night."

"Is it possible to figure that?" she asked.

"I had some figures," he said, "that I secured recently for a purpose that are decidedly interesting. I got them right from the headquarters of the largest electric light and power concern in the city. They did not want at first to give them, as they said that they could arrive at only an estimate that they wouldn't want to state officially. But do you know how much that glare, all of it—that is, the outside signs and outside lights of Broadway from Twenty-third to Forty-second Street—costs a night?"

"How much?"

"Only $200 a night. And think of the different kinds of glow that are supplied for that sum. There are all sorts of electric signs that have a mechanism for changing the color of the wording or spelling out different words. In the last case they are a sort of circular, or rotary, machine, which, like the other devices, is operated by a small electric motor, supplied from the same source of electric energy that manifests itself in the brilliant lights. Then there is the flaming arc lamp which gives that peculiar purple glow in front of some theatres. This is an arc light so arranged that the carbons are consumed and have to be replaced daily. Then there is a German lamp, which is raised to its initial state of the heat requisite for the giving off of light by a small heating coil, which is cut off automatically after the light is started. Then there is also the mercury vapor lamp, which some of the stores have before their doors. And its total cost is $200 a night."

"How much does it cost to light the whole of Manhattan for a night?" she asked.

"Fifty thousand dollars," he said, "covers the cost of all the electricity consumed in Manhattan in a single night for lighting purposes, though the cost of the city lighting in the streets alone is but $1,250 a night."

She reflected a moment. Then she asked:

"I wonder what the lights in the theatre where we were to-night cost—that is, aside from those that were thrown upon the poor heroine, who didn't have any dinner dress from other sources?"

"The lighting—that is, the electric lighting—of a theatre is not an important sum. In fact, it is only about $20 a night, while one of the Broadway hotels spends only about $15 a night."

"I wonder how many of those little throbbing electric globes there are in the city?" the girl said.

"I have the figures on the first of March," he returned. "Then there were 2,504,694 incandescent lights and 33,227 arc lights, though, of course, they are never all going at once."

He was reading from a small notebook now.

"On that date, too, there were being delivered 143,845 horse power to motors, representing an equivalent of 4,883,607 incandescent lamps of sixteen candle power."

The girl put the subject away from her as though the figures had confused her.

to make it clear that such heroisms as are possible on the battlefield are not the only ones open to brave men; are not by any means the most noble; are by all means the most primitive and the least noble. The instinct to fight is brutish; the desire to take another's life is simply savage.

The Zulu is really a much better fighter than the white man. A Mohammedan can whip a Christian any time. Civilization renders man a poor fighter. Christianity, with its high estimate of the value of human life, is antagonistic to success in war. The modern man keeps up war only through the use of machinery. He invents engines which do the work for him. So the heroic possibilities of war are rapidly vanishing. This is true of battle alike by land and sea. Homer would find no inspiration in a modern battle.

"Yes, there is a great truth underlying the popular faith that it is a noble thing to stand for the right, to sacrifice for it, to die for it if need be. But it is a total perversion to think that standing for the right means fighting somebody. The bravest men may often be persons of such sensibility or indeed physique that their courage could not be shown in a bodily struggle. Men who are faithful to principles, to duties; who will not yield nor compromise, but who suffer and sacrifice—they are heroes. Investigators who lay down their lives in the quest for truth, doctors, business men whom no consideration can swerve from their duty—why, nobody needs to be reminded that life is full of heroes beside whose deeds those of war pale and fade.

"Perhaps champions of the peace movement may not have dwelt sufficiently upon the positive, the affirmative ideals of the movement. It may be, as you suggest, a good plan to seek the truth involved in an error. The truth in this matter is that loyalty, courage, and the spirit of self-sacrifice are among the noblest traits of manhood. The error is in supposing that these traits are best shown in war. They are exhibited in peace in ways infinitely more splendid.

"We talk of patriotism. But has patriotism no other opportunities than those of conflict? Does a man because of filial affection go and pick a quarrel with his father's neighbors or business partners? Are there no ideals more stirring than those of martial glory? Is this generation conscious of calls to the service of native land in ways no more worthy than the way of taking a musket and killing somebody?

"You ask, in the language of Prof. James, for 'a moral equivalent for war.' A patriot needs only look about to find numberless causes that ought to warm the blood and stir the imagination. The dispelling of ignorance and the fostering of education, the investigation of disease and the searching out of remedies that will vanquish the giant ills that decimate the race, the inculcation of good feeling in the industrial world, the cause of the aged, the cause of the men and women who had so little chance—tell me, has war anything that beckons as these things beckon with alluring and compelling power? Whoso wants to share the heroism of battle let him join the fight against ignorance and disease—and the mad idea that war is necessary."

THE "NEW GENERATION" IN THE WORLD OF FINANCE

Sons of Rich Men Who Are in Training to Take Up the Responsible Work That Must Soon Be Laid Down by Their Fathers ---Manner of Men They Are.

A NEW name was added to the list of leaders in Wall Street last Wednesday. J. J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railway, and probably the most conspicuous figure in the American railroad world, resigned the Presidency in favor of his son, Louis W. Hill. The move was hardly a surprise in the Street. The elder Mr. Hill is nearly seventy years old. Reports of his retirement had been current for months, and last January Mr. Hill made only a qualified denial. The interest of financiers was rather drawn to his successor, the young man who had been elected in St. Paul the executivo head of one of the greatest railway systems in America.

From Louis W. Hill the chat of Wall Street drifted to other young men—the heirs-apparent of vast wealth, corporate interests, and power in the markets of the world. The names of J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, H. H. Rogers, James Stillman, the Vanderbilts, and Jacob H. Schiff were mentioned. In every case the leader had provided for his successor. Usually it is a son. In a few cases a young man of unusual ability has also been selected to share the executive work.

Louis W. Hill is better known at the Great Northern Railway's offices in St. Paul than in New York. His residence is in the Western city, and he spends most of his time there. For a while at least he will be one of a family triumvirate in the management of the Hill interests. J. J. Hill, as Chairman of the railway's Board of Directors, will, it is said, have a part in the management identical with that he has played in recent years. His eldest son, James N. Hill, has been in the offices of the company for a number of years acting as Third Vice President, and more recently as First Vice President of the Great Northern Railway, and an official in several of the subsidiary corporations.

Much Like His Father.

The second son, Louis W. Hill, reflects in an even greater degreo the characteristics of his noted father. He is a quiet man of thirty-six years, already bearded like J. J. Hill, and resembles him in build, the clear glance of his gray eyes, and little peculiarities of manner. He was prepared for college at Exeter Military Academy, then went to Yale, being graduated in the Class of '91. Since then most of Mr. Hill's time has been spent learning the practical side of railroading on his father's line.

He began at the bottom—as a member of a construction corps. Then he learned the details of the shops and operating departments, went into the executive offices of the railway in St. Paul, and was elected a Director, and finally a Vice President. His abilities, say those who know him best, lie in administration rather than in finance. He knows a railroad "from the ballast" up to the complications of elaborate freight schedules. About seven years ago Mr. Hill married Miss Maude V. C. Taylor of this city. He has a beautiful home in St. Paul near his father's, on the bluffs overlooking the Mississippi.

The officers of nineteen railroads look to the Grand Central Station for a final decision in questions of policy and finance. The aggregation of capital they represent is crystallized in two words—"Vanderbilt interests." These find an expression—in a financial way, at least—in William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., a young man who returned from Europe last Tuesday and was found the next day at his office in the station taking up the details of railroading. In him Wall Street sees the successor of the "Commodore," William H., and William K. Vanderbilt, and the fourth generation of the family to manage vast railroad interests.

The Younger Vanderbilts.

Mr. Vanderbilt is about thirty years old, and looks like his father, William K. Vanderbilt. He is short, compactly built, dark in coloring, with black curly hair. He married Miss Virginia Fair, sister of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, and a daughter of Senator Fair of California, and, after leaving Harvard, went into the New York Central offices.

Railroading is different from banking or financing oil and steel corporations, in that successful management and the lives of thousands of travelers depend on an infinite number of details. Three of the younger generation of the Vanderbilt family are serving the New York Central. Alfred G. Vanderbilt has his desk in the financial department, Cornelius finds his greatest interest in the shop and construction department, and is said to know a railroad from the roadbed up. His cousin, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., has combined both the financial and practical training. He has studied the modern methods of finance in Wall Street, has been taught the details of syndicate building, knows how securities are underwritten, and can transfer bonds with all the legal formalities. He knows quite as well what an electric locomotive should be, how to ballast a roadbed and build curves and bridges, and the difference between a standard and a "cull" railroad tie. To this combination of experience and practical ability, the railroad officials say, is due the gradual change of their attitude at the board meetings from toleration for Mr. Vanderbilt to serious deference and respect.

While men in Wall Street talked last week of the future of New York's great financial institutions, the National City Bank and the name of James Stillman were naturally among the first. It is not because the City Bank is about to round out a century of corporato existence—age such as that counts for little in "The Street." The bank is the greatest institution of its kind in the country. Other banks may be better known in special branches of finance; it is unrivalled in its deposits of over $100,000,000 and a businss of enormous proportions growing out of general mercantile and commercial transactions.

To James Stillman's abilities, since he succeeded Percy R. Pyne as President of the bank, in 1891, is this remarkable record largely due. Stories that Mr. Stillman would gradually give up many of his duties were revived about three months ago by a report that he had bought a house in Paris and would spend much of his time there. Who will succeed Mr. Stillman in the City Bank, as Director of eight railroads, and officer of trust companies and industrial corporations?

Young Stillman a Worker.

When a reporter asked the question last week the reply was: James A. Stillman, the financier's son. The younger Mr. Stillman has been trained in the business since he was graduated from Harvard in the Class of '96. First he served as a clerk, then as Assistant Cashier and, about a year ago, was elected a Director and Vice President of the bank.

The younger Mr. Stillman has already taken his place in life as a man of business and society. He and his wife, who was Miss Anne N. Potter, have their town house in Seventy-second Street, near Fifth Avenue. They are building a country home on the Hudson River not far from the elder Mr. Stillman's, in the Highlands, near West Point.

Neither his membership in usual clubs nor his business cares has deprived the younger Mr. Stillman of his love of a life in the open air. His friends know him as a mighty hunter of big game in the Rockies and Canada, and an enthusiast on the golf links, where he ranks as an expert.

Men in Wall Street say that much of the executive work in the National City Bank and the Stillman interests will ultimately fall on the shoulders of Frank A. Vanderlip, the Vice President. He offers the example of a stranger in New York, who in a few years has risen to a position of importance in the financial district.

Mr. Vanderlip is not much over forty years of age, although his iron-gray hair and mustache make him look older. Formerly a writer on financial topics on a Chicago newspaper, he became Secretary to a Cabinet officer, then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and following that Vice President of the greatest bank in the country.

He began life as workman in a machine shop in a small town in Illinois, studied finance, and in 1888 became a financial reporter on the Chicago Tribune. Here he attracted the attention of Lyman J. Gage, who took young Vanderlip to Washington with him in 1897 when Mr. Gage became Secretary of the Treasury under President McKinley. Mr. Gage advanced him to the post of Assistant Secretary. It was Mr. Vanderlip who managed the issue of $100,000,000 war bonds in 1898. His work attracted the attention of the financiers in the City Bank. In 1902, before Mr. Gage retired from the Treasury Department, Mr. Vanderlip was offered his present position in the bank. He is one of the youngest men in Wall Street to assume such responsibilities, except, perhaps, in cases of great inherited wealth.

While talking of young financiers who have came to New York as strangers and rapidly reached a position where they have become prospective leaders, men on "The Street" also mentioned Otto H. Kahn of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Mr. Kahn celebrated his fortieth birthday last month. He is regarded as the logical successor of Jacob H. Schiff. By birth and training he is Germnn. His father was a banker in Manheim. He gained experience in banking and international finance in Berlin and London before he came to America.

It was but natural that he should take an active part in the great railroad deals which have made his firm one of the most prominent in Wall Street, including the sensational Union Pacific and Northern Pacific operations of the Harriman Syndicate.

Mr. Kahn married Miss Addie Wolff, a daughter of Abraham Wolff of this city. A lover and patron of music, he is a Director of the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company.

Much of his leisure is spent at his fine country house in Morristown, where he enjoys outdoor sports. He is a member of the St. Andrew's Golf and the Morristown Field Clubs.

Standard Oil Heirs.

No fears were expressed as to the lack of good material among the younger men in the Standard Oil Company. As one of the brokers put it, the big office building at 26 Broadway, with its suggestion of mystery, has an atmosphere all its own. It is unusual, he added, if the men working in the Standard Oil offices leave them to go to other corporations. There was an air of sober business about them that argued well for the new generation.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has practically taken his father's place in the great corporation. He is at his office early and late, working at a thousand and one executive details. He was educated to a business life from boyhood. In those days he never had a large allowance of pocket money, but was taught the value of it.

A story is told of him that he put up fence posts around a lot in Cleveland which his father owned and thereby earned a few cents. He did not spend it, but put the cash in bank, added to it, and finally asked his father to invest it for him. The spirit of the boy pleased his parent. The money was invested and was ultimately increased to $10,000.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is a quiet man, just 30 years old. His home is close to his father's town house in Fifty-fourth Street, near Fifth Avenue. Dismissing his work for the Standard Oil interests and his directorships in allied corporations, the young man's name becomes conspicuous as the head of his Bible class at the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church.

If the executive leadership of Standard Oil should pass from John D. Rockefeller, Jr., for one reason or another, the financiers on Wall Street said there was no telling exactly what would happen at 26 Broadway. The destiny of the great corporation might, as a remote possibility, be placed in the hands of a new man—some one with a natural genius for business who had been reared in the company's service. It is generally conceded, however, that there is plenty of good material to draw from. William Rockefeller has several sons. One of them, Percy G. Rockefeller, has shown marked business promise since he graduated from Yale in 1900 and entered the Standard Oil offices. He married Miss Isabel G. Stillman, and makes his home on the Rockefeller estate at Greenwich, Conn.

H. H. Rogers, one of the largest stockholders, also has a successor in his son, H. H. Rogers Jr., a Columbia man, who has devoted himself to the business since he graduated in 1901, and who is known as a clubman, yachtsman, and one of the younger set at Tuxedo.

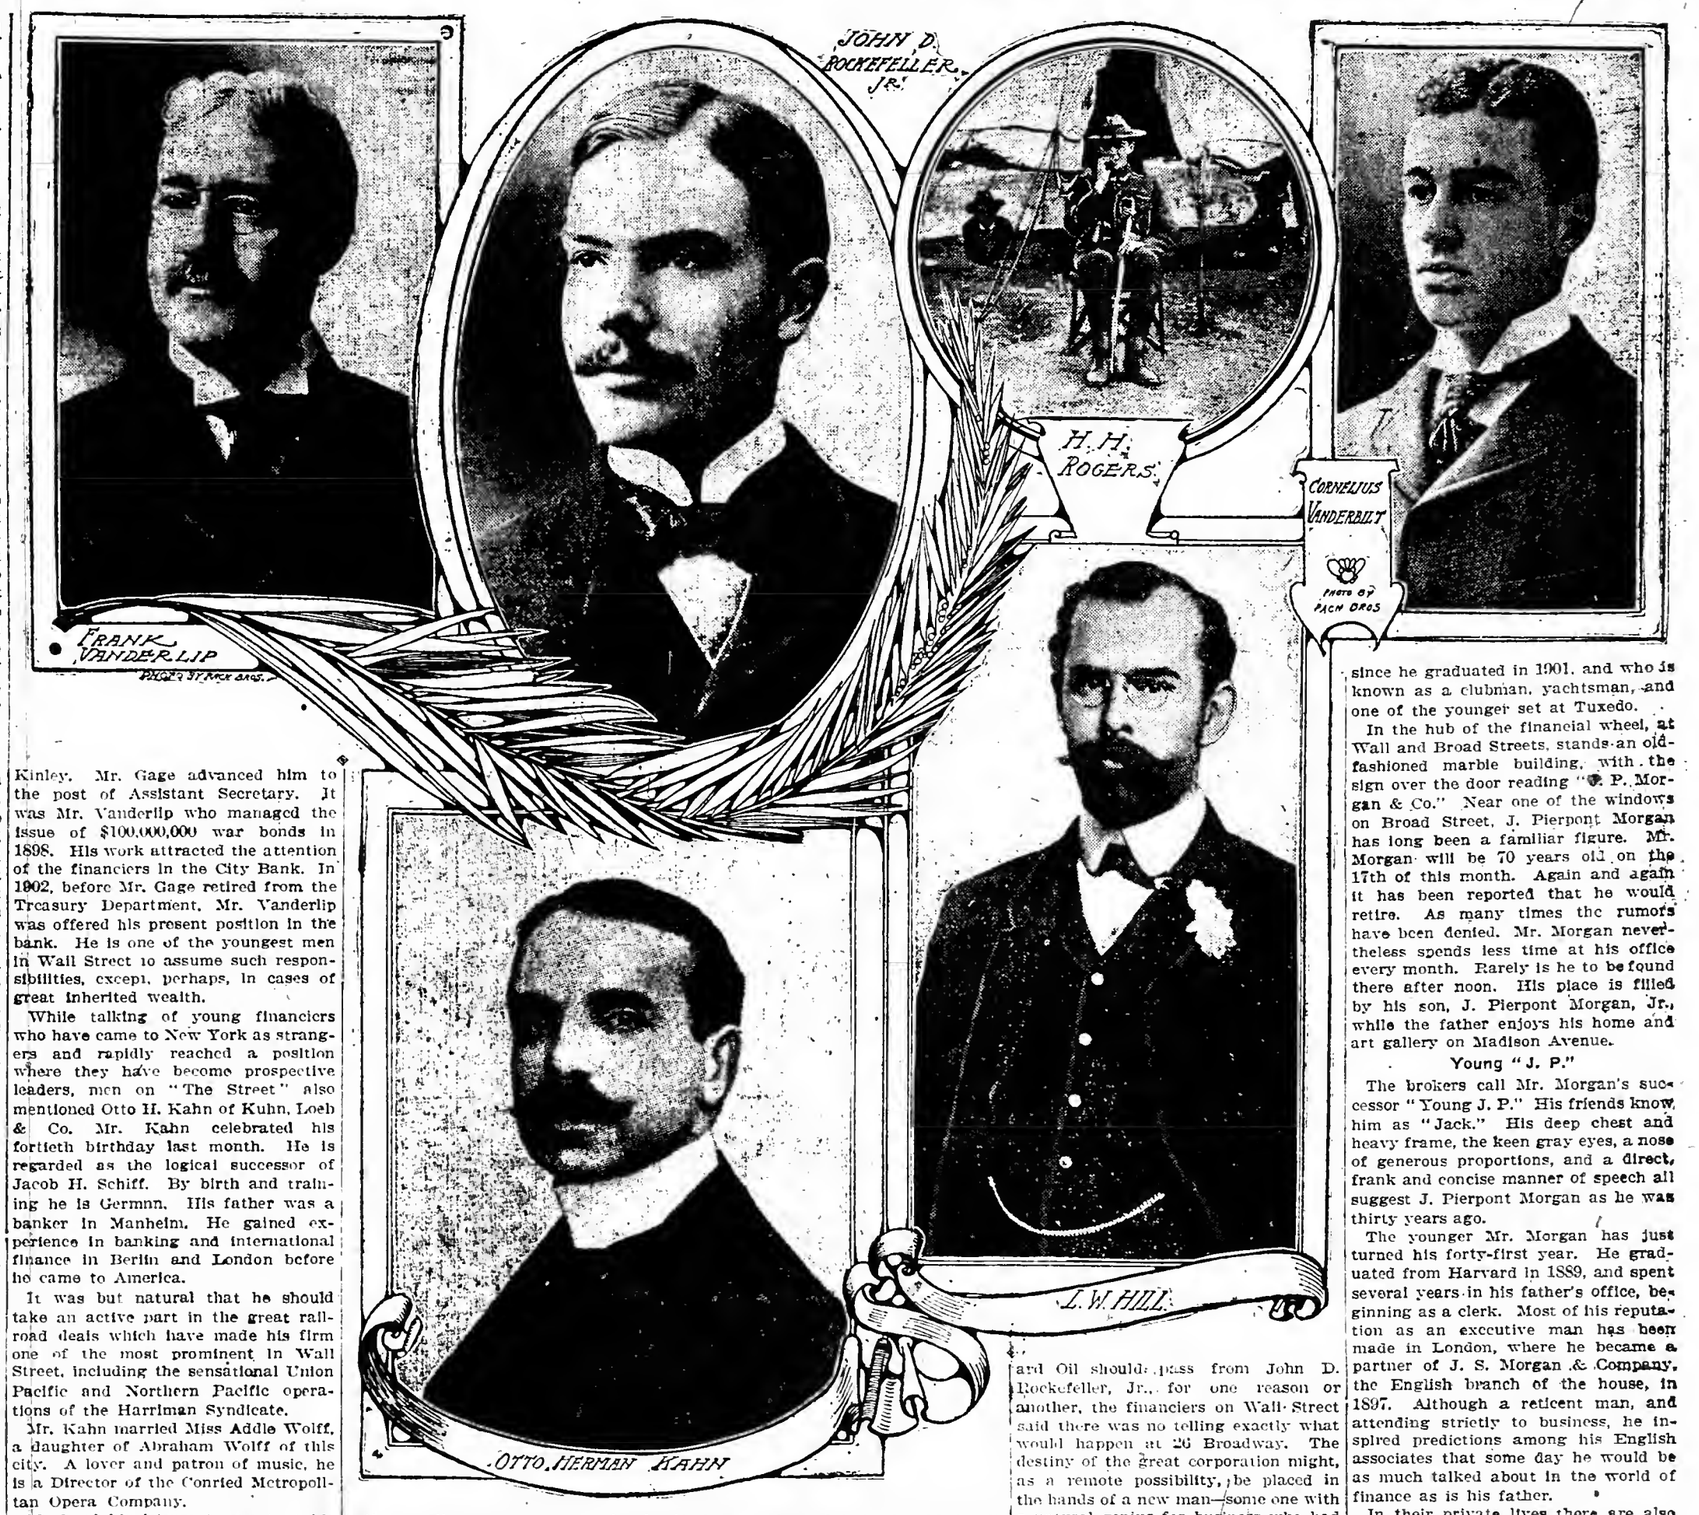
In the hub of the financial wheel, at Wall and Broad Streets, stands an old-fashioned marble building, with the sign over the door reading "J. P. Morgan & Co." Near one of the windows on Broad Street, J. Pierpont Morgan has long been a familiar figure. Mr. Morgan will be 70 years old on the 17th of this month. Again and again it has been reported that he would retire. As many times the rumors have been denied. Mr. Morgan nevertheless spends less time at his office every month. Rarely is he to be found there after noon. His place is filled by his son, J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., while the father enjoys his home and art gallery on Madison Avenue.

Young "J. P."

The brokers call Mr. Morgan's successor "Young J. P." His friends know him as "Jack." His deep chest and heavy frame, the keen gray eyes, a nose of generous proportions, and a direct, frank and concise manner of speech all suggest J. Pierpont Morgan as he was thirty years ago.

The younger Mr. Morgan has just turned his forty-first year. He graduated from Harvard in 1889, and spent several years in his father's office, beginning as a clerk. Most of his reputation as an excutive man has been made in London, where he became a partner of J. S. Morgan & Company, the English branch of the house, in 1897. Although a reticent man, and attending strictly to business, he inspired predictions among his English associates that some day he would be as much talked about in the world of finance as is his father.

In their private lives there are also many points of resemblance between father and son. The younger Mr. Morgan's home adjoins that of his father in Madison Avenue. About fourteen years ago he married Miss Jane N. Grew of Boston. He is fond of sports, especially horses and golf, but reads a good deal, especially history and biography, and has inherited his father's taste for pictures and curios. At his clubs—the Metropolitan, the University, New York Yacht, and Century among them—he is not looked upon as a bon vivant. The men who know him well, however, say his friendship is worth having for its own sake.



Precedents for the Roosevelt-Harriman Controversy

The "Mulligan Letter" Episode and the Credit Mobilier Scandal Recalled.

NOT even President Roosevelt's stanchest friends hold to the opinion that he has been particularly happy in the selection of the documentary evidence adduced to prove that Edward H. Harriman is entitled to full and unlimited membership in the Anaulas Club. On the contrary, the President's putting in ovidence these letters is recalling to many minds, who look out over the country and back through the years from this point of vantage, other notable incidents when statesmen have got themselves into trouble by citing letters. Further than this, the President's entanglements with Wall Street financiers is being compared to some similar instances of that kind which aro of the long ago, but still fresh in the minds of many men of the passing generation. The two historic instances of such entanglements which are being especially recalled are the cases of James A. Garfield and the Credit Mobilier Company in 1872, and the case of James G. Blaino and what became known as the "Mulligan Letters" in 1876.

The very emphatic and dramatic denial by President Roosevelt of the contents of Mr. Harriman's letter, the denunciation of Mr. Harriman as a liar, and the charge of a "conspiracy," then the production of letters which practically confirm not only the charges made by Mr. Harriman but those made three years ago by Judge Parker, by THE TIMES, and by many other newspapers, that there was collusion between the Roosevelt managers and the Wall Street financiers in the 1904 campaign, furnishes a striking parallel especially to the case of Blaine and the Mulligan letters. Mr. Blaine, while his conduct was under investigation by a committee of the House of Representatives, read a whole hatch of letters in explanation of his conduct. But, as in the case of Mr. Roosevelt, these letters instead of clearing the air gave rise to such a controversy that Mr. Blaine was defeated for the Republican nomination for President in the Cincinnati Convention held a short while afterward, which nomination he would unquestionably have received but for the incident.

The Blaine-Mulligan incident was one of the most dramatic which ever took place in the National Capitol. It was near the closing days of the Forty-fourth Congress. On the 6th day of June, 1876, it was, that the culmination came. James G. Blaine, a member of the lower house of Congress, a former Speaker of that body, one of the ablest and most brilliant men of his time, and ono of the most popular was his party's idol with a clear path, it was thought, to the Presidency. On tho floor of the House he aroso to a question of personal privilege, and performed that famous act for which he was dubbed by Robert Ingersoll the "Plumed Knight." He had the letters, the noted "Mulligan letters," and he placed them in evidence himself. The House of Representatives was crowded, both floor and gallery, and so excited grew the members and the spectators that several times the Speaker called in the services of the Sergeant-at-Arms and ordered him to clear the floor. For outsiders were on the floor, hundreds of men, Blaine sympathizers and friends of Proctor Knott, who led the opposition against Blaine. They had rushed by the door-keepers and flooded the floor.

In consequence of frequent charges in the newspapers of improper influence over certain members of Congress by certain railroads, and especially of the favors dono the Pacific railroads by Congress, through the Speaker, while Blaine was in that position, the House passed a resolution to investigate. Mr. Blaine's name was not mentioned in the resolution at all, but it was evident to all, or almost all, that the investigation was to be particularly directed toward him.

Shortly after the committee began its investigation, Warren Fisher of Boston, who had had charge of the construction of the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad for some New England capitalists, was summoned to Washington to testify. It was known that Mr. Fisher had the disposition of all the bonds and stocks of the company, and it was also known that Congress had been asked to make certain land grants to this railroad, and that it made one while Mr. Blaine was Speaker. Mr. Blaine had made a certain ruling which favored this railroad. Mr. Fisher's coming down to Washington to testify, therefore, created an air of expectancy, especially since it was rumored that he had broken with Mr. Blaine.

Now, along with Mr. Fisher came a little Boston Irishman by the name of James Mulligan. Before the committee the next day Mulligan testified that Blaine, while Speaker of the House, had acted as broker for Warren Fisher in disposing of the securities of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad. He said that Blaine had sold to certain of his wealthy friends in Maine about $520,000 worth of these securities, for which he received $162,500 in bonds and stocks as commission. It was just prior to that that the Union Pacific Railroad had got hold of something like $75,000 of the securities of the Little Rock and Fort Smith.

Mulligan one day was being prodded very closely by one of the members of the committee, Lawrence of Ohio, a friend of Blaine. Wincing under the fire, the little Irishman grew excited and reaching into his pocket he pulled out a small packet of letters and other papers. Flaunting this in the faces of his cross-examiner and of Mr. Blaine, he exclaimed with heat: "Here, I have the proof of every word I have said. These are Mr. Blaine's own letters telling about it."

After the meeting was over, Mr. Blaine went to Mulligan and besought him to give him the letters. Mulligan says that he went to his room and got on his knees before him, begging him to spare his wife and six children from disgrace and to prevent his everlasting ruin. Mulligan, however, refused to give up the letters except under promise from Mr. Blaine that he would upon his "honor as a gentleman" return them to him. Mr. Blaine took the letters and asked Mulligan what he intended to do with them. Mulligan told him that he intended to publish them if any one questioned his veracity or impugned his testimony. Mr. Blaine then refused to give up the letters. The incident was published in the papers and created the greatest excitement in Washington and throughout the whole country.

Mr. Blaine refused to give up the letters when they were demanded of him by the Investigating Committee. Instead, he rose to a question of personal privilege in the House, and made his famous speech in defense of himself. There he produced the bundle of letters, and declaring that he wanted 44,000,000 of his countrymen to know what they contained, proceeded to read them.

One of them began: "My dear Sir: I spoke to you a short time ago about a point of interest to your railroad company that occurred at the last session of Congress." The letter went on to describe how that a measure was up to grant certain lands to the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad. Some member not in favor of the measure tried to defeat it by offering an amendment which would not pass. The letter declared that the bill would not have passed with that amendment, yet the amendment would have prevailed if the House had voted upon it. Blaine, who was Speaker, sent a page to Gen. Logan, who was known to be in favor of the bill, and told him to make a point of order against the amendment and he, the Speaker, would sustain the point of order. This was done, and the amendment went out, and the bill was passed. Blaine described it all in his letter to Fisher, and then added: "At that time I had never seen Mr. Caldwell, but you can tell him that without knowing it I did him a great favor."

The other letters were about the bonds, which Blaine was selling for Fisher, and in most of the letters there were requests for more liberal settlements than Fisher had allowed. In another letter Mr. Blaine used these words: "I do not feel that I shall prove a deadhead in the enterprise if I once embark in it. I see various channels in which I know I can be useful."

There is this difference between the Blaine-Mulligan-Fisher incident and the Roosevelt-Harriman incident, that while President Roosevelt gave out the letters himself to be printed in the papers, only a few newspaper correspondents being present, Mr. Blaine read his letters to crowded galleries. The most intense excitement prevailed throughout the two hours' speech and subsequent speeches made by the opponents of Blaine, and a thrill went through the whole country.

Proctor Knott was Chairman of the committee which had in charge the investigation. Mr. Blaine charged him, in the first instance, with having put two Democrats and ex-Confederate soldiers on the committee to investigate him. The galleries cheered Mr. Blaine when he made this charge. Mr. Knott arose and said that he had nothing whatever to do with the appointment of the sub-committee, but he said that the two ex-Confederate soldiers of the committee were equal in ability to the gentleman from Maine, "and," said he, "it is no disparagement from the gentleman of Maine to say that in the matter of honor they are his superiors." At this, there were hisses from the galleries and from the Republican side. "There are three kinds of animals which hiss," remarked the imperturbable Knott, "vipers, geese, and fools." This sally, harsh as it was, created a laugh and brought back the House to good humor.

Mr. Blaine didn't get the nomination at Cincinnati that year, and when he did get it, the letters were undoubtedly influential in defeating his election.

In the case of the Credit Mobilier scandal, there were no letters and there was no testifying on the part of anybody against himself, but there were important documents, which many members of Congress were afraid of, and their publication bears something of a resemblance to the method by which the first Harriman letter was published. That is, the documents were stolen from a courtroom in Delaware by a newspaper correspondent. The documents were published, and so many members of Congress were involved that a Congressional investigation was offered.

The Credit Mobilier scandal was simply this: The Credit Mobilier was a company chartered under the State of Pennsylvania for the purpose mainly to take charge of the affairs of the Union Pacific Railroad, which was then under construction. The Credit Mobilier undertook the construction of it. Oakes Ames, a member of Congress from Massachusetts, had large stock holdings in the company. It was in the days when the United States was giving large subsidies to these Pacific railroads, and the Union Pacific needed governmental favors. Oakes Ames's scheme was to sell to his fellow Congressmen stock in the Credit Mobilier. The stock was worth over 200. Ames sold it to Congressmen at par, and if they did not have the money to pay for it he sold it to them on credit, and in some cases allowed them to pay for it in the dividends on the stock. Since the company was declaring an 80 per cent. dividend it took just fifteen months for the stock to pay for itself. Thus the Credit Mobilier and the Union Pacific had many friends in Congress. An investigation in 1872 showed that many prominent members of the House had bought stock on these liberal terms from Oakes Ames. Among these was James A. Garfield. It is said, however, that Garfield was not hurt politically by this. In the Presidential election in Ohio, when Garfield was a condidate, it is said that men fell over one another trying to be the 329th man to vote for Garfield. Three hundred and twenty-nine dollars was the amount of dividends from the Credit Mobilier which Garfield had gotten on his stock. Such a scandal was created that Garfield gave up his stock. It was the Credit Mobilier scandal which ruined Schuyler Colfax politically. And it was the same which killed James Brooks of New York.

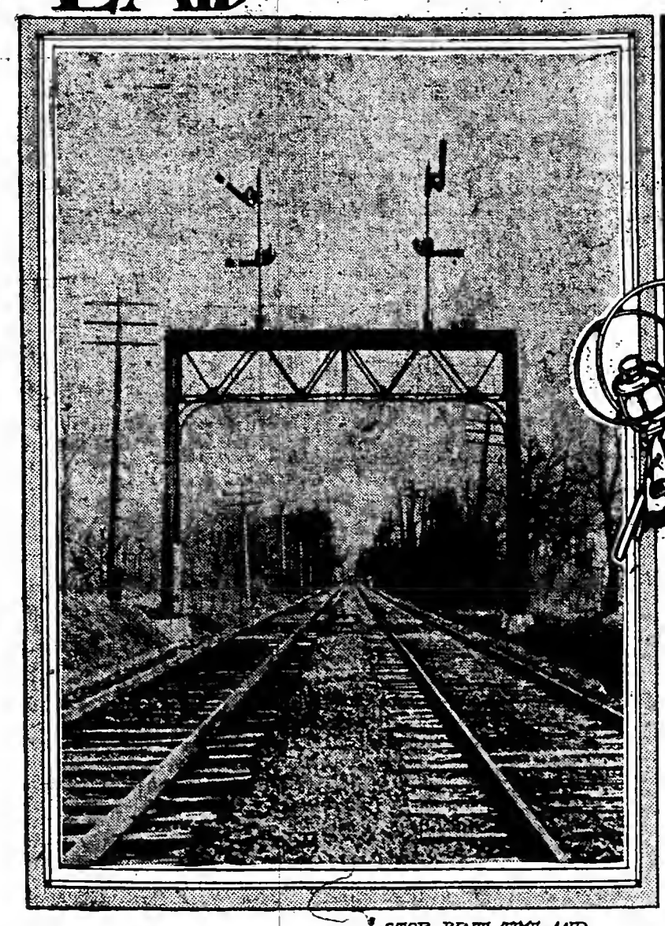
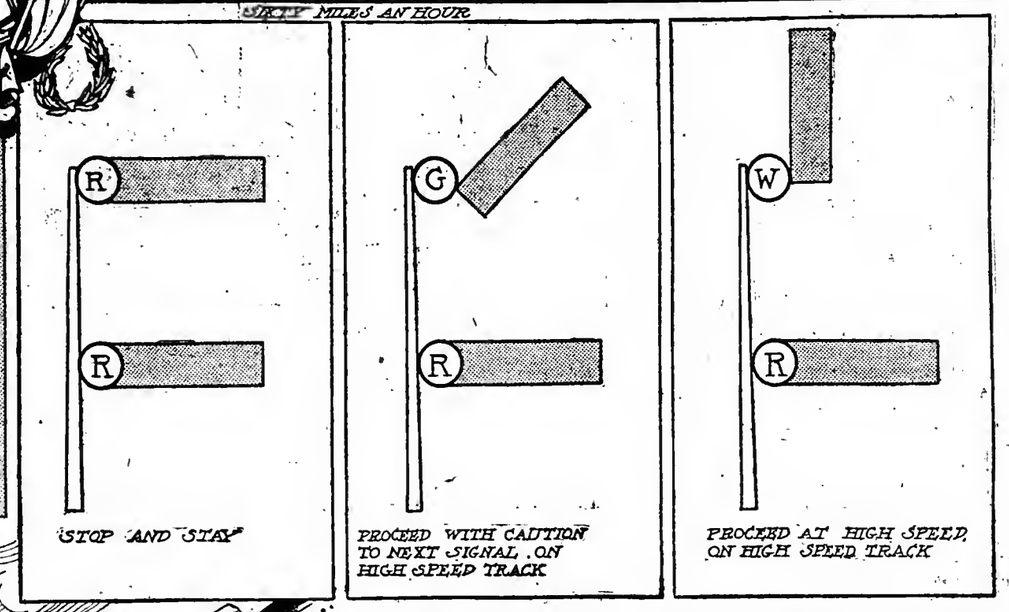
TRAPS LAID FOR THE UNWARY RAILWAY ENGINEER

"Surprise Tests" Show That Increased Respect Is Being Paid to Orders and Signals and That "Running By" Is Becoming a Serious Matter.



STOP, WAIT TIME, AND PROCEED SIGNAL.

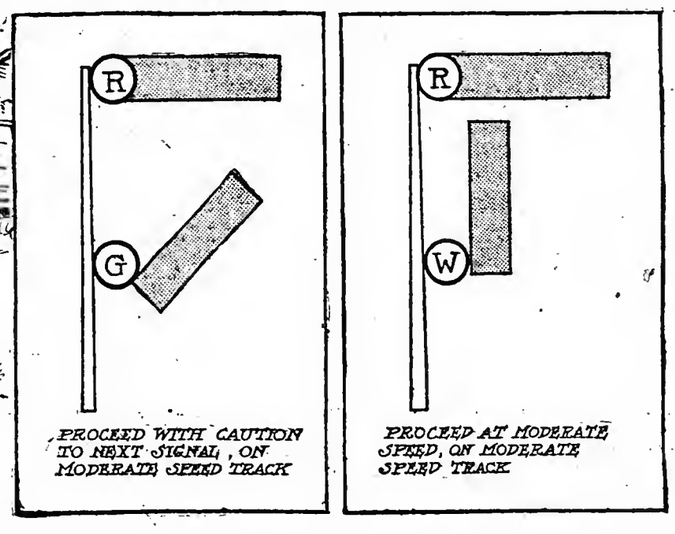
SIXTY MILES AN HOUR



STOP AND STAY

PROCEED WITH CAUTION TO NEXT SIGNAL, ON HIGH SPEED TRACK

PROCEED AT HIGH SPEED, ON HIGH SPEED TRACK



PROCEED WITH CAUTION TO NEXT SIGNAL, ON MODERATE SPEED TRACK

PROCEED AT MODERATE SPEED, ON MODERATE SPEED TRACK

"THE engineer disregarded signals."

In future this verdict will seldom be reached in investigations into railroad accidents. Recent "surprise tests" held by the Pennsylvania Railroad showed that only 3 per cent. of more than 2,000 engineers ran past "danger" and "caution" signals suddenly sprung upon them. This means that the engineer is being trained to closer regard for signals, and that the modern system of signaling has facilitated this training.

Before the installation on the railroads of the telegraph block, the automatic and other modern signal systems, which through many devices have compelled the engineer to observe greater caution, accidents due to engineers disregarding signals were numerous. Years ago, when a train was stalled, one of the crew would run back on the road with a flag and a lantern to stop the approach of the next train. Often in a blinding snowstorm the man carrying the danger signals would be passed on the road by an approaching train. Until it loomed up suddenly like a grim ghost in the white mist its presence would be unsuspected. Then it would be too late. The red lantern could be seen in a snowstorm, but the engineer was not keen to face the freezing sleet.

"An interesting case of willfulness on the part of an engineer happened on the New York Central some years ago," said a well-informed railroad man yesterday. "An engineer on the road boasted to his fellows that 'there ain't no flag what can stop me unless I want to stop.' Apparently there wasn't. A train plunged into the river at New Hamburg, N. Y., through an open drawbridge, by the side of which fluttered a red flag. When from the river the body of the engineer was dragged it was found to be the boastful engineer."

Accidents caused by engineers running past flags and lanterns became so numerous that an expedient to prevent them was sought. Somebody suggested that flagmen be furnished with giant torpedoes and place them on the track in addition to using flag and lantern. Engineers stopped when the torpedoes exploded, but after remaining still for some time with no danger evident ahead, they would start ahead again, only to crash into a stalled train back of some curve in the road. No excuse could be offered by the engineer for the accident. He had violated the rules of the company. He had taken a chance. His thorough knowledge of the road and the rules magnified the enormity of his error, but it afforded no relief.

Finally popular feeling demanded reform so strongly that the railroad man was forced to heed. After wrecks traffic figures fall off, showing that the public was afraid to patronize the road. Evidences of this character compelled the reassurance of the public. The railroad man, who conscientiously and honestly sought to remedy conditions, learned that no matter how much money he spends in perfecting his signal system, a careless engineer can render it inefficient. So he has taken the engineer in hand.

Many times when the débris is cleared after a wreck, a mangled form wrapped in shreds of oily overalls is found and identified as the engineer. He has paid for his fault with his life, but that has not prevented other carelessness. And the engineer who escapes the death into which he has dragged carloads of other persons, to meet discharge and perhaps a prison cell, does not prevent others committing the same acts of criminal negligence. The experienced railroad man knows that the moral effect of such catastrophes upon other engineers really amounts to nothing.

Finally the Division Superintendents decided that the solution lay in the simplification of the signal system. "Simplify the system so that instructions to engineers will be so simple that they cannot possibly make mistakes," has been the dictum. The old flag and lantern and torpedo that gave way to other devices, which gradually grew into so involved, so complicated, a system that reading of a signal became like solving a puzzle to the engineer, forced, through the demand for fast travel and the natural growth of the railroads, the gradual evolution of a new signal system. Thus gradually the telegraph block, automatic and other modern systems have been evolved. All of these seek to obviate the carelessness of the engineer and to minimize danger. They have been wonderfully successful.

Yet there have been bad wrecks recently despite these highly efficient systems. The most recent was on Dec. 30, 1906. A freight train ran into a stalled passenger train of the Baltimore & Ohio on that date at a place called Terra Cotta, just outside of Washington. Of the passengers on the train 43 were killed and 67 injured. "The engineer on the freight train disregarded signals," was the verdict reached in the investigation.

It was this wreck more than anything else that caused the Pennsylvania Railroad to announce that many extensions in its block signal system were in the course of construction, and that the management of the railroad was exerting every effort to increase the care shown by the employes in operating the trains according to the signals. The railroad set on foot investigations that worked a sudden transformation in the engineer.

Recent "surprise tests" conducted by the Pennsylvania Railroad seem to indicate that the metamorphosed engineer has come out of his cocoon. Ninety-seven surprise signal tests have been made in the last three months on the road. In that time 2,252 trains have been tested. Ninety-seven per cent. of the men complied with the rules of the company, while 3 per cent. ran past the signals before stopping. These latter were marked in the official record of the company as deficient and all of them were suspended, the suspensions ranging from two to forty-two days. The severity of the punishment is explained in this statement of the company concerning the tests:

"It is the well-settled principle of the Pennsylvania management that negligence which might cause an accident is almost, if not quite, as serious as if the accident really occurred."

In this connection it is interesting to know that the Pennsylvania Railroad is trying a new system of signals, which will be used in the new terminal it is erecting in Washington. The system was devised by a committee appointed by the railroad to investigate existing methods of signal operation and to recommend a system which could be adopted over all the lines. The system developed is expected to combine the best features of train protection with proper provision for train operation. It will take considerable money to install this system. To prevent carelessness, the company is educating its engineers up to the new system with "surprise tests." It does not intend to have its money wasted.

For obvious reasons the tests were conducted with the utmost secrecy. They were also held while the regular schedules were in operation. Under the circumstances the engineer had not the slightest idea that he was being examined; in fact, he never learned that the investigation was going on until it had been in progress many months. At unusual times in unexpected places he would come upon signals set at a "caution" or a "danger" position, and would either observe or ignore the instructions given him. In a convenient place were stationed division officials, who made a careful record of the engineer's actions. If the engineer obeyed the signal, he never heard anything about it; if he disobeyed the signal, he was suspended. The only reply he received to his question as to the reason for his suspension was "for ignoring signals."

Pennsylvania Railroad Trying a New System of Automatic Signaling Which Will Be Used in Its New Terminal in Washington.

On the Pennsylvania Railroad automatic telegraph block and interlocking switch and signal systems are used. Automatic signals are controlled by the train, and human agency has nothing to do with their operation. The telegraph block signal system and the interlocking switch and signal system each require an operator to manipulate. The automatic signal does not require an attendant. At block signal stations the rules of the company require that the operator report to the proper officials any engineer not properly observing all signals. With the automatic block signal system, however, the signals are located between these offices, where there is no one to report non-observance of the signals. The automatic system thus naturally affords the best opportunity for "surprise tests."

In automatic signaling on the Pennsylvania Railroad two signals appear to the engineer. The "home" signal is with reference to the block immediately ahead. If that shows "white" he may proceed. If it shows "red" he must come to a stop before passing the signal. If he passes the signal by as much as five feet he has violated orders, and is therefore subject to discipline. Each "home" signal has its distance signal, which indicates whether its "home" signal is clear or not, and displays either "white" or "green." "Green" is a "caution" signal, and requires the engineer to get his train under control so that he can stop at the "home" signal. This does not necessarily mean that the train must slow down immediately if it can pass at a high rate of speed and still be able to stop at the next signal. "Caution" does not mean "stop." In the "surprise tests" distance signals were set at "green," "home" signals at "red," at places where engineers are accustomed to find them "white" fuses were displayed, and torpedoes were placed on the track at unusual places, switch lights extinguished, and everything in connection with signaling trains was placed either at a "caution" or "danger" position.

Other tests besides the one already mentioned have been made by the road. On Aug. 4, 23, and 24, and Oct. 3 and 5 last year special tests were held at certain stations. On these occasions a total of 291 trains passed the signal stations during the tests, and all but fifteen came to full stops before reaching the testing point. Every one of the fifteen delinquents brought his engine to a full stop before getting more than a few feet beyond the signal. But even in these cases, where the error was simply one of judgment in handling the air brakes, every one of the engineers was severely disciplined—in some cases as much as thirty days' suspension being imposed.

Of 180 trains tested on the main line of the road recently 98 per cent. obeyed the rules absolutely. The remaining 2 per cent. in not carrying out the rules of the company were severely disciplined. Tests made on the New York division, where trains are operated so frequently and many on high-speed schedules, gave a perfect record in the observance of the company's rules. The records show a constant decrease in the percentage of those not disobeying implicitly all orders.

April a Month of Action

COL. JOHN M. BISHOP, Deputy Surveyor of Customs, whose duties in connection with the examination of baggage on the transatlantic piers have made him better known probably to transatlactic voyagers than any other man in America, is a deep student of the history of the civil war. In his researches Col. Bishop has discovered that no month played so important a part in that struggle as did April. In April Lincoln was assassinated, Lee was made Commander in Chief of the Army of Northern Virginia, Albert Sidney Johnston was killed at Shiloh, Farragut fought the battle of New Orleans, and Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox. These and other events that made history in the sixties Col. Bishop tells of in the following interview:

"No month in the year figures so conspicuously in our war history," said Col. Bishop, "as does April. Forty-six years ago on the 12th of this month Fort Sumter was fired on by the militia of the State of South Carolina. Hardly had President Lincoln taken his seat on March 4, 1861, when the Legislature of South Carolina voted to raise an army of ten thousand men. Charleston at once became the storm centre of the rebellion. Men from all parts of the South flocked to Charleston to volunteer. Fort Sumter must be seized. Its builders had not dreamed that it would ever be fired on from the land side, and so it was not capable of making a stubborn resistance against the fifteen batteries which sent shot and shell against it from Morris Island, Fort Moultrie, and other points. The bombardment of Fort Sumter was hastened by the Southern fire-eaters in order to stir certain wavering States to take the final plunge into secession. Edmund Ruffin of Virginia, who had hastened to Charleston to urge immediate assault on the flag of the Union, was accorded the honor of firing the first shot at the doomed fort. This shot was fired from a mortar at Fort Johnson at 4 o'clock on the morning of April 12. Major Anderson made a heroic but hopeless resistance. He surrendered at noon on April 13.

"Edmund Ruffin, who fired the first shot of the war, committed suicide at his home in Danville, Va., after the surrender in 1865, by blowing the top of his head off with a shotgun. His dying message was that he did not want to survive the liberties of his people. On April 15, 1861, President Lincoln called for 75,000 troops.

"The first expedition to go forward in the service of the Government in the civil war was equipped in New York City. Acting under orders of President Lincoln, G. V. Fox equipped a vessel, the steamship Baltic, and with an escort of 200 men sailed from New York on April 9 with supplies for Fort Sumter. A squadron composed of the United States ships Pawnee, Powhatan, Pocahontas, and Harriet Lane, with three tugs, accompanied the Baltic. The expedition failed to reach Charleston in time.

"The Ringgold Flying Artillery of Reading, Penn., was the first military organization to respond to the President's call for troops. It started for Washington April 16. On April 19 the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment was attacked by a mob while passing through Baltimore to Washington.

"On April 22 Robert E. Lee was made Commander in Chief of the forces of Virginia. On April 25 the New York Seventh Regiment reached Washington, traveling by water from Philadelphia to Annapolis, to avoid Baltimore. On April 6 and 7, 1862, was fought the battle of Shiloh, the Confederates being commanded by Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston and the Federals by Gen. U. S. Grant. The National forces numbered about 45,000 men, while the Confederates were perhaps 5,000 less. In this engagement Gen. Johnston was killed and his army defeated.

"On April 18, 1862, Commodore Farragut began the famous naval engagement known as the 'Battle of New Orleans.' After a five days' bombardment of Forts Jackson and St. Philip the Federal commander ran the gantlet of these forts and attacked the rebel fleet, destroying eleven of their vessels and winning a signal victory. The Confederate forts surrendered on April 28.

"The first day of April, 1863, was ushered in by a bread riot at Richmond, Va. Three thousand women, armed with guns, clubs, and stones, broke open the Government stores and private stores, taking out bread, clothing, and provisions. Jeff Davis made a speech to the rioters and later the militia quelled the disorder.

"On April 7, 1863, Col. A. D. Streight started from Murfreesboro, Tenn., in command of a cavalry expedition in Georgia and Alabama. The famous Confederate General, N. B. Forrest, gave chase, and one of the most noted running fights of the war ensued. Forrest dogged the heels of the invaders, fighting daily for a period of ten days. Finally Streight's ammunition was exhausted and his men so reduced by fatigue that he was forced to surrender. His entire command, about 1,500 men, were sent to Libbey Prison at Richmond, from which loathsome prison Col. Streight and 100 of his men subsequently escaped by burrowing beneath the walls.

"During April, 1863, no less than sixty engagements took place between the Union and Confederate Armies.

"On April 21, 1863, the President proclaimed West Virginia a State of the Union. April 12, 1864, witnessed the notorious Fort Pillow massacre, by which about four hundred colored soldiers were shot by Confederates under Gen. N. B. Forrest. The first days of April, 1865, witnessed the dying struggles of Gen. Lee's Army of Virginia.

"The battle of Five Forks was fought on the first day of the month by Federals under Sheridan. On the 2d Grant pushed operations in front of Petersburg. On the 3d Richmond was occupied by the Union forces under Major Gen. Weitzell of the Twenty-fifth Corps. Lee telegraphed Davis at 3 P. M. on Sunday, the 3d, that he was driven back and must evacuate. This was announced in church. All the leading men got away that evening. Four rebel ironclads and five wooden vessels were blown up. The Virginia was sunk in the James River. The city was fired and much of it destroyed. Five thousand wounded Confederates were found in the Richmond hospitals.

"On April 6 Gen. Sherman began his famous march from the far South to Washington.

"On the 8th of April Gen. Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant at Appomattox, Va. On the 14th of April, 1865, the flag which was hauled down from Fort Sumter in 1861, was again raised over the fort by Gen. (formerly Major) Anderson, who was in command of the fort when it fell. The flag was absent from duty four years and a day.

"President Lincoln was assassinated on April 14, 1865."

Only an Organ Grinder

FOR the past five years an Italian organ grinder of the old school has made almost daily visits to certain houses in the upper part of this city, until now the people in front of whose homes he plays know him as they do the butcher and the baker. His bandbox-like organ is supported by a wide strap over his shoulders and a stick underneath, and is loaded with such classics as "Where is my wandering boy to-night," "Watch on the Rhine," "The Marseillaise," and other soul-stirring melodies. One day last week the man and his music box stopped in front of one of the houses on his route and he was about to turn the organ crank handle when suddenly his hand dropped to his side and he stared in open-eyed wonder at the doorknob on which hung a black crêpe. He stood there for a few minutes, his eyes wandering from window to window, apparently searching for the familiar faces as though he would account for the one the crêpe told him was no more, but finally, with slow, hesitating steps and lowered head, he approached the door and rang the bell. A lady in mourning opened the door, and the Italian, nervously clutching his soft hat in one hand pointed to the crêpe with the other.

"Canna you tell who dead?" he asked in a voice that suggested mingled reverence and fear that he was treading on forbidden ground.

"My mother is dead," replied the lady.

"Ah, ze leetle lady! She sit by ze window and leesten to ze music, so? Ze lady with ze white hair?" nodded the organ grinder as though affirming his own words.

"Yes, that was the lady," responded the young woman.

"It ees so sad, so sad!" muttered the Italian, bowing his head and placing his hand over his heart as he retreated down the steps. An hour later he was again at the door. The colored maid answered his summons and he handed her a big parcel wrapped in tissue paper.

"Gif to ze leetle lady," was all that he said and went away. The package contained a handsome floral design that must have cost at least $10.

Admiral Beresford's Views on New York

ADMIRAL LORD CHARLES BERESFORD, Commander in Chief of the British Channel Fleet, who has been in this country and Mexico for several weeks winding up the one-million-dollar estate of his brother, Delaval, who was killed in a railroad accident in South Dakota a few months ago, will sail for England in a few days. In an interview which he granted at the Hotel Netherland the Admiral gave some of his impressions of America, to whose shores he is no stranger. Of New York he said:

"The business part of New York is very much more alive before 8 o'clock in the morning than the city part of London at that hour. On the other side we take things more easy. Here one sees in the downtown section the banker, the broker, the merchant, the speculator, the 'bulls' and the 'bears' flying past him and into their offices in hot pursuit of the 'almighty dollar,' and the English visitor suddenly realizes that in New York the business man has been downtown, made a fortune, lost it, and has begun to make another one before the London business man has had his breakfast of bacon and eggs. But the New Yorker, I find, doesn't accomplish more work and bigger deeds in the long run. Great allowance, you know, must be made for your natural fussiness and excitability, for there is no doubt that you people are inordinately high strung. The great difference between the New Yorker and the Londoner is that the New Yorker takes three steps to the Londoner's one. The Gothamite expends three times as much nervous energy as the Londoner does in the execution of his day's work, but he hasn't more to show for the extra steam expended when he quits his office for the day. More leisurely methods in your daily business life are what you people ought to cultivate."

Shouldering and elbowing each other in the street are habits which Lord Charles declared New Yorkers were especially guilty of.

"My many sojourns here," he said, "have taught me that the best time for a stroll in New York is when it is raining, for one can then have the streets practically to himself. But the rain must be heavy. I infinitely prefer walking on wet and muddy streets to being constantly jostled about."

Turning to the subject of politics, Lord Beresford, who is an Irishman himself, said that the Irish and Germans rule America politically, and he seemed considerably piqued at this.

"The Irish—my own countrymen, who couldn't rule themselves at home to save their lives—and the Dutch vote holds the balance of power, I find, in almost every part of America. This, as I see it, is due to the fact that the Republican and Democratic Parties are so nearly of the same size. Consequently a man who goes into politics here has to court the Irish and Dutch vote. You people don't seem to care; you just follow the leader. The result is that you don't dare to say that your soul is your own without first getting the permission of Mr. O'Flynn and Mr. Schmidt. I do not suppose, however, that this condition will last forever—at least, I hope not. Some day you Americans will declare independence of the Irish and Dutch vote, and then foreigners, like myself, visiting your shores will be able to know what real Americans think and mean.

"There are probably no two cities in the world which are at the same time so alike and so unlike as New York and London.

"To me one of the most striking things about New York is the absence of chimney pots on its buildings. In this particular the city reminds me of nothing so much as a battleship without funnels. London is dotted with thousands of chimney pots—sometimes dozens of them on one building. But chimney pots are as necessary to us as steam heat and rubbers are to you. And speaking of rubbers, by the way, reminds me that I saw one of your marines in the street the other day with rubbers on and also carrying an open umbrella. There was a little drop of rain coming down at the time. The sight struck me as being, to use that expressive phrase of yours, 'the limit.' Of course I suppose it is one of the idiosyncrasies of your people, but I may say that if a British sailor were to be seen on the public streets in England similarly rigged out he would be instantly mobbed. All that marine fellow needed, it seemed to me, to complete his outfit was a lady's fur muff and a hot water rubber bag."

Lord Charles has traveled all over the United States in his periodic visits, and the most wonderful feature he finds in the growth and expansion of the country is the number and variety of its cities.

"But in passing through its cities," he said, "one does not find any marked diversity of architecture, although in the sites and surrounding scenery, in character and composition of population, in temperament and degrees of energy, the very widest range is to be found."

Twelve o'Clock

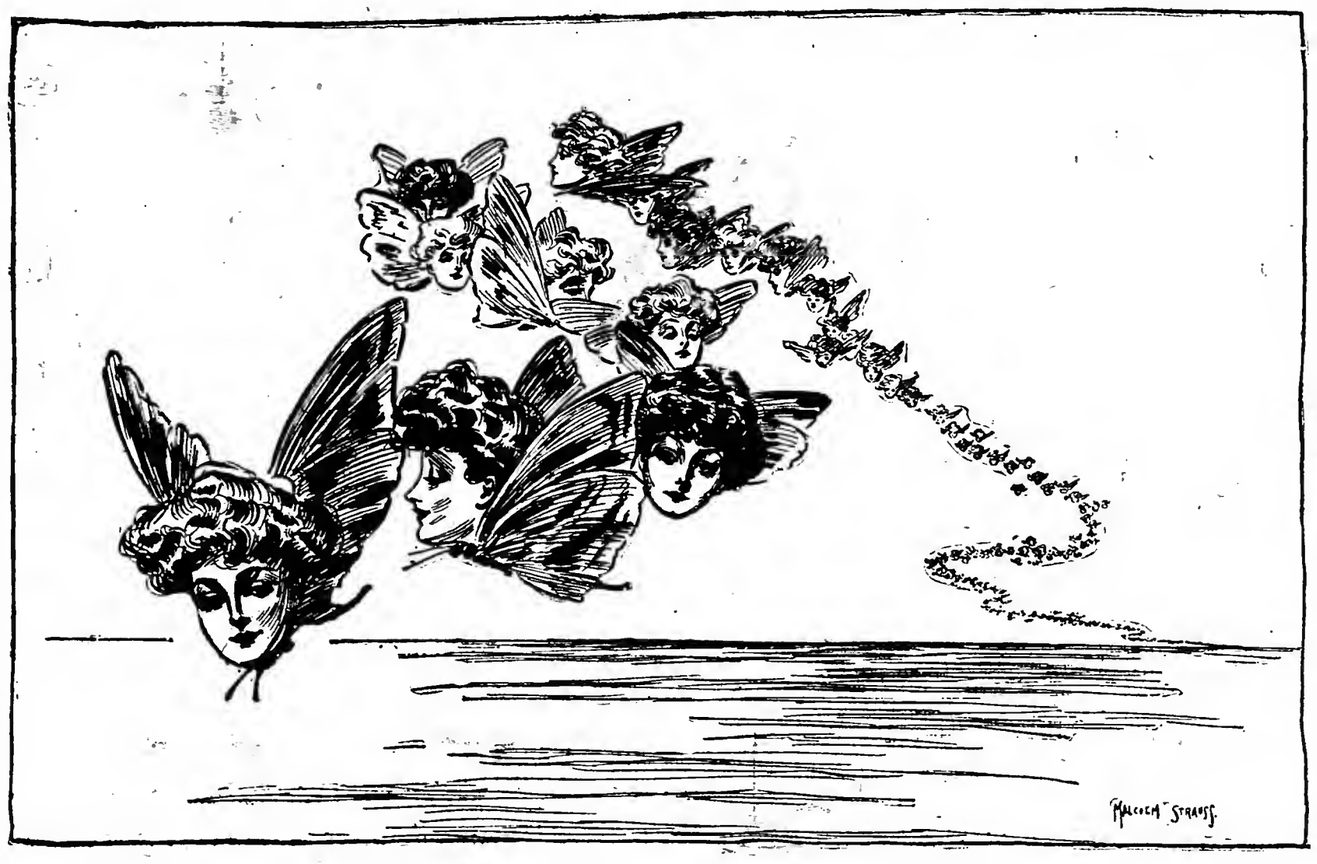
EVERY day at noon a crowd assembles at Fulton Street and Broadway and hundreds of eyes are leveled heavenward for a moment or two. The uneducated observer wonders what it is all about, and tries to fathom the mystery by following the crowd's gaze. Suddenly with one accord the crowd pulls out its watches, some of the people merely glance at their timepieces, and with a smile of satisfaction pass on, others pause a moment to thumb their stem setters, and in a twinkling the crowd has melted away. This performance is a daily event in the neighborhood, and is explained by the fact that on the roof of a building near the southwest corner of Fulton Street and Broadway there is a sixty-foot pole upon which a big red ball slides up and down. Until 12 o'clock midday the ball remains at the top of the pole, but promptly at 12 it slides down and the waiting crowd knows that 12 o'clock has officially arrived.

Beginning at the Wrong End

On lower Broadway, just below the Post Office, a vacant store was recently altered and redecorated for a new tenant, and a freshly painted sign announced, not a glorious opening nor the advent of somebody with the best line of something, but a "closing out sale." Closing out before starting! Evidently, the author of "To arrive you must start" reckoned without his host.

THE AMERICAN WOMAN'S INFLUENCE IN ENGLAND

Chiefly Due to the Remarkable Success of Two Members of a Remarkable Group of New York Girls Who, as Bouncers, Flourished Thirty Years Ago.



ONCE upon a time—some 30 years ago—there existed in New York a group of girls so fair, so clever, so gay, so inexhaustible as to attract universal attention, while all men admired and few women envied. Brought together by similar tastes and pleasures, they grew together by mutual understanding and good-will. They presented a solid and unabashed front to the rest of society. Like Dumas's Mousquetaires they were all for one, one for all. No dance was complete without them, for they waltzed better than other girls. No country house frolic was a "go" unless they led the skating, the bobsledding, the charades, and the blind man's buff. They were pre-eminent at the Jerome Park races, and were as much at home on the deck of a yacht as on the top of a coach. They sallied for a season at Newport, or would go off together to some country hamlet and make that for the moment the headquarters of fashion.

It was at this time that the late Laurance Oiyphant was attempting to propagate his somewhat complicated system of sociology in this country. He was a favored guest at the house of the late S. L. M. Barlow, and it was there that he first came into contact with these fragrant specimens of American girlhood. Like all men, he was vastly attracted by their originality and mobility, but unlike most men he was able to write down his impressions and sentiments in a series of charming articles which he contributed to The World, of which the gifted William Henry Hurlbert was then editor. Under tho title of "The Bouncers" he gracefully and delicately handed down to social fame the traits and peculiarities of these comrades of his host's daughters, and as "Bouncers" they will always be known as long as any tradition of New York society remains.

There were only six original "Bouncers," although later they had many imitators and would-be followers. Let us introduce them formally to our readers. First and foremost there was Miss Consuelo Yznaga, now her Grace the Dowager Duchess of Manchester. Next in importance must rank Miss Minnie Stevens, now Lady Arthur Paget. Miss Elsie Barlow, the only one of the magic sextet to die young, became Mrs. Stephen Henry Olin; Miss Helen Gandy is Mrs. Henry Y. Leavitt; Miss Margaret Gandy is Mrs. Lawrence Perkins, and Miss Dora Tbayer is Mrs. Riggs of Washington.

It is only with the first two, who married Englishmen, that our present interests are concerned, and neither our own society of the day nor Olyphant himself ever had any conception of the influence these two New York "Bouncers" were to have upon not only the social life of London but upon the friendly relations between Great Britain and the United States. They were the pioneers of the American woman's influence in England, an influence which in these two distinct instances has gone far beyond mere ballroom popularity or royal favor, and has come as close as woman may to affairs of State and Cabinet councils.

The Duke of Manchester.

It was in the early seventies that the young Viscount Mandeville, heir to the Dukedom of Manchester, first made his appearance in New York. It might have been sung of him as of a hero in one of Offenbacb's operas:

Il n'est pas beau, il n'est pas riche,
Il manque tout-à-fais de l'esprit!

He had left England in bad odor with his own people, but had retained the esteem of the then Prince of Wales, now King Edward, and was very proud of a cable of congratulations he received on his birthday signed "Sandringham," the Prince's private code name, and which he showed extensively about his haunts in the Tenderloin. His prospects at this time were anything but bright. He had made no career for himself in the army or in politics. His tastes were for the race track and the prize ring. His father's life seemed good for years, and at all events the family estates were so incumbered that a Dukedom to the young Viscount seemed like only an additional burden.

Yet there was a winning friendliness, a wistful sincerity, about "Kim," as he was called after the family castle, Kimbolton, that won him many friends in New York. Of course the clubs were open to the young nobleman, and in time he too fell in with and under the thralldom of the "Bouncers." That he was no heiress hunter is proved by the fact that he married the poorest of the group. His future Duchesa was the beautiful daughter of Antonio Yznaga del Valle, who had at one time been one of the richest of Cuban planters, but had lost his fortune through the political convulsions of that unhappy island. Her mother was Miss Ellen Clements, a woman of rare beauty and accomplishments, who long charmed New York and Newport society with her charming musical talents, which her daughter inherited to a marked degree. The Yznagas were then dividing their time between a plantation in Louisiana and a small house in New York. Mandeville's wooing was short and decisive, though never a man had more clamorous rivals. Whether it was the prospective Dukedom or his own weird personality that won out is not material. A wedding in New York followed in 1875.

There was nothing triumphal about the Mandevilles' return to England. They retired to a small Irish estate, part of the Manchester property, and settled down to a quiet country existence. There in 1877 was born the present Duke, who is married to Miss Zimmerman of Cincinnati. But if Mandeville had neither money nor position, he still had the friendship and good-will of the Prince of Wales. It was during those early days of comparative poverty and seclusion that Lady Mandeville had the best opportunities of gaining the regard of his Royal Highness and of his consort as well. Her gay and buoyant spirits, her varied talents, her great beauty, combined with rare tact and, above all, the piquancy and originality of the original "Bouncer," made an impression upon the heir to the British throne which time has never effaced or dulled. Other favorites might come and go, but she was always as she is to-day persona gratissima to Albert Edward, and long before she became the Duchess of Manchester she was as welcome a guest at Marlborough House and Sandringham as she is to-day at Windsor Castle or Buckingham Palace.

Lady Mandeville had some years to wait before she could add the ultimate triumph of the strawberry leaves to her big baaket full of fruits and flowers, but the coveted prize added practically nothing to her already assured position at Court, except in the matter of rank. Soon after the Duke of Manchester died his widow became the Duchess of Devonshire, and left the path entirely clear for that Duchess of Manchester, the former "Bouncer," who will always rank in English history as the most fascinating and influential of her name. Her husband only lived to enjoy his ducal honors until 1892, when he was succeeded by the boy born in Ireland in 1877. After his death Consuelo, Duchess, devoted herself to the education of her lovely twin daughters, who unhappily succumbed to an hereditary taint of consumption just as they approached womanhood, and since then her life has been passed in the enjoyment of an ever-cherished intimacy with the King and Queen of England and their immediate entourage.

It is difficult for us simple-minded republicans to appreciate just what the reciprocal benefits are to be exchanged between a sovereign and his subject. It would seem all sufficient for the subject simply to bask in the smiles and approbation of royalty, and for the sovereign to enjoy the best and brightest moods of the subject and dismiss the rest as unworthy. This is scarcely the case with King Edward and the now Dowager Duchesa of Manchester. No King of England to-day could carry forward the affairs of state and public etiquette with such firmness and precision as King Edward does without the cheery companionship and confidence of tried and trusty private friends. There is perhaps no man in public life who could be more bored by the routine of a Court than King Edward if he could not in periods of relaxation turn to just such a friend as Consuelo, Dowager Duchess of Manchester, has proved herself to be.

This is proved over and over again in a dozen different ways. When his Majesty seeks rest and seclusion, either in London, on the Continent, at Sandringham, or Cowes, in Scotland, or in the great country houses of his favored subjects, you will usually find the former "Bouncer" one of the particular chosen few "commanded" by her sovereign to help pass away his time. It is in this intimacy with the private life of the King that lies this American woman's influence in English society. There is not one woman in ten thousand who could attain to such a position. There are not a dozen women of English birth who have achieved it. If it is asked whether the Dowager Duchess of Manchester is of great assistance to other American women in the social aspirations in England, it may be answered shortly that she is not.

To all old friends she is cordial and helpful as she may be, but it would be obviously impossible for her to take advantage of her own intimacy with royalty to urge the claims of others upon a too-considerate sovereign, and moreover she knows too well the barriers and pitfalls that encompass their way up. If through her the King wishes to convey any condescension to some other American, then it is her bounden duty to do what she can to make a meeting easy and agreeable, but as for her lending a helping hand to the thousand and one "Climbers" that bob up in London now and again, it is not in her and would be quite derogatory to her own exalted position to think of it. Whether it be her beauty, tact, cleverness, discretion, or talent that have won her what she has gained, nobody knows better than she how rare such a combination is among women of any nationality. The Duchess is now at Biarritz assisting at his Majesty's annual Spring rest cure.

Lady Arthur Paget.

In the limelight of such an American Duchess we have been compelled to overlook for a moment the brilliancy of another notable "Bouncer" who has won for herself a position and influence in English society second only to that of Consuelo Yznaga. Miss Minnie Stevens was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paran Stevens. An only brother died and left her sole heiress to a large fortune. Little seen or known of Mr. Stevens in society until his death emphasized the fact that he had left a very interesting and assertive widow, who proposed to make her houses on Fifth Avenue and at Newport the most attractive in the land. To this laudable purpose her daughter lent her tall and statuesque beauty as the best drawing card.

It was to the Villa Marietta at Newport of blessed memory, then in the heyday of its fame and fashion, that a tall and handsome young Capt. Arthur Paget came to pay a visit one August in the early seventies. His wooing of the heiress was quite as ardent and successful as that of Lord Mandeville for Miss Yznaga. He was a soldier of fortune, which usually means a soldier without fortune, but his family was one of the best in England and had been about Courts for generations. To his credit be it said that after marrying his rich American wife he stuck closer than ever to his profession as soldier, and to-day is one of the ranking Major Generals in the British Army, with a brilliant war record and medals and still in active service. I have said that his wife was beautiful, but destiny had also stamped upon her the hallmark of fame. Had she lived to be a man to-day she would undoubtedly have been a Pierpont Morgan, a Harriman, a Hill, or a Rogers, or, as the daughter of her father, who owned the Fifth Avenue Hotel, a George Boidt. As it was, and without the rank of her fellow-"Bouncer," she soon established herself in a pretty house in Mayfair, and her reputation as an exceedingly clever and agreeable woman of the world whom the world would do well to cultivate. While her husband was attending to his military duties abroad, this calm, observing, far-sighted woman was arranging her own outposts and defenses at home, and before long London became aware that a very strong and attractive personality had been established in its midst, and that another American influence was not exactly being pushed abroad, but was subtly permeating the atmosphere of Court circles.

Here again was discovered the daring, the originality, the amiability, the tact born of the "Bouncers." While succeeding along much the same lines as Lady Mandeville, Mrs. Paget seemed to exact rather more homage from her admirers than the Viscountess. While the latter was all sunshine and glitter for every one—worthy—and scattered her bounties without any apparent thought of return, Mrs. Paget was more cool and calm in her methods. It was the difference between a Summer morning and a moonlit night, each charming in its way and full of great possibilities. The same spell of royal favor was cast over Mrs. Paget as on Lady Mandeville. If Mrs. Paget did not join the royal parties so much out of London, the Prince and afterward the King was oftener at her own house. Her little dinners and bridge parties for Great Personages became famous the world over. She, too, had succeeded in doing what so many ambitious Englishwomen had failed to do, and that was to win the esteem and confidence of the first lady in the land. Every one knew how absolutely unassailable was this lady's position at Court, but nobody quite appreciated how deep and sincere was the royal regard until she suffered that dreadful accident of falling down the well of the lift in her own house and so shockingly fractured both her thighs that for years she lay a helpless, motionless cripple, and is only just now able to hobble about painfully on crutches. The anxiety, attention, and devotion displayed over her sufferings by all members of the royal family can only be understood by those willing to acknowledge that Kings and Queens may also have close, familiar friends and possess tender and sympathetic hearts.

With such touching evidence of another American woman's influence in England we can drop the subject of the two "Bouncers'" unbounded popularity and glance over the general subject of international marriages which have not been productive of any such results, as well as the outlook for the hordes of our fellow-countrywomen who still press onward determined that they too shall leave their marks on the history of the British Empire.

Other American Women.

International marriages are following each other in such rapid succession these days that it seems strange to be able to pick out only a few in which the influence of American women in England has shown its head above the level surface of domestic happiness or unhappiness, or of extravagant entertaining. The wedding of Miss Bessie Livingston, a twin daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maturin Livingston, to George Cavendish Bentinck, an offshoot of the Dukes of Portland, succeeded in placing that young lady in a very enviable position as regards recognition from the royal family, so much so that, as Prince and King, Albert Edward has generally dined with them once or twice a year, and as King came very near being present at the wedding of their daughter not long ago, a slight indisposition causing great disappointment among a large congregation assembled for the purpose of seeing his Majesty.

The wedding of Miss Endicott of Boston to Mr. Austen Chamberlain introduced that blue-blooded and blue-stockinged young lady into a very hotbed of Conservative and free-trade politics, in which she cleverly held her own without exerting much influence one way or the other. The marriage of Miss Jennie Chamberlin to Sir Naylor Leland has made some impression on London artistic life, for since her widowhood she has devoted a large fortune to the collection of art treasures, and her recent loan collection in her London house was one of the most remarkable of recent years. The marriage of little Miss Bradley Martin to the little Earl of Craven, which collected such a mob at Grace Church, was simply one of those international "arrangements" from which nothing more could be expected than a quiet little life in a quiet little world of their own. When Miss "Baby" Beckwith married the gentleman who is now Lord Leigh it was a distinct loss to the world at large, for she has never since occupied so unique a position as when the professional beauty of New York.

Miss Mary Leiter's wedding to Lord Curzon opened up a dazzling vista of Vicereineship in India, where she played her part nobly, and there is no telling how she might not have advanced the interesting career of her husband if her life had been spared. Her sister, who married the Earl of Suffolk, seems to have settled down to a peaceful rehabilitation of the old family estate, which was sadly in need of repairs. Mrs. Hamersley made the Duke of Marlborough a very good wife while he lasted, and seems capable of supplying any number of other Britishers with an amiable helpmate. The elderly husband of Mrs. Samuel Colgate, the Earl of Strafford, did not live very long to enjoy her beauty, and she has mated with another master, this time a commoner, but they say a very affable person.

I have kept the two ducal marriages, those of Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt to the Duke of Marlborough and of Miss May Goelet to the Duke of Roxburghe, because they seem to point a moral and adorn a tale. Of course both were purchases pure and simple by hard-earned American dollars of unearned hereditary titles. Of course it is nobody's business even if the buyers did not get what they bargained for. The Duchess of Marlborough created a most agreeable impression all over England and wherever she went by a sweet and girlish manner that is as winning in a palace as in a tenement, but quite uncalled for in a Duchess. If she had had more spirit or had exercised more of the American woman's influence foreshadowed by the "Bouncers" we would not have witnessed the sad spectacle of her own happiness come tumbling about her head while she stood bravely by to restore Blenheim and build Sunderland House. It is said that she has the sympathy of all England, from royalty down, but all the King's horses and all the King's men cannot restore to her the shattered hopes and ambitions of her youth.

As for the Roxburghe affair, we hear little of that, except that the young couple prefer the country to Courts, that the Duchess possesses the most beautiful jewels in England, and is spending an immense sum on the restoration of Floors Castle, so that no news in this instance may be reckoned as good news, but not hopeful of strong American influences.

As to Other Influences.

In not one of all these instances and of many other unmentioned do we find that an international marriage has produced anything like the strong personalities of the Duchess of Manchester and Lady Arthur Paget, (her husband is now a Knight.) Can it be because these other women were not "Bouncers" and were not brought up in "Bouncer" methods? Or haa English sentiment changed in its attitude toward American women since the seventies? Is it less ready now to submit to that subtle influence which all clever American women are said to exert? Will the English take nothing but our money now, and let the influence go by the board? Is the American woman to lose her power, and must we be content in the future with the influence of the Choates and the Reids and the chatterboxes of the Pilgrim Club to maintain the grasp of those hands across the sea?

How, then, about these women crowds of them, who are constantly going to London to extend the American woman's influence? The exodus is enormous just now. The shops are full of them. They, of course, are not going abroad to get married, for they already have stalwart Yankee husbands, who are supplying them with the sinews of war for their campaigns.

But would it be cruelty to these dear creatures to intimate to them that such an influence might be exerted in any other fashionable rendezvous in the world—at Cairo, Venice, Monte Carlo, Paris, Pau, or Biarritz? The English have only become more civilized. They now let Americans in where they were debarred in days gone by. American women have such a "gushin', rippin' way about 'em, don'tcherknow. So awfully jolly, so cozy!" And there you have about the sum and substance of this ignis fatuus, this will o' the wisp that our American women are now chasing in England.

Figures That Show How the World Is Growing

BIRTH and death and wealth are the heroes of an interesting bluebook which has just been issued in London by the British Government. What country is growing most rapidly in population, what country is the most crowded, in what country is the death rate greatest, and where does it cost most to run a Government—these are the problems which this little book undertakes to solve.

There have been reports from time to time that in certain countries the average death rate is greater than the birth rate, and that thus, in some instances, population is dwindling, and that consequently, in some indefinite period in the future, extinction awaits a few unfortunate nations. This bluebook, however, apparently puts an end to the fear of this catastrophe. Running over a period of ten years, from 1895 to 1905, the British statistician finds that in the eleven principal nations of the world an increase in population is the invariable rule of the day. Thus during that period there has been a total increase in the world's population of 63,000,000 persons, making the complete figure for 1905 in round numbers 570,000,000.

This figure does not include any of the South American, Asiatic, or African nations except Japan. Figures for these countries are based purely on estimates. Thus China alone is said to have a total population of 432,000,000, and the British colonies over 350,000,000. These, with the other nations which are omitted from the calculations of the bluebook, would bring up the grand total for the world to a figure not far from 2,000,000,000 persons.

The countries to which the calculations of the bluebook apply are Russia, United States, Germany, Japan, Great Britain and Ireland, France, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Spain, and the smaller European nations. Of these, little Belgium is the most crowded of all the civilized nations of the world. With a population of 7,000,000 persons and an area of 11,370 square miles, the people of Belgium are crowded at the average rate of 588.7 to the square mile. At the other end of the scale, the least crowded of all the civilized countries in the world, stands the United States. The population of the latter in 1905, as given by the bluebook, was 83,143,000, its area in square miles 3,567,871. This gives the percentage of persons to the square mile in this country at 21.4. Russia, with its population of 125,000,000, comes next to the United States, its rate of people to the square mile being 51.5. Spain comes next with a rate of 95.5 people to the square mile.

In actual increase of population in ten years Germany takes the lead with a gain of 18,326,000 persons. After Germany, in the order named, come Russia, United States, Japan, Great Britain, Austria, Italy, Hungary, Spain, and France.

Russia leads the civilized world in its birth rate, having 49 children born for every 1,000 of its population. With this rate, considering the Rusalan lead over all other countries in total population, one would naturally expect the greatest actual increase for the land of the Czar. Strangely enough, however, Russia shows the highest death rate, the latter being 31 for every 1,000 of its population. Denmark has the lowest death rate, 13.9 per 1,000, while it has a birth rate of 28.5 per 1,000. France has the lowest birth rate among civilized nations, 21 per 1,000. Its death rate is as high as 19.6 per 1,000. The two averages taken together naturally explain the extremely small increase of 831,000 persons during the last ten years in the French Republic. Spain, Italy, Austria, Hungary, and Japan have birth rates of over 32 per 1,000 of population; but their death rates are equally high, the lowest of the group being Japan, with a rate of 20 per 1,000, and the highest Spain, with a rate of 23.8 per 1,000. Great Britain has a favorable death rate, 16.5 per 1,000—but its birth rate has fallen to 27.6. The bluebook has not computed the birth and death rates of the United States.

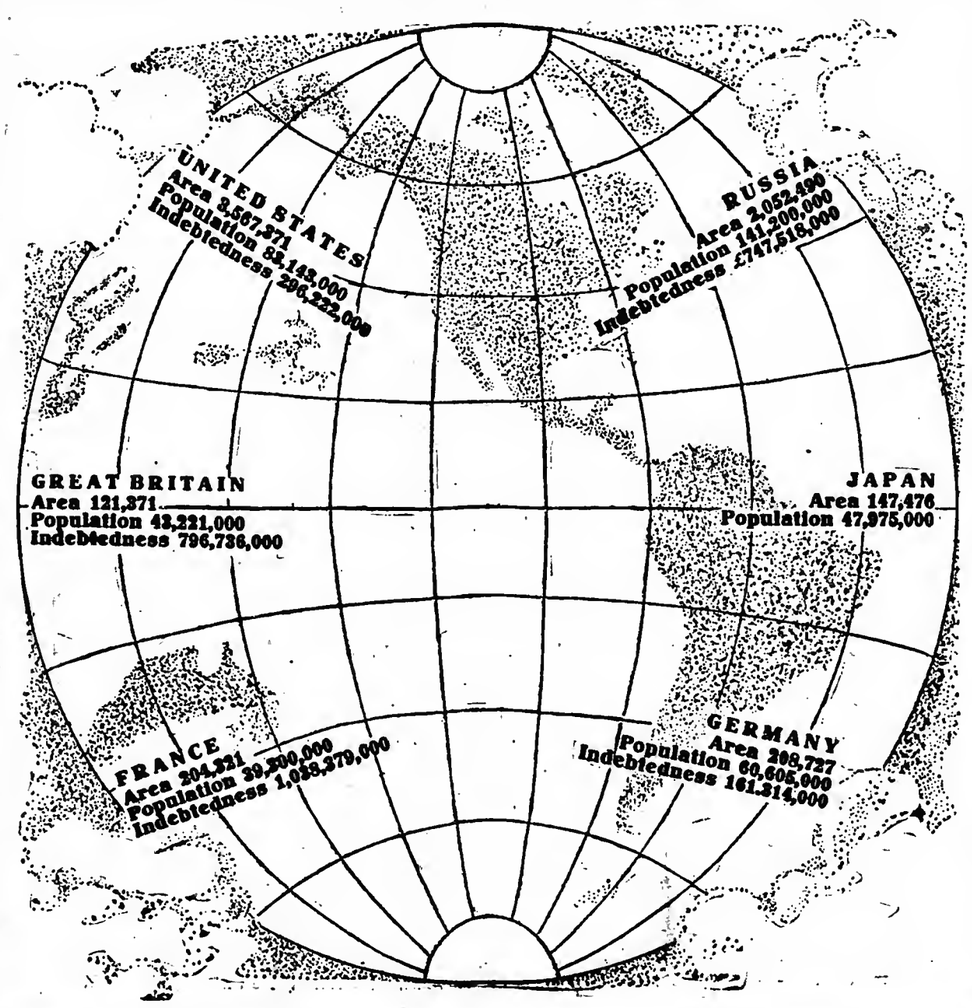
In comparing the populations of the eleven principal cities of the civilized world, the bluebook gives London 4,872,710 persons, New York 3,437,000, Paris 2,714,000, Berlin 2,040,000. Tokio is next to Berlin in population, and then come Chicago, Vienna, Philadelphia, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Buenos Ayres, in the order named, these eleven cities being the only ones in the civilized world showing a population of over a million inhabitants.

Surprising as it may seem, it costs less per head to run the Government of Russia than any other nation in the civilized world. The average Russian tax is $10 for each person in the empire, that of Great Britain, France, and Austria-Hungary runs over $15 per head of the population of these countries.

The total debt owing by the nine most important nations comes to more than $20,000,000,000. The detailed figures of the expenditures and debt of these nine nations are as follow:

	Expenditures.	Debt.
Russia	$1,084,823,750	$3,625,462,300
United States	727,606,700	1,436,676,700
United King'm.	712,700,830	3,844,889,600
France	697,861,650	5,036,138,150
Germany	535,653,400	782,372,000
Italy	359,262,150	2,508,947,650
Austria	350,467,700	1,874,471,650
Hungary	245,604,000	1,097,753,550
Belgium	113,827,261	611,987,550

From this table it appears that France is the greatest debt burdened nation, with Great Britain and Russia the second and third respectively in the list. Belgium has the smallest national debt. In the matter of expenditures, Russia is greatly in advance of any other nation; the United States and Great Britain come next. Belgium apends less than any of the other nations.



THE NATION'S GIANT GUNS IN THE MAKING

FIRING A BIG NAVAL GUN AT THE PROVING GROUNDS. POWDER GAS IS ISSUING FROM THE MUZZLE.

According to the now famous letter of President Roosevelt to Chairman Foss of the House Committee on Naval Affairs big guns and plenty of them is the last word in naval matters—and that from Great Britain and Japan, powers uniquely qualified to set the fashion. And, after all, what is a giant warship but a sort of marine motor car to carry and discharge these awful weapons?

Our two new big ships are to cost $10,000,000 each, and $1,000,000 a year to keep in active commission. For they will be warships with an overwhelming broadside of six tons' weight of metal per minute, not counting the furious hailstorms from minor batteries.

Many centuries of research into the "science of slaughter" have gone to make the 12-inch naval rifle of to-day, which is to decide the disputes of nations. Considered merely as a forcible argument, it may be truly said to be the world's last word; only quantity, not quality, can be improved.

These guns, then, are the "stand-by" of nations that seek to uphold their prestige on the sea, and at present an ironclad of the first class—the "capital ship" of the battle line—mounts four of them in revolving barbettes protected by Krupp armor a foot thick. But the monster of to-morrow will mount half a score, for this is the era of the big-gun-big-ship, as typified by the British Dreadnought, the Japanese Satsuma, and our own two monsters about to be laid down.

Marvels of the 12-Inch Gun.

Our 12-inch gun's power is almost beyond conception. Weighing sixty tons, it will hurl a sharp-nosed armor-piercing projectile, heavy as five or six big men put together, a distance of twenty miles. And the muzzle velocity is so great that if it were maintained the great 850-pound shell would encircle the globe between dawn and dusk and reach the moon in five days!

Arrested early in flight the projectile, propelled by its charge of 250 pounds of nitro-cellulose compound, will pass through 45 inches of tough wrought iron as though it were paper. But as each shot costs $750, even mere target practice with such a gun will fairly eat up the Nation's money. Work the five pairs at top speed, and it will take $25,000 a minute to feed their ponderous maws, quite apart from the terrific wear and tear on great weapons that cost $50,000 each.

But surely the mere casting and forging of these guns is labor for Vulcan's own workshop. At Krupp's, in Essen, an army of 10,000, fed with coal and iron from vast private mines, turn out engines of destruction by the thousand. There are another 12,000 men at Lord Armstrong's works in the North of England, besides an aggregate of 40,000 more in the titanic Government forges of Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Japan, and Russia, and these thousands are quite apart from armor plate makers and builders of battleships.

Last, though by no means least, we ourselves keep 5,000 men forging Mr. Roosevelt's "big sticks" in the immense navy yard on the Potomac, where you will see one great gunshop more than 1,000 feet in length.

United States Quickly Catching Up.

The rapidity with which we have caught up with the older nations in the matter of the making of giant ordnance is a striking tribute to our adaptability and great resources. It is curious to look back on the years succeeding the civil war, when we were bungling with the old 11-inch Dahlgren guns, trying to turn them into 8-inch rifles by inserting rifle tubes into the bores.

And even so late as 1884 we had no modern artillery nor means for making it. On the other hand, foreign nations were working with a haste and precision that made our own clumsy makeshifts appear ridiculous. For this reason the President sent a body of naval and military officers to Europe to study the making of big guns, and one result was our immense naval gunshops at Washington, on the spot where for many years mighty anchors had been forged, ships built and fitted out, and antiquated guns made and tested.

The moment we woke up to our growing naval needs we went ahead with characteristic energy. A couple of millions was set aside to start the new works, and we sought to extend the old shops, adding and extending year by year as Congress voted more and more money, according to the extension of the work, and its value to the country at large.

To-day we have in Washington a veritable Forge of Vulcan, more than fifty acres in extent, and capable of turning out every grade of gun, from the vicious spitfires of the racing torpedo boats right up to the now out-of-date 126-ton monster that threw a 2,000-pound shell with a charge of 640 pounds of high explosive.

Evolution of the Gun.

Nothing is more remarkable than the history of great ordnance, and the way guns steadily increased in size and power until the 100-ton mark was reached. Then they went as steadily back in weight, yet not in power. The fact is the 100-ton gun's life was not counted by years at all, but rather by the number of rounds fired, and a giant that taxed a nation's resources to build, and yet was worse than useless after eighty shots were fired, was bound to be relegated to the scrapheap.

Its great length and enormous charge of explosive caused it to sag and droop perilously at the muzzle; and although it might be rebuilt after eighty rounds had been fired, no real reliance could be placed upon it in time of war. Even the 80-ton guns of a decade ago are now antiquated, and likewise fit only for the naval scrapheap, which represents already so many hundreds of millions of national money the world over.

But to view the genesis of our monster naval guns one has to go a stage further back than even the Naval Ordnance Works at Washington. It is at the vast Bethlehem, Midvale, and Carnegie works that one sees the birth of the huge steel ingots that serve as raw material.

Here are the mighty regenerative melting furnaces, heated by gas, in which the secret alloys are melted. Each blazing pit is capable of melting between fifty and sixty tons of steel at one casting, and that under the closest supervision of chemists, who watch at every stage the "behavior" of the metal; for it is above all things imperative that the metal should adhere all along to its fixed proportions and pass without the smallest deviation through all stages of manufacture.

When the metal is properly melted the furnace is "tapped," and the white-hot liquid steel is allowed to run into immense ladles. The furnace has a temperature of probably 2,500 degrees, and one gazes fearfully, with eyes protected by blue spectacles, at the magnificent sight of the pouring of the metal.

As the curving stream of fire runs into the receiver in a current of ineffable radiance, showers upon showers of sparks shoot up from it, brilliant and flashing, as they fall in a gorgeous display which any pyrotechnic artist would despair of ever equaling. Next comes the ingot-casting shop, a vast room of 100 feet span, where are a series of pits 20 feet deep and big enough to take the ingot molds into which the molten metal is run from the great ladles, so as to form a rough, cannon-shaped ingot.

How Armor Plate is Cast.

When the gun's great rival, the armor plate, is being cast the ingot molds weigh 70 tons each, so that with the weight of the ingot itself, which is another 60 tons, a mighty crane capable of lifting 130 tons is needed in the casting shop.

A certain time is allowed for the ingot to cool, yet it is still highly heated when withdrawn. On no account is it allowed to grow cold, and at most successive stages it is kept in a more or less heated condition. When taken from the mold the ingot goes to the forging department, and is immediately charged into a reheating furnace, to be heated by gas once more for several hours until it has attained a high uniform degree of heat throughout its mass.

Any deviation may produce cracks when the ingot is brought under the colossal forging press, which exerts a pressure of 12,000 tons. The special object of forging the ingot slab is to bring the material into a state of homogeneity by reaching the centre of the mass, just as a housewife kneads her dough.

A pressed ingot is molded to the gun's shape, and later on cut into cylindrical blocks of the size required for forging the different parts of the gun. A hole is bored in the centre for hollow forging, and on being taken from the reheating furnace the tube of a 13-inch gun is immersed in a vast bath of oil, as also is the armor plate at a very critical stage of its manufacture.

The gun tubes are delivered to our Government Navy Yard in a more or less advanced stage, and with them the massive hoops and bands, which after several months of trimming and pruning, will be converted into shining rings and barrels; these put together make the finished weapon. For, as most people know, the great naval gun of to-day is not a solid metal tube, but is scientifically built up by shrinking around a central tube layers of massive steel rings in such a way that the completed gun suggests a gigantic drawn-out telescope.

Some years ago, when the building of giant guns was a novelty with us, "shrinking day," with a 13-inch jacket to be fitted to a naval monster, always drew a crowd to the yard. The shrinking pit in the immense gunshop is nearly 50 feet deep, and every workman of the 600 present knows some great event is at hand when all the petroleum furnaces are roaring and glowing under the influence of the air blast.

"Shrinking" the Jacket.

The hour is usually 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and the jacket, weighing perhaps 35,000 pounds, is made ready after thirty-six hours of baking, when it is brought to a temperature of perhaps 700 degrees Fahrenheit. The transference of the gun jacket from pit to tube is always a sight worth seeing. It is a liberal education in silent discipline.

At a given signal two overhead cranes, one of them with a lifting capacity of 110 tons, wheel over the reeking pit. The smaller of them hooks on to the furnace lid and swings it on one side with a giant pull. Then the larger crane comes into position and lowers its mighty chains to the jacket. A barely perceptible signal on the part of the foreman starts a mighty rattling and humming as the steel jacket begins to rise from the furnace.

The crane, bearing its 16-ton burden, moves on until the jacket is exactly over the tube of the gun. For this latter has also been placed upright in the pit. The critical time is at hand, for unless the jacket is exactly centred over the tube great trouble, expense, and delay will surely result.

The great cylinder is moved a fraction of an inch first one way and then another. There is a bare four-hundredths of an inch play all around, from which one obtains some idea of the delicacy of the operation. And the heat from the jacket is intense. The faces of the workmen who are steadying it with asbestos-gloved hands are almost blistered. But at last the reel of the great crane unwinds, and the jacket descends. Slowly, almost as the hour hand of a clock at first, but then with ever-quickening speed until it brings up with a triumphant drop on the end of the tube.

Eighteen hours or so are allowed both tube and jacket to cool; the process is hastened by cold water circulated inside. In cooling the jacket contracts considerably, and in the process nips the inner tube with such a grip as actually to compress it, so that the two practically become one single solid piece of steel.

Next come the hoops, so that gradually there grow around the central tube, which is the foundation of the structure, layers of big steel bands, until finally the gun takes on something of its ultimate shape. Mighty cranes take hold of it as you would a spoon or fork and place it lightly in great lathes, where it is smoothed and polished, bored and rifled, until all its crudities have disappeared, and it is almost ready for delivery to its ship.

While all this is being done in the gun shop, hammer and forge, slotter and miller in other establishments are at work upon the great carriages upon which these guns must be mounted. A thousand machines served by 3,000 men are at this work, which requires to be done with the same patient skill; for when the 12-inch gun opens her mouth to speak the muzzle energy is enough to raise a weight of nearly 50,000 tons one foot from the ground in one minute. Here, then, is a place of giant machinery.

Giant Machines Used.

You will see forging "tools," that exert a pressure of three tons to the square inch, and mighty presses which cost $500,000 to build. In one forge throbs a 75-ton hammer, that makes the earth tremble with giant blows night and day; and altogether there must be nearly 2,000 colossal machines in this establishment, which has increased its output nearly tenfold within the last ten years.

And when the guns are completed they must be "proved." This is done at Indian Head, on a Government reservation, some twenty-three miles from Washington. Commonly enough gun and armor plate are tested together, for penetration and resistance have gone hand in hand in naval warfare ever since the world's fleets changed from sail to steam, from wood to iron, and from iron to steel.

The wire gun is a modification of the hoop system, the only advantage being that the wire greatly reduces the weight. The tube of a 12-inch wire gun will be bound round with 105 miles of steel wire. But when first introduced the wire-wound gun was defective, on account of a deficiency in the barrel's longitudinal strength. True, the wire prevented the gun from bursting, but not from bending. This has been remedied, however, by another layer of long tubes or jackets outside the coiling, and now the power of a 12-inch gun is so enormous that it will send its immense projectile traveling at the almost unthinkable rate of 1,651 miles an hour.

But let it not be thought that this is the end.

How Three Artists Painted the President's Portrait

In the past year President Roosevelt has posed for three portraits by as many artists and for widely different purposes.

Irving Wiles painted three portraits for the Roosevelt Room in the University of Berlin. One of James Speyer, who endowed the seat of "International Exchange of Professors"; another of President Roosevelt, who heartily co-operated with Kaiser Wilhelm and made the idea a possibility, and one of Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, who was the first American professor to lecture to the German boys on American politics.

Orlando Rouland openly says that he painted the President's portrait for no other reason than that of pleasure, not being commissioned by any committee whatsoever.

Baron Robert de Doblhoff painted the newest portrait, for the Peace Temple at The Hague, and was commissioned to do so by the Countess Bobinsky and other peace friends.

"My experience in painting the President's portrait?" asked Mr. Wiles. "Well, let me see!"

Mr. Wiles wiped the paint from some of his brushes, and smiled in a manner indicating that something was shaping itself in his mind.

"I had a very amusing experience while painting the portrait, and I now know that the President appreciates a good joke. These paint brushes remind me of it. I painted the portrait in the President's study, that being the room with the best light in it for my purpose. I always took my brushes away with me, carrying them in a japanned can. One morning when I went to the White House a new man was on duty. He did not know me, and there he stood barring my way, and looking me over from head to feet, first at the can, then at me. I tried my best to explain, but he was obdurate and could not be made to understand. Finally he sent in for another man, who identified me and I passed in.

"I found Mr. Roosevelt waiting, and as I had only fifteen minutes' pose at a time this five minutes seemed pretty precious.

"'What happened, Mr. Wiles?' he said in his very characteristic, business-like manner. 'Why,' I explained, 'the new man on the door wouldn't let me in until I had been identified.'

"'Eh?' he said, looking rather puzzled. 'Wouldn't let you in! Why—why—' and then he laughed—laughed as heartily as a good big schoolboy in his appreciation of a joke.

"'I see it—I see it now, just as they saw it. Why, Wiles, the man on the door saw that can—took you to be a crank with an infernal machine in your hand, and —' he laughed again very heartily, and finished: 'I believe you have one, for in this wait we have exploded ten minutes' good time in a poor bomb, and I'll have to make it up to you, so put the infernal ma—brushes, I mean, down, and let's get at the work.'

"One morning Mr. Roosevelt came into the study just a trifle later than usual. 'I beg pardon,' he said; 'I was thinking of an important matter, and—' he had walked over to a window and looked out, stopping in the middle of his sentence. He stood there for some few minutes looking into the park. When he turned around he began where he had stopped: 'That is the reason I'm late. You see, I have made up my mind to give you as good a chance as I can and not mix business with this sitting; if you don't mind we'll change the train of thought and talk about—'

"'Did you ever hunt in Africa?' I asked, referring to a book on big game that lay on the desk.

"'No, but I should like to,' and from that on the full quarter of an hour was filled with big game conversation, and when he left the room he laughed and remarked:

"'Thanks, Wiles; that big game cleared out the cobwebs.'"

Baron Robert de Doblhoff, who painted the portrait for The Hague, raised his hands high in the air and exclaimed:

"Ah! He is a human whirlwind. He is like the rapids and the whirlpool; he is like the maelstrom, although he does not destroy those he carries with him, this President of yours. But he carries you along on the tide of his energy."

"Mr. Roosevelt laid aside business when he posed for you?" I inquired.

"Laid aside business? Oh, no! Not at all. I wonder if he ever does that. I wonder if such a thing would be possible. If his hands are not employed his brain is. I think he always works. But that is American, though he is more alertly and typically American than any one else I have ever seen. I do not believe that there were thirty minutes in all during the sittings that he did not work.

"During the time I was making sketches he was talking business, first on this side, then on that. Suddenly he would leave his desk and walk over to the window and look out for a moment, but just for a moment. That seems a little peculiarity of his. Then he would come back and go right on where he stopped.

"In the very midst of talking with his secretary and business people he would glance over to where I was sitting, smile, nod, and then proceed with business. I just had to catch the studies on the fly. It was like taking snapshots, and I made many, many sketches first. On his first visit to my studio he came in and remarked that he would suspend business for a while. That sounded encouraging, but we had not been at work more than ten minutes when the telephone bell rang, and much to my dismay I detected a keen, alert expression in Mr. Roosevelt's eyes.

"'I think that is for me,' he said. I discovered that it was for him, and there, just as I had cherished hopes of a good sitting, I discovered that some very important business was on hand. However, the busy, busy man assured me that he would not leave the studio, but asked the people to come over, and there on the spot he engaged in business.

"I never worked so hard in all my life. Mr. Roosevelt makes you work hard—that is, his manner makes you realize that time is valuable, and you work as though your very life depended upon it. That's what I did in the weeks I was in Washington, and it is a wonder to me that I didn't get telephones, cablegrams, private secretaries, and business men in the portraits. It all made my head swim."

Orlando Rouland went to Washington to paint the President's portrait quite free and unincumbered by a commission of people to please, and this seemed to please Mr. Roosevelt.

"The first three sittings that I had," said Mr. Rouland, "were in an improvised studio.

"During these first sittings he proceeded with business, but a more thoughtful man I never saw. Several times during the posing one of the gentlemen with whom the President was talking, and who was walking up and down the room, passed between the President and myself. Stopping in his conversation he said: 'Mr. —, please, please don't stand between our artist and myself. I assure you his work is just as important to him as ours is to us.' Then he continued his conversation. He was always thoughtful of my work, and would many times pause, knowing almost by intuition that I desired a quiet moment.

'One of the most interesting things that happened, I think, was his several interviews with his children. Miss Ethel Roosevelt came in one morning, and she and her father talked about her school. 'How are your classmates getting on, my dear?' he asked her. She replied that one of them, calling the young woman by name, was somewhat behind. Her father leaned forward and said most energetically: 'Why, my dear, she ought to be doing better than that. Help her. Go to work and help her out. Get her up with the rest. One must not forget his fellow-creatures in the race. Help her up. I know you will.'

"This was the interest he exhibited constantly in the affairs of his children, and when one day I received a simple little note from my young nephew and handed it to the President a smile came into his eyes as he read:

"'My Dear Uncle:

"'I hear you are painting the portrait of the President. Will you ask Mr. Roosevelt to save all his cigar bands for me? And will you save yours, too? Please tell President Roosevelt that I have read his book "Theodore Roosevelt, Citizen," and like it so very, very much that I would like his signature for it.

"'Your loving nephew.'

"'Well, bless the boy!' said Mr. Roosevelt. 'Why, he's just like my boys. Just like them. He shall have his "signature"; I'll send him a line. Now'—and a tone of real misgiving came into the voice—'now, isn't it too bad I don't smoke?'

"He did not forget to send the letter to the boy, who cherishes that note above all his other youthful possessions.

RUSSIAN PROTEST TOLD IN CARICATURE

"Comic" Papers Confiscated Generally After One or Two Issues—Then the Name Is Changed and a New Paper Appears—Some Examples of the Russian Cartoonists' Work.

Special Correspondence of THE TIMES.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 24.—The birth of the "Constitution" in Russia was followed by a crop of "comic" journals in which weird cartoons depicted the bloody horrors of the present régime. These journals sprang up like mushrooms in the larger centres of Russia, but very few of them were issued more than once or twice under the same name, for they were confiscated as soon as the first numbers made their appearance; they were suppressed and the editors thrown into prison. Like some of the Russian newspapers, these "comic" publications had to change their names almost after each and every issue. The following extracts, taken from some of the suppressed publications, are typical and characteristic:

Grodz (The Nail) made its second bow to the public thus: "Being passionate collectors of Russian curiosities and monstrosities, we have decided to exhibit our curiosities on the walls of our house. We were prepared to drive in the first nail—a new, sharp, shining nail—into the thin partition separating our dwelling from the palace of Madame Bureaucracy, when suddenly her faithful servante notified her of our intentions. You may easily imagine what a stir that made. Madame grew irritated, her blood began to boil with rage, and she was thrown into a fit of nervousness. Just think of it! A plain, sharp nail sticking out through the wall of her beautiful palace! It might perhaps tear her gowns, (which, by the way, are quite worn out;) it might even scratch her tender body.

"'No, never! Mon cher, see to it that this nail shall not be driven in!' she ordered.

"What was to be done? We had to submit to Madame's caprice, for it was expressed so energetically and her orders were carried out by her obedient servants with remarkable zeal. But what were we to do with our collection? Then we decided to use meanwhile smaller and duller nails, which would not protrude very far through Madame's walls. And now, hoping for better days, we will drive in the second nail more cautiously than before, and will hang up on it some things from our collection. With the aid of God, the second nail will be followed by many other nails. Our collection is inexhaustible, the walls are large and there will be no lack of nails."

But the "nervous lady" prevented the curiosity collector from driving any more nails into her palatial walls.

Satira's Little Story.

Satira opened its first number with the following little story:

"A strip of fire has divided the earth in two. The earth became the arena upon which the people performed a historical tragedy. The common people, despising death, impersonated Conflict. For centuries it has studied this part—it has suffered and studied—and now it began to play it, full of power, fire, and talent.

"Those who were listening to music and to bewitching fairy tales while the people bore the terrible tragedy within their hearts; those that covered the windows of their palaces in order not to see the monstrous poverty and distrese that raged without, those people were now playing the parts of hangmen.

"A horrible drama is being enacted throughout the land. At the sign of Fate the curtain of the Future was lifted and lowered again. One act followed another, and the people were already beginning the act 'Emancipation.' Blood was gushing along the fiery strip which divided the earth in two. One side was soaked in blood. Death reigned there supreme. The finger of Death was lifted over the fields.

"It was dark yet on this side. Swallows and pigeons were still sleeping under the thatched roofs. And their friends, the inhabitants of that land, were also sleeping.

"The corn-crakes, the quails, and the butterflies were asleep in the steppes. Even the flowers were asleep. Only one little stream was awake; it kept rolling along over the stones, and it guarded, as it were, the sleeping kingdom. On the other side rang the beating of a drum. There were neither birds there, nor flowers—there were no friends, no verdant steppes. Here and there rocks covered the ground; here and there were foul swamps. There was no enthusiasm, youth, life there—only frogs were croaking.

"On this side the dawn is breaking—the beginning of a happy awakening. The rays of dawn are quivering in the morning twilight.

"On the other side ominous cloude have overcast the sky. There bonfires are burning. The hangmen are hidden by the impenetrable smoke. They stand there sternly knitting their brows. But the dawn of the Future does not smile to them. The people on this side are rising.

"The morning breeze began to whisper, rustling the grass, waking the steppe, warning it: 'Beyond the strip of fire are terrible locusts! The morning breeze touched the wings of the birds and whispered: 'Get up; be on your guard! Beyond the strip of fire are vultures!'

"And the breeze ran far, far through the steppe, singing one and the same song: 'Arise! Arise!' And on the other side they were listening. There they were struggling with sleep in order to prevent the awakening on this side. The hangmen did not close their eyes. They felt that there was an awakening in the steppes—and they formed themselves into lines."

Another "Comic" Story.

This fable cost the life of the "comic" journal called Syekira, (The Axe:)

"THE GIANT AND THE DWARFS."

"Once upon a time there lived a giant in a vast valley which was surrounded with mountains and seas. And this mighty giant was tilling the soil, earning his bread by the sweat of his brow.

Cultivating the Tree of Freedom.

"For many centuries black dwarfs lived in that land; but of late new dwarfs appeared—red ones. Both the black dwarfs and the red ones lived on the fruit of the giant's labor—and the giant with slavish submissiveness gave them away his last crust of bread.

"Suddenly a terrible war broke out between the black dwarfs and the red! The giant is resting after his hard work, slumbering in painful exhaustion. The dwarfs gathered about the giant, and a terrible struggle ensued. The black dwarfs seized the giant's sword and swung it over the heads of the red dwarfs. The reds fled aside, (some of them were hurt,) but the sword, falling back, struck the giant right into his chest. And his blood began to gush forth like a stream.

"Then the reds seized the sharp sword, and with all their might swung it at the black dwarfs. But the black dwarfs were quick and light-footed. They scattered on all sides. And the sword fell again upon the breast of the giant. And the giant's blood was now gushing forth like a river.

"And those dwarfs have long been battling with one another over the giant, and the blood of the giant who feeds them is streaming.

"Arise, O giant, arise! Teach the dwarfs wisdom!"

The second number of the Satira contains the following legend:

"HOW THEY CLIMBED THE MOUNTAIN."

"Once upon a time people lived in a suffocating, foul-aired valley. The people were poisoned by the ill-smelling vaporation from the swamps; the people were weak, sickly; they were rendered stupid and feeble by the foul air of the valley. Around the valley stood steep, high mountains, and the tall mountain tops, which seemed to kiss the sky, were wrapped with mysterious grandeur. The people of the valley looked with admiration upon the mountains when the sun at times penetrated the misty vapor which hung over the valley and lit up the golden mountain slopes.

"There was one brave man among the weaklings of the valley. He begin to love the golden peaks of the mountains, and knowing no fear he bravely left the valley and started out to explore the regione which surrounded the swampy valley.

"And before the eyes of the lover of the mountain peaks rose the mountains bathed in brilliant sunshine.

"There lived a wise man amid the fools of the poisonous valley, and suddenly the brave man met the wise man in the forcland, at the foot of the mountains.

"'What?' exclaimed the brave man with amazement. 'You have also resolved to leave the valley? You have ascended before me the wonderful mountains which we of the stifling valley never ascended? Come, let us hasten, let us tell the people of the valley of the wonderful springs, the beautiful flowers, the pure, health-giving air of the mountains, and the radiance of the mountain peaks!'

"'Yes, I have climbed the slopes of the mountains before you; I have long known of the beautiful flowers and the life-giving sunshine of the hills—I have long been studying the mountains. But I do not know as yet how to reach the top; and I do not want to tell the people of the valley about the sun and beauty of eternal Summer on the mountains. The foolish and the faint will forsake the valley and will start toward the light on the mountain tops—toward the golden heights—and on the way they will find thorns and bushes, abysses, rocks, and deserts.'

"'You are a scoundrel and a deceiver!' cried the Brave to the Wise. 'Am I blind? Can I not see how smooth and beautiful the road is to the very top? You have concealed from your brethren what you know of the charming life on the mountains! You want to enjoy it all yourself; you want to be happy all alone. You are wicked and dishonest!'

"'You see, you, too, are deceived. The mountain peaks are far, very far! The road is not so smooth, nor so beautiful—there are rocks there and thorns! The road is hard. I say; it is beyond the powers of the weak. I know a safe way of reaching the heights; I want to lead the people of the valley to the heights—but the people will not attain this bliss at once! Many years will elapse—many years of stubborn struggle. Everything must be reasoned out and considered.'

"'What is your plan, then, Sage?' the brave man interrupted him.

"'To build a road! Then even the fool, the faint-hearted, and the feeble will be able to reach the heights quickly, without trouble and privations.'

"'You are a coward and a slave! Let the feeble fall by the wayside—we must not remain in the swamps any longer! You are criminal in your calculations. The people are exhausted, the people are dying from the poisonous vapors. We must lead them to the mountains at once! Leave the swamps! And let no one dare return! An end must be made to the swamps! The towns and the villages must be destroyed and laid in ashes! We must go toward the light, toward the sun—forward! And you should be cursed for your delay!'

"And the brave man rushed back to the valley while the wise man remained absorbed in thought.

"With passionate appeal the brave man stirred the faint-hearted and the weak. The golden sun, the flowers, the springs, and the joy of the mountains captivated them, filling them with bright dreams. The people were carried away with enthusiasm. Cursing the swamps, they wrecked their dwellings and set all the houses of the valley on fire. The smoke blended with the vapors and made the air still more suffocating. And in the darkness of the mist and the smoke the people rushed to the mountains over the forelands.

"They entered the jungle.

"Thorns and bushes! Fallen cedars and pines on all sides! No road, no path! Terrible birds of prey are swarming hither and thither! Poisonous flowers! Like the gravedigger over the coffin, the mournful woodpecker with his blood-stained cap is pecking the tree, and brown owls are mocking.

"The people were falling from fright, bleeding from the sharp thorns in the thicket, and the weak were exhausted. The people were beginning to grumble. They cried to the brave one, threateningly: 'You have deceived us! Lead us back! You do not know the way!'

"The brave man kept encouraging them with impassioned words, calling them to go forward. Many died in the forest; many returned to the swampe. And the ranks of the people that started for the mountains with the brave man became thinner.

"Beyond the forest was the steppe. In the distance the mountain peak was shining in the sun. Seized with renewed enthusiasm, the people began to run again; but like a dream the mountain peak kept retreating from them. The people ran on and on—an hour, another—the whole day, and then the whole night—they ran onward in the darkness, hoping that by the first rays of the sun they would reach the hillside.

"Dawn was breaking, and soon the mountain top was tinted with a bright red hue by the beams of the rising sun. With loud sobs the people fell to the ground and thus greeted the sun, and the weak people mingled their tears with the morning dew; the brave man, too, knelt with them, turning pale with fear; the mountain peak stood out vaguely against the sky—and it seemed to him as though it had receded during the night!

"Again many returned to the valley; many fell on the way, and only a few remained when, on the following day, they reached a bottomless abyss! The cliffs rising from the dark abyss looked stern; the dull splash of water in the distance reached the ears of the people. And far away rose the mountain peak, vaguely outlined against the sky!

"A long time went by. The number of people following the brave man to the mountain peak was becoming ever smaller and smaller; innumerable victims covered the slopes of the hillside. Those that lived were roaming about wildly, trying in vain to return to the valley. And when the brave man, with his last supreme effort, with a shout of triumph, at last reached the mountain peak he was alone!

"And on the very top of the mountain stood the wise man waiting for him!

"The brave man bowed his head. And the wise man said courteously:

"'Let us return to the valley together—and let us build the road!'"

But the time will come when the nation will rise, and, straightening out its bent shoulders, will overthrow the whole structure.

The Real Russian Overlords.

Freak Bills in Some of the State Legislatures

STATE LEGISLATURES in this country are still being harassed with the usual percentage of freak bills, to judge from the crop of the last few months. Solons, filled with a wisdom far ahead of their time, persist in rising solemnly in their seats and advocating reforms which somehow fail to impress the callous people of to-day. One far-seeing legislator in Wisconsin tried to stop the wearing of corsets. He is a disappointed man. But others of his kind still fight the hopeless fight of making the United States the enlightened Paradise which they see in their dreams.

One of these jumped to his feet in the Wisconsin Legislature recently. He wanted a statute requiring all farmers to have all the eggs provided by their hens stamped with the date they were laid. The wisdom of the measure was apparent to all. But it didn't pass. He was offended. He has a poor idea of the Wisconsin intellect. He is looking for a substitute for eggs.

Then there was another Wisconsin legislator who inadvertently went to a show. It was quite a show. Judging from the costumes, the actresses in the cast wanted that little here below nor wanted that little long. That legislator sat up all night concocting a bill, which he presented the first thing in the morning, with the remains of a blush still lingering on his bronzed cheek. It provided that actresses appearing within the boundaries of Wisconsin should wear skirts reaching at least 4½ inches below the knee. The bill is still pending. There are some who oppose it. As for the actresses, all who enter the moral confines of the State, from Cheridah Simpson of musical comedy fame to ten-twenty-thirt beauties, are excessively annoyed and lose no opportunity to get up and declaim their feelings. As for the press agents, they are rolling in copy. And as for the legislators, they are busy joining committees appointed to see shows like that seen by him who originated the bill, in order that they may judge for themselves. At latest advices they were still judging. Standing room only.

In Iowa there is a Solon who rebels at the idea of giving tips. He wants to have a fine of from $10 to $50 imposed upon any person who "gives, offers, or promises to an agent or servant, any gift or gratuity whatever, with intent to influence his action in relation to his principal's, employer's, or master's business; or an agent, employe, or servant who requests or accepts a gratuity, promise, or gift." They don't like that legislator in Iowa restaurants. Whenever he orders breakfast he eats it for supper.

Then there is the Brandes bill, which has passed both Houses of the Iowa Legislature. It is known as the Pocket Gopher bill, and authorizes the payment of a bounty of 10 cents for each pocket gopher killed. Evidence of the killing shall be the front feet and claws of each animal formally presented to the County Auditor's office. What lends particular interest to this piece of legislation is the doubt existing in the mind of most people as to what a pocket gopher is.

Iowa is also responsible for the Dye Anti-treating bill. This would make it a misdemeanor for any person, either by himself or agent, to give any intoxicating liquor to any person, unless the same be prescribed by a physician. But the Iowans could not face the ordeal of requiring every one who said "Come, have a drink" to show a doctor's certificate as he did so. Therefore, to the eternal shame of Iowa, the bill was killed in transit.

Representative Teter of the Iowa Legislature, who vigorously opposed the bill punishing husbands for wife desertion, introduced a measure which he dubbed the "Square Deal" bill, by which wives who deserted their husbands without cause were to be punished with a year's imprisonment in the penitentiary. The wife desertion bill passed. But the husband desertion bill met a violent death in committee.

In Texas, Senator George B. Grigge of Houston desires all hotels and boarding houses to supply their beds with top sheets at least nine feet long. He earnestly believes that all bed clothes should be lengthened, but he is willing to begin by reforming the inadequate top sheets of the present day. He says that in most hotels and boarding houses the sheets are so short that a man of more than average length often finds his feet sticking out from beneath their covering, to his unspeakable disgust. Besides, such a state of affairs encourages the prevalence of colds and other ailments in our citizens. They are still fighting about that bill in Texas. Just as some people think that the inch is a divinely ordained unit of measurement, and refuse therefore to admit the metric system, some Texans seem to consider that the bed sheet has reached its highest point of development. If we only had a paternal Government like Germany's, little would be heard from kickers like Senator Griggs. If he objected to the legal length of a bed sheet, he would be taken before the nearest Inspector of Beds and shortened. But this is a free country.

The New Hampshire Legislature has passed laws at this session protecting clams, wrinkles, and gray squirrels. It is also considering the drastic step of appropriating $100 for the purchase of gray squirrels to put in the trees in the State House yard. But it looked askance at a proposal to exterminate dogfish; also at one designed "for the protection of sheep." The latter stipulated that any owner of sheep might kill any dog "which he had good reason to believe was intending to kill or worry sheep." The Legislature decided that to authorize sheep-owners to hold such a dogfest was revolutionary. Hence, New Hampshire dogs are not yet being questioned as to their intentions regarding sheep.

One gentleman from New Hampshire wanted a bill passed to authorize the use of explosives to inconvenience burglars. "Dynamite in our drawing rooms?" cried his colleagues. "Never!" Then some one got up and spoke in favor of giving city councils and boards of selectmen the right to prescribe how much and what sort of clothing shall be worn by bathers in public watere. This latter bill was probably prompted by the alarming rumors that batheresses next season are contemplating entering the surf unattended by most of the garments of yesteryear. It is not known whether demonstrations of minimum bathing suits are being given before the New Hampshire Legislature. If they are, no action will be taken in the matter for some time.

In Nebraska one legislator got most sarcastic. He said that, since raising cattle for Mexico is a profitable industry, and since Nebraska is honored by having one of her citizens named as Ambassador to that republic, the Director of the Bureau of Animal Industry should be requested to give a course of instruction in bullfighting, a "manly, useful, and exhilarating occupation," on the present athletic field of the university, when that field is not being used "for other manly, bloody, and brutal exercises."

In Pennsylvania there is a bill pending to allow the thrashing of newspaper editors. Anybody may go for one and be acquitted if he proves that the assaultee wrote or published false or defamatory matter concerning him or his'n. If this is proved, the assaultee can get no damages.

But to return to Iowa. At Fort Dodge, in that progressive State, the City Council has actually passed an ordinance requiring all bachelors and spinsters between certain ages to up and marry at once. Here is the fateful ordinance:

"That all able-bodied persons between the ages of 25 and 45 years, whose mental and physical propensities and abilities are normal, who are not now married, shall be required to marry within sixty days.

"Any person or persons failing to comply with the provisions of this ordinance shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100, according to the criminal negligence of the person or persons unmarried."

The Mayor of Fort Dodge announced that he would be on hand all day at his office to tie matrimonial knots in any style desired.

"The ordinance represents the most enlightened thought of the day," he added, striking an Apostle of Progress attitude, "and establishes a precedent which will be widely followed before the end of the present decade."

He was interrupted at this point by a sudden rush of Fort Dodge bachelors and spinsters who preferred $10 to freedom. Hence, it was impossible to ask him whether Fort Dodge was so named on account of the propensity of its citizens to avoid marriage.

Musical and Other Notes from Berlin

BERLIN, March 25.—We shall soon have an opportunity in Berlin to see the Monte Carlo opera. In an interview Raoul Guensberg, the manager of the Monaco Company, declares that he expects much from the appearance of his singers in this city, both artistically and politically. "As you know," he declared, "the originators of the idea of our visit were the German Kaiser and the Prince of Monaco. These two men are very anxious to bring France and Germany closer together. We claim ownership in the works of Wagner, Beethoven, and Mozart, just as much as Germany is interested in the productions of Bizet, Berlioz, Massenet, and Saint-Saëns. Therefore, if we are well received in Berlin, it will show the French that despite Morocco a friendly feeling exists in Germany for the French nation. We shall perform 'Samson and Delilah,' by Saint-Saëns; 'Herodiade,' by Massenet; 'Roadis,' by Lalo; 'Mephistofele,' by Boito, and finally 'Le Damnation de Faust,' by Berlioz. I place special hope on the presentation of the last-named opera, particularly as the stage of the Berlin Opera House is well suited for such a purpose."

Americans and Englishmen are looking forward with great interest to the appearance of the famous English actor Beerbohm Tree, who will come here with his Shakespearean troup. In an interview the Nestor of the German stage, Friedrich Haase, declared: "There is no room to doubt that this visit of Mr. Tree will be an overwhelming diplomatic triumph, and will prove how much art can do to bring nations together. Undoubtedly there will be an immense demonstration in the English company's honor. I myself am looking forward with the greatest curiosity and interest to seeing Mr. Tree. The fact that this English company is to produce Shakespeare plays is what gives it for us its particular interest. Germans themselves have become renowned as exponents of Shakespeare, and the English acknowledge us openly as their superiors in this respect. We are credited as truer reproducers of the genuine Shakespearean spirit than the modern English actor. My only explanation of this is that we are more studious, more devoted to 'art for art's sake,' and less infected with the fever for short cuts to high salaries."

Baurat von Ihne, the Kaiser's architect, who soon goes to America, has erected some of the leading buildings in Germany. He made the plans for Schloss Friedrichshof, the Taunus Castle of the late Empress Frederick, and is now directing the building of the new imperial library. Ihne regards the American libraries as the best equipped, best managed, and most up-to-date in the world. The Congressional Library in Washington, the Boston Library, and the new library building in New York will receive his special attention. Berlin's new library will be an immense structure, and will be dedicated in 1911.

Just about the time when the Jamestown Exposition will have opened, a German army, naval, and colonial show will also take place in Berlin. The managers aim to present a vivid picture of the marvelous development of Germany in these lines.

Folk song for male chorue, the publication of which was instigated by the Kaiser, have now made their appearance in two handsome volumes. The work was edited by his Excellency von Liliencron, Prof. Dr. Johann Bolte, Prof. Max Friedlaender, Director Ferdinand Hummel, Prof. George Schumann, Prof. Kretzschmar, and Prof. Felix Schmidt. The work contains selections of folk song from the thirteenth century up to the present time. Such modern composers as Liszt, Wagner, Hegar, Scholz, Volkmann, Richard Strauss, and Klenzl are represented.

George Wilbur Reed of Chicago has just signed a contract with the Trier Opera for next season. The engagement is the result of his appearance there last week as Siegmund in "Die Walküre."

"On the Picturesque Erie."

THERE is a story which is going the rounds of the Wall Street brokerage offices which is causing no end of merriment. It would seem that President Underwood of the Erie Railroad was having his share of trouble just at present, but the combination has to bear the brunt of this latest bit of humor.

As the story runs, President Underwood of the Erie and President Truesdale of the Lackawanna Railroad, the "Road of Anthracite," were walking down Broadway together recently when there suddenly loomed in sight a young colored woman, who was as dark in color as the proverbial "Ace of Spades." Mr. Truesdale stopped as they came abreast of the woman, and made a very elaborate bow, removing his hat with a sweep that would have done credit to a courtier of the olden times.

As they passed on Mr. Underwood asked who the woman was that she should be shown such marked distinction. Mr. Truesdale replied, "That young lady is Miss Phoebe Snow, whom you probably did not recognize owing to her having just completed a trip to Buffalo on the Erie." In justice to Mr. Underwood it may be said that he appreciated the joke.

EYE STRAIN AND ITS EFFECT ON HEALTH

Scientific Investigations Show That From 30 to 60 Per Cent. of School Children Have Ocular Defects Which Must Be Remedied to Enable Them to Keep Up With Their Work.

EYE-STRAIN as the cause of mental and physical deficiencies and ailments, formerly regarded as of obscure etiology or as wholly inexplicable, is attracting more and more attention, especially in connection with the welfare of children in the schools. With their traditional reluctance to accept leadership in new paths or to welcome truths which disturb well-settled habits of professional thought or practice, many physicians, if not the majority of them, for a long time derided the theories advanced as to this cause, and some of them with scant decency denounced the advocates of them as "cranks" and extremists. The tide of medical opinion, however, has largely turned, and to-day the importance of eye-strain as a pathological cause is widely admitted. Distinguished authorities place at a high estimate the proportionate number of school children who suffer from eye-strain and consequently are unequal to the tasks put before them.

The growing revolution in medical opinion on this subject has not been brought about without an arduous struggle on the part of progressive oculists, among whom Dr. George M. Gould of Philadelphia is probably the most conspicuous and most energetic. He sounded the keynote of this development of medical science some nineteen years ago, and has been pursuing the propaganda of the new truth ever since. This is his latest utterance on the subject:

"It has been demonstrated by scientific examinations that from 30 to 60 per cent. of school children have ocular defects requiring the use of spectacles in order to enable them to preserve their eyes, to maintain their general health, and to keep up with their fellows who have good eyes.

"As matters of pedagogics, of school efficiency, of the preservation of eyesight, and of general health, the public is vitally interested in having these ocularly deficient and handicapped children supplied with spectacles. The public school system therefore justly demands that those children too poor to procure the scientific refraction required and the skilled fitting of proper spectacles should furnish such poor children with these helps, absolutely necessary in order to enable them to carry out the school work required by the law.

"When the law commands what cannot be done without spectacles the law should authorize the payment by the public for the refraction and the glasses. But if the law should require this obligatory 'glassing' of those children needing it, the law must as absolutely see to it that the prescription of glasses should be made by the skilled oculist-physician, who can do the work rightly, and that the glasses shall be supplied by the optician equally competent in his own handicraft.

"As regards the prescription, only the physician-specialist in refraction must be allowed to make the requisite tests and write the prescriptions. To permit the optician to do this, a layman knowing nothing of the diseases of the eye, the nervous system, and the body, would be the most abused proceeding, and would bring the reform to utter failure. The prescription of spectacles requires the use of 'drops,' (a 'mydriatic' or cycloplegic,) poisonous and dangerous when used by a non-medical man. The prescription of glasses is a medical matter, and many eyes are now ruined by the permitted bunglings of opticians in attempting a task for which they are not fitted by the proper medical education.

"And it would be just as condemnable and harmful to allow those physician-oculists—and many exist, powerful and famous—to undertake the work of testing the eyes and prescribing spectacles, who publicly and privately scoff at the need of glasses, and deny that the eyes and general health of pupils are injured by the lack of glasses or by bad ones. The doctor who does not use drops, who makes his tests by machinery, who knows nothing of retinoscopy, who cuts the eye muscles instead of prescribing correct spectacles, who sneers at the eye-strain 'hobby rider,' will do no better work and can do no better work than the optician who knows nothing of medicine.

"If, therefore, the trustees and authorities authorize the purchase of spectacles for school children at public expense and do not at the same time make it as binding that the examining physicians shall be skillful and serious-minded refractionists, and that the glasses shall be made and fitted by honorable opticians, then the attempt to better the health of the children and advance them in their studies will end in utter failure and the endeavor do far more harm than good. Both politics and commercialism must be rigidly excluded from the execution of this supremely important work. Such exclusion is perfectly possible, if it is undertaken with scientific and business prudence and with genuine benevolence."

Lay authorities have been more prompt to recognize the overwhelming evidence of the pernicious effects of eye-strain in children than have the majority of the medical profession. Gov. Guild of Massachusetts said in an inaugural address:

"A child may be a dullard at school and a failure in life because of undiscovered defects in eyesight or hearing. There are, to quote one line of work only, children now struggling for education through pain, ailing little creatures, backward in their lessons, tortured with racking headaches, who only need relief of a complaining set of nerves by a pair of properly adjusted glasses to transform them to healthy, happy children, capable of assimilating all the benefits of their school work.

In several important cities regular examinations of the physical condition of school children have been instituted, and they have produced ample corroboration of the effect of eye-strain upon mental capability. In Cleveland, Ohio, school children with defective eyes are six or seven months behind in grade the normal child of like age. Dr. Gould characterizes as appalling the facts revealed by examinations of school children made in that and other cities. One official report says:

"Many school children who appear dull and inattentive, who are nervous, irritable, morose, or disorderly, who suffer from headache, dizziness, nausea, or pains in the eyes, owe these ills largely or wholly to such defects. Generally neither they nor their parents nor their teachers are aware of the cause of their troubles. The examination of hundreds of thousands of school children has demonstrated that from 25 to 35 per cent. of them need the services of an oculist or of an aurist or of both; these handicaps can be removed and the children be able to receive the full benefits of instruction. In Utica, N. Y., an examination of over 6,000 pupils showed that about 35 per cent. were defective. * * * In Chicago it was found that on entering school at the age of 6 years, 32 per cent. of the pupils had defective eyes. In the schools (as a whole) 37 per cent.

of the girls and 32 per cent. of the boys, or an average of 35 per cent. were defective. In Minneapolis out of 25,696 pupils examined, 8,166, or 32 per cent., had defective eyesight. Similar conditions, differing only in degree, have been found wherever tests have been made."

In New York City some years ago Dr. Cronin found that more than 30 per cent. of the school children examined were suffering from gross forms of defective eyesight. But Dr. Floyd B. Ennist, medical inspector, reported even a greater proportion in the Girls' High School—from 30 to 50 per cent. "It is a great pity," he wrote, "that some philanthropist does not give a sum of money, the income to be devoted to the supply of glasses for those children who cannot afford to buy them." A famous neurologist says: "I have all my nervous patients consult a good ophthalmologist the very first thing before going further into the diagnosis and I have been surprised how many of them have some eye trouble, which when relieved clear up all their nervous and gastric symptoms." Another says that eye-strains are the most frequent cause of sick headaches.

Dr. S. Solis Cohen of Philadelphia, a foremost medical writer, says: "As a causative factor in the production of headache, eye-strain is most important. Anorexia (want of appetite,) dyspepsia, constipation, heartburn, nausea, and repeated attacks of vomiting represent some of the gastric reflexes. Insomnia, nightmare, chorea, (St. Vitus dance,) and even epileptiform seizures have owed their existence and perpetuation to uncorrected eye-strain in some form. The multiformity of the effects of eye-strain can be thoroughly realized only when it is understood how vital the function of vision is to every act, emotion and thought."

Dr. Gould and other eminent physiologists hold that the organs of vision were developed in the early stages of animal life through the efforts of the brain itself to "see."

"The 'accommodation' function of our eyes," says Dr. Gould, "is their power to focus equally clearly the images of objects at a distance and those near the face. Its mechanism is the crystalline lens, controlled by the ciliary muscle. The lens has an innate and spontaneous elasticity which gives it the ability to increase its refractive power required as an object is brought nearer the eye. This increased refraction is incited by the contraction of the ciliary muscle. This act is called accommodation. As has been said, it is little exercised in myopia, and hence there is little pain or 'eyestrain' in purely myopic defects or nearsightedness. In the condition called emmetropia, or optical normality, (only approximately existing,) it is called into use, and increasingly with every increase of nearness of the object looked at, until its extreme is reached when the object is so near the eyes that it is not clearly seen—that is, with accurate focus or clear photographic definition.

"In the ages of past evolution the safety of the organism has depended upon sharp distant vision—the more or less distant, from the horizon to a few feet from the eyes. The mechanism of accommodation has been evolved in answer to this need. The nearer an object the less continuously must accommodation act, the less uninterruptedly was the contraction of the ciliary muscle. The extreme of muscle tension or contraction, the full force of its innervation, can only be carried out for the shortest periods of time. That is the great law which dominates the action of every muscle of the body. If its contraction is kept up continuously for too long a period the result is not only weariness, but spasm, exhaustion, pain, disease, &c., and physiology passes into pathology.

"Carefully analyzed, there will be found no muscle in the body which can endure continuous contraction except for a short time. Tests of holding the arm out straight, carrying a light satchel in one hand, &c., are familiar. Most muscles called into continuous action show that the continuity is an interrupted one and that there are necessary rhythms of contraction, relaxation, and rest. The genius of evolution, so far as the eye is concerned, never foresaw the demands to be made upon the organ by our modern life. In but 100 or 200 years since printing, urbanization, commerce, and the rest have sprung into existence the entire process, ocularly speaking, has been reversed; before this it was an intermittent and temporary function, while that of reading, writing, sewing, and handicrafts demand a foeussing of the images of objects at 12 or 15 inches from the eye; this for millions has now become a continuous one. For all hyperopic and astigmatic eyes the act of accommodation is required for ten or fifteen hours a day, often for hours with hardly a moment's interruption. This unwonted demand requires the continuous innervation and contraction of the ciliary muscle. To comply necessitates an impossible task, considered physiologically; the result is eyestrain, with its host of sequent diseases, faraway reflexes, nervous diseases and kinds of ill-health too numerous to enumerate.

"The brain comes out to see, but owing to the enormous difficulty of the task it sees poorly and with exhausting or irritating labor. As its every process and act is bound up with and the product of vision, visual disorders by reflex and passed-on malfunction induce cerebral affections, evidenced primarily by headache, migraine, &c. Although the medical textbooks give little or no hint of this, it is true, as thousands of good physicions and patients well know, that beadaches, 90 per cent. at least, are due to eyestrain. Many observant physicians believe that the so-called 'paroxysmal neuroses,' periodic headaches, migraine, epilepsy, asthma, &c., as well as hysteria, neurastbenia, 'brain-fag,' 'nervous breakdown,' are very frequently caused by years of morbid ocular struggle.

"Mental diseases follow; weariness alternating with hyperexcitability, an amazing need of walking, truancy, (escaping from ocular labor,) morbid introspection, nameless torments and self-tormentings, diseased habits, hopelessness, melancholia, manias, incipient and functional insanities, and indirectly occupational failure, crime, and many other errant trends.

"The methods by which morbid ocular function induces various bodily diseases are so varied, differing almost in each individual, that it is impossible to set them forth in detail. Primarily it seems certain that the process is essentially one of wast and exhaustion of nervous force; all corporeal activities depend upon right seeing. All subordinate cerebral centres are drawn upon to restore the balance when clear and easy seeing drains too severely the optical storehouses and regulating mechanisms. But the peculiarity of nervous action is that often undersupply and even exhaustion ends in irritation and excessive nerve action. Hence we find hyperesthesia attending or consequent upon lowered vitalities and tensions. But at least and always come disordered functions and these naturally form two types or proceed by two routes. The first disorders, often the more distinctive cerebral inco-ordinations, are those classed as nutritional or digestional. Certainly one-half of all sufferers from eyestrain have dyspepsia of some kind. 'Liver,' 'stomach,' loss of digestive power, loss or fickleness of appetite, are the complaints that constantly occur in the biographies of great literary workers, and of the majority of our patients.

"The second class comprise those whose blood supply and tension is morbidized—the so-called 'vasomotor' cases. Skin affections, as was long ago found, are often due to 'migraine,' and migraine, we now know, is due to eyestrain. Secondarily almost any affection, even surgical diseases, may supervene, caused by the lowered nutrition, disordered blood supply, or the deroruted nerve influences. The terminal diseases, as they are called, because they perform the final act of killing, are often but the executioners of long-precedent eyestrain. Even the infectious diseases find their best soil—and soil is as important as seed—in the lowered vitality following years of headache, dyspepsia, &c. By careful count and trustworthy statistics 27 per cent. of school children have lateral spinal curvature. This astounding source of sickness and invalidism, directly or indirectly, is due to ocular defects, functions, and laws.

"And if the child is father to the man, let us add and to the woman, what a havoc of the future generation we have been preparing by our neglect of the care of children's eyes!"

Inventors Solving the Problem of Aerial Flight Every Day

Activities of the Signal Corps Brings Down Upon It a Deluge of Wonderful Airships.

THE publication of a statement that the army Signal Corps was preparing for a balloon excursion for some of its officers from Washington to Fort Leavenworth has served to stimulate somewhat the daily average of communications to the Signal Corps from anxious, interested, and patriotic inventors, all of whom have the latest and surest sort of flying machine warship that could possibly be made. The fact that the signal officers are not going from Washington to Fort Leavenworth by balloon hasn't the least thing to do with it. The newspapers said they were, and that was enough for the aforesaid anxious, interested, and patriotic inventors. The ordinary work-a-day man, busily engaged in stifling the home cry for bread, hardly ever stops to consider the number of persons in this broad land who are certain they have solved the problem of aerial navigation. Judging by the mail of the Signal Corps they are legion. And in the offices of the Chief Signal Officer, up in the big, State, War, and Navy Building in Washington, they think they are about the only persons in the world who do not believe that the problem has been solved. They take so little stock in the reports of solution by this or that devise that when they actually saw a man fly around the Washington Monument and then around the dome of the Capitol they smiled in superior fashion and said:

"Yes, that certainly proves that that man has a sublime nerve, to trust himself to such a crazy machine."

And that's as far as they would go. Not another point would be admitted in the aeronaut's favor.

You see, they have grown a little tired of the bombardment up there. Not a day passes that does not bring half a dozen, at least, letters or bunches of plans and specifications from the anxious, interested, and patriotic inventors. These letters and communications vary greatly, while all have one thing in common. Sometimes the writer has just stumbled on the idea and it is brand new to him. He never in his life heard that anybody else had thought of the problem of trying to fly, and in the fervor and enthusiasm of his discovery he promptly informs the Signal Corps all about what he is going to do in that line to-morrow or next week. Now, then, since he is so certain to accomplish this greatly-to-be-desired trick, how soon will the War Department be ready to remit a few thousands or hundreds or even dollars in the way of recompense for his self-sacrificing efforts? What appropriation will the department make for experiments? Here is the great idea, just palpitating on the very verge of complete success, and all that is needed is a little Government expense money to enable Uncle Sam's warriors to outfly the eagles. That's the anxious kind.

The interested inventor is even more sure of himself. He has worked at the problem years enough to know all that has been attempted by everybody else, and to be perfectly certain that his lucubrations are the only means of setting this Government ahead of all the rest of the world. Therefore, what will Uncle Sam give? How soon will the draft be forthcoming? No discount allowed for cash.

Then comes the patriot. He has the trick all worked out; there isn't the slightest doubt about it. He has made flights in his airship, or whatever he calls it, that make anything done anywhere else in the world look like a toboggan slide. He is about to place this wonderful invention on the market, but before everything else he is an American, and he realizes the tremendous value this will be to his Government in case of war. Why, it will absolutely insure the utter annihilation of any enemy without the least risk or danger to our own people. Navies and armies may be disbanded; there will be no further use for them as fighting machines when this invention is put to work. Being first of all a patriotic citizen, the inventor gives the United States the first opportunity to acquire the sole and secret rights to this twentieth century wonder. He does this at great personal sacrifice. England, Germany, France, and especially Japan, are hanging breathless on his decision, waiting the opportunity to snap up this terrible engine of destruction, but of course it can only go to Uncle Sam. No hated foreigner shall have so much as a peep at it—until the United States has ungratefully refused to look.

So in fear and trembling the Signal Corps sends out its mimeographed circular informing the patriot that unfortunately for the Government and his genius there is no appropriation enabling the department to purchase this marvel, and despite the terrible danger that may result the hated foreigners must have their chance to buy.

The curious thing about it is that in spite of the thousands of these circulars the Signal Corps officers have sent out they have never heard a word about the foreign purchases of these death-dealing inventions.

Only One Aeroplane Venture.

So while others fly and lie the Signal Corps plods soberly along in its old path, working with the old-fashioned and fairly familiar balloon. There has been one experience with the flying machine. Congress did put up $50,000 for an aeroplane, and the best part of a Summer was spent in preparing the thing and waiting for the proper moment to set it soaring. Then about ten seconds were consumed in watching it fall with a smash that ended it and the $50,000 together. Since then both Congress and the War Department have been somewhat more conservative on the subject of flying machines, and only the Signal Corps mimeograph has been busy about them.

But the balloon is different. Things have been accomplished to some extent by balloons, even if it were nothing more than giving the enemy a fine range for their artillery practice. There is hope that persistent experiment will ultimately get beyond that stage, and the Signal Corps officers are inclined to reply indignantly nowadays if such a suggestion is made to them. So they persist in experimenting.

Now they are about to undertake a more extended experiment than has been tried before. A new balloon is being constructed in New York, under the supervision of Mr. Leo Stevens, an aeronaut of many ascensions. It is to be the biggest thing in the balloon line that has been blown up in a long time. It will have a capacity of 78,000 cubic feet of gas, nearly enough to hold an entire speech by John Wesley Gaines at one performance. But instead of any such rarefied output as that it is to be inflated with ordinary plebeian illuminating gas made out of coal. The lifting power of that much gas is about a ton and a half, so that a fairly substantial and commodious car can be slung to this gas bag, capable of carrying four men, with two or three sandwiches and perhaps a bottle of beer. Mere food and drink does not count much in the plans of the aeronaut. The instruments are the things that count with him, and he has a lot of them to lug along. To begin with, there is the whole "ometer" family—barometer, thermometer, hygrometer, and all the rest, a perfect wilderness of them. Provision has to be made also for a trifle of ballast, to be thrown out when it becomes imperative to go a little higher to avoid being impaled on lightning rods or the horns of stray and inquisitive cows. The science not having reached that degree of devotion where the aeronaut willingly heaves over a man or two when he wants to go higher up, he takes along some bags of sand to serve the purpose instead.

It is the expectation of the Signal Corps officers that the new balloon will accommodate four men. Capt. Lloyd Chandler, the balloon sharp of the corps, will go up with Mr. Stevens when the new balloon is ready. They expect that the ascension will be made about May 1. They are sure that they can go up with the balloon, and afterward come down with it. For the rest, if there is any rest, they trust entirely to Prof. Willis Moore, Chief of the Weather Bureau. Upon what control over the caves of Aeolus he can demonstrate depends the further performance of Capt. Chandler and Mr. Stevens and their balloon. And they propose to consult Prof. Moore very carefully before they set foot off terra firma. They want no boisterous and blustering weather, and that is one reason why they have fixed on May for their attempt. The Mayer the weather the better they will be pleased.

Gentle breezes, soft, sweet zephyrs will suit them to a "T." And especially if the air currents waft gently from the east. Westerly winds have no fascination for them. They know that the blessed balloon is going where the winds go, and they cannot help it after they are up. Their only means of prevention is not to ascend. So they will wait until the east wind blows, for the west wind heads toward the deep, deep sea, and although both are excellent swimmers May is too early in the season for their preference. If the east wind blows true and kind and holds well to its work, Capt. Chandler and Mr. Stevens may indeed go to Fort Leavenworth. They may even go further. It is just as accurate to say that they may go even to Vancouver Barracks, in Oregon. It is all a question of wind and enthusiasm—enthusiasm, because the chow will play out long before they could get half that far, and only enthusiasm could keep them hanging to the wind for the rest of the journey.

So when Prof. Moore issues his guarantee that the weather is going to be real good, early in May, if the citizens of the Middle West observe strange portents in the sky they need not be afraid; it will only be Capt. Chandler and the new army balloon, headed for Fort Leavenworth and Vancouver Barracks.

New York's Post Office

IN a metropolis like New York, where vast quantities of mail are received, sorted, and delivered every day to 4,000,000 people, delays, losses, and mistakes are constantly occurring. Every now and then a business man or citizen writes to a newspaper telling of his experiences and suggesting a remedy. Such a letter was printed a few days ago in THE NEW YORK TIMES, wherein the loss of mail parcels was attributed to the long hours of overworked clerks. More recently a number of bankers complained of registered mail lost on its way to Europe, and suggested that a petition asking for better service be sent to the Post Office Department in Washington. To obtain light on the subject, a reporter called on Postmaster Willcox one day last week.

"The fact is," Mr. Willcox said, "we always have a little more work than the clerks can do. The increase in the postal business of the city has been enormous. Very few New Yorkers know how fast it has grown. I will place all the figures at your disposal. You can go and look at the Post Office for yourself."

There were two branches of the subject—the foreign and the domestic service. New York is the gateway through which pass all the foreign mails from Europe and the East intended for the United States. It comes in at the rate of 5,500 bags a week. In rush seasons, like the Christmas holidays, there are 2,000 bags more. The arriving mail steamers average five a week.

The bulk of the Canadian foreign mails, both outgoing and incoming, also passes through the New York Post Office in bags. When Europeans write to Australia, most of their letters pass through New York and are sent in bulk to San Francisco by mail, thence are shipped by steamer to the Antipodes.

These figures are insignificant, however, when compared with the number of letters handled in the domestic service. Between 4:30 and 7:30 P. M. no less than 450,000 letters are dropped into the boxes at the main Post Office or are brought there by carriers. In a busy season this total reaches 550,000 for the three hours. The accumulation does not include parcels, newspapers, or bags of magazines or circulars sent to the Post Office by large concerns in bulk.

The outgoing mails at the General Post Office are handled by a force of 600 men—346 in the letter department and 254 in the newspaper and magazine service.

The number of pieces handled in the New York Post Office in 1906 shows an increase in the business of from 8 to 9 per cent. The figures are for Manhattan and the Bronx only, as Brooklyn, Queens, and Richmond are not included in the New York service. The total number of pieces handled in the mailing division last year was 1,051,190,606, an increase of 90,642,289 over the total for 1905. In the same time 1,233,317,986 pieces were handled in the delivery division, an increase of 85,982,835 for the year.

The money order business increased 10 per cent. in 1906. There were 10,109,900 transactions compared with 9,087,909 for 1905, the increase being 1,021,991. Four hundred and thirty millions of dollars were involved, or $91,000,000 more than in the preceding year. The total expenses of the New York office for the same year were increased $361,449.

The misdirected letters, unstamped envelopes, the "freak" addresses and superscriptions in foreign tongues are so numerous that there is a puzzle department on the top floor of the Federal Building where 30 experts have all they can do to settle doubtful points. Some of the men are adepts in foreign languages. Others have rows of directories for many cities piled up on their desks. Still others earn their living by their ingenuity. At least 150 letters are mailed every day addressed "New York" when the sender intended to write "Philadelphia." Similar errors are made on letters intended for other large American cities. The letters mailed without any addresses aggregate several thousand a week.

Every now and then a letter is addressed in rebus form. One of the addresses on a letter mailed recently looked like this:

HILL
92—2r 15-1-23-1y
New York.

The first two lines formed a familiar rebus. It meant "John Underhill." The second seemed to be more difficult. The postal clerk remembered a form of cryptogram in which every letter in the alphabet was represented by a number, counting "a" as 1, "b" as 2 and so on. He applied this test to the second line of the address, and got "92 Broadway." The address was correct and the letter was forwarded. A few days later the head of the department received a note from an actress saying that the letter had been sent on a wager, and that she had won it.

MR. HENNESSEY'S VIEWS ON THE ANNUAL RUSH TO EUROPE

In the Absence of Mr. Dooley, the Junior Philosopher, His Friend Mr. Hennessy Again Gives Utterance to the Thoughts That Surge Within Him but Are Commonly Unexpressed.

"IS gr-rippin' me agin," said Mr. Hennessy.

"Phwat?" said Mr. Dooley.

"Th' cr-ravin' to talk," replied Mr. Hennessy.

Mr. Dooley looked resigned.

"Jawn," he said, "a gr-great change has come over ye. 'Tis hut a shor-rt time ago ye wer-re th' Sphinx's fav'rite son. Ye wer-re th' finest fr-rind in th' wor-rld f'r a man wishin' to combine solliloquy wid sociahility. But now ye've tur-rned into a geyser iv miscellaneous conver-rsation. Ye ar-re—"

"'Tis gr-rippin' me agin," repeated Mr. Hennessy ominously.

"All right, go ahead," said Mr. Dooley, filling Mr. Hennessy's glass. "May I ask phwat is tr-roublin' ye th' day?"

"I see by th' pa-apers," said Mr. Hennessy, "that th' annual rush to Eur-rope has begun. 'Tis th' painful piece iv news to me. I have lear-rned to dr-read th' annual r-rush to Eur-rope. I'm more convinced iveryyear that onless I jine th' aforesaid r-rush I'll niver shine in intellecshool conver-rsation. Phwat do I mane by intellecshool conver-rsation? I'll tell ye, Mar-rtin. Let us say that ye go over to Hogan's, to a swarray, which is one of th' wor-rds his wife impor-rted from Paris, an' why th' Custom House didn't thr-row th' wor-rd back in her teeth is more thin I could iver understhand. But niver mind. Let us say that ye go to th' swarray in all th' agony of ye'er new shoes an' in wan iv thim dhress soots that makes ye look like an egg laid on a coffin. At the swarray ye meet a sthrange, wild-eyed lady.

"I suppose ye wint across last Summer," she sez. "I did," ye answer, thinkin' she manes th' sthreet. "Were ye in London doorin' th' season?" she sez. "Phwat season?" ye ask. That's enough. Ye wer-ren't there. Ye have no sthandin' in Piccadilly. "But, iv coorse, ye spint Mi-Carême in Paris," she runs on. "How much is that?" ye ask.

"That sittles it. Ye're an aboriginal Amirican limmon. Ye'er culture is narrow-gauge. Ye'er name is St. Denis. Ye'er th' kind iv man whose daughter will be ashamed iv ye whin she grows up. Ye've sthr-ruck out. An' all there's lift f'r ye to do is to retire-re to th' canyons iv Ar'rizona an' take to th' favorite ancisthral pastime of movin' towar-rd th' settin' sun.

"Yis, Mar-rtin. Th' only way iv kapin' abrist iv th' prisint time in Amirica is to spind it in Eur-rope. Ye have to choose to which class iv Amirricans ye'er goin' to belong. Ther-re's foor classes. Thim that goes to Eurrope because they want to, thim that goes because their wives wants to, thim that stays at home but knows they would appr-reciate Eur-rope if they wint, an' thim whose tillivinth commandment is "Thou shalt not travel."

"Th' fir-rst class is composed iv Amiricans that hates Amirica on account of Chicago. Th' second includes some iv our most cultured men iv wealth an' fashion. Th' thir-rd is made up iv those who wr-rites to th' newspaper editors about th' things people do betther abr-road, pr-resumably in Glasgow, Scotland. Pick up inny magazine or paper iv th' prisint day, Marrtin, and ye'll lear-rn to take off ye'er hat to Glasgow. It owns iverything in th' city ixcept th' citizens, which is quite a conthrast to our cities. Afther per-rusin' a few ar-rticles about Glasgow ye'll come to th' conclusion that it has a pr-ractical monopoly iv this airth's ixpor-rt thrade in angels. 'Tis a wonderful place. But I digest, as Hogan sez. To r-resume.

"Th' foorth class of Amiricans is th' wan that niver r'ally liked innything but ham an 'eggs They're th' kind that knows jist how minny years 'twill take f'r New Yor-rk to outsthr-rip London, an' jist phwat year it was whin New Yor-rk first began to expor-rt wickedness to Paris. Fr'm the conver-rsation iv this class ye will gather that Eurrope is a large body iv per-rsonal discomfor-rt intirely surrounded by indigestible Fr-rinch sauces, wher-re ye can niver get a glass iv ice water whinever ye don't want it th' way ye can at th' Cinthr'l House, in Piqua, Ohio. An', wor-rst iv all, Mar-rtin, they don't know Baedeker.

"Who's Baedeker? Mar-rtin, Mar-rtin, I weep f'r ye. Baedeker is r-risponsible f'r more pr-romiscuous scatther-r-ing iv culture thin inny other author in th' wor-rld. In fact, some cultured people read nothin' ilse.

"Th' information in Baedecker is most var-ried an' insthr-ructive. He'll combine a complete discr-ription iv Hamlet with th' inthristin' infor-rmation that ye haven't th' price iv a thir-rd class ticket to Sthr-ratfor-rd-on-Avon. Thin he'll tell ye how to say, "Ye're a r-rohber!" to a Sicilian innkeeper, leavin' th' dodgin' iv th' stiletto to ye'er own ingenuity. Oh, Baedeker is a jool iv an author. Ye'er not an eddicated Amirican citizen until ye've been thr-rough Eur-rope wid ye'er face bur-ried in Baedeker's pages, lookin' up now an' thin to r-refer casually to whativer picture galler-ry ye happen to be in.

"So ye see, Mar-rtin, why th' annual r-rush to Eur-rope fills me wid disquiet an' a sense iv guilt. Th' longer I delay j'inin' th' unhappy thr-rong th' more people can take ixciption to me method iv pr-ronouncin' Saint-Saëns. But Eur-rope is a turr'ble lookin' thing to th' nor-rmal man. Clancy was afther tellin' me about that tr-rip he took last Summer with his wife an' daughther—th' gr-rand tour as his daughther called it. Let us pass over Clancy's name f'r it in silence. Th' spoken phr-rase he used is star-rtlin' to th' most seasoned ear. Well, Clancy an' Mrs. Clancy an' Gwendolyn Clancy all wint over on wan iv thim outr-rageous big stheamers which has all th' comfor-rts iv a palatial home in an ear-rthquake. Th' fir-rst thing they But wor-rse was to come. Ye must r-raymimber that Gwenny Clancy was eddicated in a swell female sinminary an' Mrs. Clancy was eddicated hy r-readin' Gwenny's letters home. So iv coorse they took Clancy to Paris to inthr-roduce him to Ar-rt. Ye know phwhat a danger-rous thing Ar-rt is, Mar-rtin. 'Tis like a bulldog. Few like it, but all give it a pleas'nt wor-rd. As soon as Clancy got to Paris he felt Ar-rt in th' air. An' as soon as he saw the' ixprission on his wife's and' daughther's face he knew that he muet like Ar-rt.

"Father," sez Gwenny, th' day afther their arrival in Paris, "we're all goin' to th' Louvre this mor-nin'.

"Now Clancy had intended to spind that mor-rnin' givin' th' lie to a saloon with th' sign "Amirican drinks," but he sighed like a well-thr-rained back number an' star-rted off to school. At the Louvre Gwenny spotted a pale young man with a fr-ront lilvation to his head like a gigantic mould iv sherrbet, who had cr-rossed th' ocean with thim on th' Kr-ronprinz Katzenjammer. There-re was a mutual r-recognition, followed by a r-reckless plunge into Ar-rt by Mrs. Clancy, Gwenny an' th' pale young man. As for Clancy, he became hadly mixed up with th' extrame backgr-round.

"Don't ye love "Mona Lisa"? sez th' pale spicimin, tur-rnin' round suddinly. "No, I'm married," sez Clancy. He j'ined th' backgr-round again. "Ah, ther-re's that sweet Mur-rillo," scr-reams Gwenny. An' they all made a soulful dash f'r a picture nearby. It showed a lady standin' on a r-remarkably solid cloud an' payin' no attintion whativer to some little boys she was about to crr-ush. "Isn't that heautiful"? sez Gwenny. "Exquisite," sez Clancy, anxious to move into th' forregr-round iv th' conver-rsation. That plaized th' pale young man. "I'll show ye something ye'll like," he sez. So he takes Clancy over to a stone figure that looked as if it had been carrved by bein' thr-rown about in a r-riot. "That's th' Winged Victh'ry," sez th' pale young man. "Victh'ry"? sez Clancy in amazement. 'Yis," sez th' youth. "Well, all I can say is th' other lady put up a divil iv a fight," sez Clancy.

"Afther that they used to leave him outside in th' carr'ge. If ye mintion th' Pitti Palace to him, he'll tell ye all about th' façade. If ye lead th' conver-rsation up to th' National Gallery in London, he will tell ye how many steps ther-re ar-re up to th' fr-ront dure. But if ye talk about pictures an' statuar-ry he will, figuratively speakin', climb a tr-ree an' swear at ye from among th' bir-rd's nests. An' yit in spite iv his pictur-resque attitude toward-rd Eur-rope 'tis enough f'r th' likes iv me to know that he's been ther-re f'r me to loook at him with invy in me eye.

Mr. Hennessy sighed, raised his glass and buried his face in the clixir.

"Why should ye be invlous?" asked Mr. Dooley. "Wasn't ye bor-rn in Ircland?"

"An Irishman niver gets cr-redit f'r havin' been in Eur-rope," said Mr. Hennessy.

"Victh'ry? Well, All I Can Say Is th' Other Lady Put Up a Divil iv a Fight."

LITTLE STORIES OF FACT AND FANCY

Dogs as Policemen.

WHY not dog police in New York? Paris has tried the experiment in its rural districts, and found it not only feasible, but an adjunct that is now looked upon as necessary. Ghent, in Belgium, has tried it, and there the result has been the same—dog police are useful and not to be treated as a joke.

The training of dogs to do the work of policemen is not so difficult as a layman would imagine. When the Police Commissioner of Ghent conceived the idea of increasing the effectiveness of his night force by adding several trained dogs, his task was not so very hard. Three Belgium sheep dogs were the first to be brought into the department, and were soon full-fledged policemen in almost every sense of the word.

The method of training the dogs was simple. They were taught first of all to distrust every one who was not in police uniform. Police officers petted them and fed them. A man in plain clothes was always present while this feeding and petting was going on, and the man in plain clothes invariably abused the dogs. They learned to hate the man in plain clothes. After the feeding and petting and abusing the man in plain clothes would take a bundle under his arm and run out into the police station yard. One of the dogs would at once give chase, springing upon his abusor, barking furiously. When the man attempted to run faster the dog would get in front of him and attempt to trip him. Always the animal was, muzzled so that the plain clothes man was safe from his fangs.

The dog by this time had learned that a man with a bundle under his arm was not his friend. The next point was to teach him that such a man when seen at night in the vicinity of buildings was always his foe. This was done by the same feeding and petting and abusing methods at night in isolated districts.

When the last lesson was well learned the dog was adjudged a competent policeman and was assigned to a "beat."

From the first the dogs proved an unqualified success. Thieves were numerous in the outskirts of Ghent when the dog police were added to the force. There is rarely a theft now. One dog can patrol a beat that formerly required several policemen. When unleashed at night the dog darts in and out of doorways and along the highways, looking for the man who resembles the one who abused him. Should he encounter a suspicious looking character the same tactics that went on in the training yard are pursued by the dog, and usually his barking brings a human policeman to complete the discomfiture of the man who has thus incurred the suspicion of the dog. Sometimes he is not a thief, hut the importance of protection is great enough for the citizen to overlook a few mistakes of that kind hy the canine guardians of their property.

There are now a number of dogs on the Ghent police force, and the number is being increased each year. In Paris it is the same. The suburbanites of both cities are proud of their dog police. On the water front of Paris excellent work is done by the dog police.

Whip and Fire Hose for Mobs.

A GOOD, stout rawhide whip in the hands of policemen would be one of the most effective riot breakers I can readily think of," said Police Inspector Dillon yesterday. "There is nothing the average crowd of roughs fear more than a rawhide in the hands of an expert, unless, indeed, it is a stream of water from a fire hose. Before the stinging lashes of a rawhide there is no crowd which would not cringe and fade away. Then, where there are children in the mob a 'cop' does not want to nail one of the little ones on the head, with a night stick. A crack of the whip would be less cruel and quite as effective. It is usually the sharp crack of the lash that does the trick, as much so as the sting. In Russia the clout is used with more deadly effect than the rawhide or blacksnake whip could ever be used. Of course there is danger of putting out the eyes of some one with the cracker of the whip, but then, too, there is danger of breaking some heads when the nightstick is applied.

"Did you ever see a crack driver from the rural district handle a long whip? He has it down so fine that he can flick a coin out of your fingers twelve feet away. A policeman could become equally proficient with practice. It would he just the wrinkle in many cases where there is a mob to handle. A whip and a fire hose would make a great battery. The fire in many a rioter has been extinguished hy the cold stream from one of those two-inch nozzles."

Why He Frowned.

COMMISSIONER BINGHAM had just left the Harvard Club, had looked sharply at Kelly the Cop, frowned, and passed on out Forty-fourth Street and disappeared into Fifth Avenue.

"What's up?" asked Kelly's friend, the chauffeur, who had noted the frown. Kelly was looking ruefully at the corner around which the Commissioner had turned.

"Another lemon, that's all," said Kelly, as he twirled his nightstick and chewed the ends of his big mustache. "Maybe this ain't the worst beat in little old New York. Maybe it ain't. Why, say, there ain't a minute when I haven't got to stand on dress parade in this block. I'll bet every enemy I've got on the force grinned in his sleeve when the news went out that Kelly had been detailed on the club district beat.

"Lemon? Why, there ain't another on the tree that's bigger than this one. Most of the Deputy Commissioners belong to some of the clubs in this block, and they blow in and out any old time. Some of the Inspectors have their names on the cards at one or another of the clubs here. It don't matter how late the hour is, some of them are likely to show up, comin' out or goin' in.

"Can I lave me post long enough to get around to Clancy's for me nip? Nix. It's up to your friend Kelly to be Johnny on the spot, waitin' to salute."

"But that frown of the Commissioner? What did it mean?" asked the chauffeur.

"What did you ever do to him?"

"Blamed if I know. It's a hahit of his, I guess," replied Kelly. "Maybe he don't like me mug. Maybe the Captain has tipped him off to some of me past history. Maybe I wasn't holdin' me nightstick right. Maybe a dozen or more things. Blamed if I know."

"Did anybody ever tell you that you look like Inspector Walsh?" asked the chauffeur.

"Well, say, Chaffy, you've hit it, sure. I do look like Walsh. You've hit it, sure. I guess he don't like me face because it reminds him of something he don't want to he reminded of. Oh, well, I'm not surprised. It's not the first time the cards have been stacked against me. I have made up me mind. I'm goin' to turn in me badge soon. The force is no place for me. I'm lookin' for a nice, respectable widow lady or some guy with money to stake me to a corner saloon. The first one that comes along gets me. When faces gets to raisin' frowns on the Commissioner it's time for me to quit."

Reparte a la Subway Advertisement.

ON one of the downtown subway trains near the theatre hour a flashily if fashionably dressed woman amused half a car of passengers. Her comments upon things in general seemed to show a shallow sense of humor that occasionally by accident rose to wit. Across the car were three poorly dressed shopgirls who had bought tickets in the topmost gallery of a theatre where was playing a woman-made favorite.

It wasn't long before the woman with the good clothes had discovered the contrast between the grotesque attire of the three girls and the advertising sign above their heads which proclaimed:

PARISIAN MILLINERY EXHIBITION

Soon everyone near who had something in common with the woman with the clothes was tittering at the wit's discovery, though a few there were who said to their escorts: "It's a shame."

For a time the three who were the butts of the woman with the clothes didn't discover the reason for the smiles and laughs sent in their direction. They straightened their hats, rearranged their skirts, and took furtive glances at each other's back hair without avail. And the merriment increased. Finally the oldest in the party—she would have been dubbed an old maid long ago in the provinces—in an agonized upward squint at her hat brim saw the sign. Quite calmly she moved to the car's centre and read it. Then quite as calmly she glanced up and down the double line of advertisements. At the other end of the car she found what she sought. Luckily the seats beneath the desired sign were vacant. She lost no time in climbing upon them and removing from the slight detaining moldings a sign whose letters were red. While the car looked at her wonderingly she stepped quickly to the side of the woman with the clothes. An old man who sat next to the latter got up and vacated his seat so that the girl with the sign could stand upon it. For a moment the reach seemed too great, but hy clinging to a strap and resting one foot upon a window ledge the girl was able to slip the sign over the one above the head of the woman with the clothes. Then she jumped down with a grin.

The car read and reread this:

IT'S CHEAP!!!
VERY-NEARLY GOLD.

The Oldest and Youngest Clubwomen

THE oldest clubwoman in New York, who is at the same time the youngest in clubdom, had her name printed in a special place of honor on a souvenir at a woman's club breakfast given the other day at the Hotel Astor. The breakfast was the annual one of the Society for Political Study and the woman was Mrs. Mary Wakeman.

Mrs. Wakeman is 86 years old, and she has never in her life helonged to a woman's club until a few weeks ago she joined the Political Study Society. Now she is interested in its work, and when she recovers from an illness which has kept her from the last meetings she may read a paper for the society.

The oldest and youngest clubwoman has been a resident of New York for the past forty years, has brought up a family of children, four of whom are living; has been interested in temperance and charitable work of various kinds, and now she says:

"I'm in the evening of my life; I can't go around to do a good many things that I have done; I want to be useful while I live. When I went around to the Society for Political Study, and Mrs. Judge, the President, received me so warmly, and every one was so good to me, I felt that I wanted to he among them."

The new old club member is a sweet-faced woman, with deep blue eyes, snow-white hair, which is folded back from her face in a pretty, soft way that can only he done with hair that ouris laturally.

"It always did curl," she says with the touch of feminine pride of the woman who hae attractions and knows it.

Mrs. Wakeman belongs to the Jennings family, and knows her genealogy from beginning to end and all her connections in this part of the country.

"My grandfather was Isaac Jennings," she says, "whose house was the first one burned by the British in old Fairfield, Conn. He came from England. John Churchill, who built Blenheim Castle, married Sarah Jennings, and her father and my grandfather were brothers. Oliver B. Jennings and my father were brothers, and Albert Gould Jennings is an own cousin.

"I was born in Havana, and my mother was a Spanish woman, who died when I was born. She belonged to a good family, too, but her people were not at all pleased when she married Seth Jennings, my father, because they were members of the nobility."

Later, living in Connecticut, Mrs. Wakeman's father was well known as Deacon Seth Jennings, and his daughter married Ebenezer Wakeman, who served through the civil war, dying soon after, and she is now a Government pensioner.

"You know they have been fighting for a long time in England for the Jennings money," Mrs. Wakeman said, going back to her family, "and I don't know hut now they have voted it to the Crown, and I don't care, for I would just as leave King Edward should have it as any one."

While Mrs. Wakeman has joined the Society for Political Study, whose members believe, most of them, in woman suffrage, she does not care to vote.

Measuring Sound with a Microscope.

IT certainly is an odd statement to say that the microscope is better than the ear for measuring sounds, hut it is true. In determining the pitch of very high tones one of the Government investigators at Washington has found that the ear cannot be depended on, and he has therefore turned to the microscope for aid.

Sound is a phenomenon of vibration, and the pitch of any musical note can be determined if the sound wave corresponding to it is in any manner rendered measurable.

The Washington scientist has solved the problem in this way: He covers a plate with a thin layer composed of a mixture of olive oil and stearine, the surface of which is slightly ridged by rubbing it delicately with the finger. To a high-pitched tuning fork a short hair is attached, and a similar hair is fastened to another vibrating body, such as a rod, whose pitch is known. The ends of these hairs trail across the prepared plate, as it is passed rapidly over them, and thus mark upon its surface a double series of wave lines corresponding to the periods of vibration of the fork and the rod. The microscope is then called into action in order to compare the length and depth of the waves, and thus determine the musical pitch of the vibrating fork with an accuracy not attainable by the ear alone.

Breakfast and Laundry with Every Room.

ACTIVE work upon the excavation, or series of excavations, for the Pennsylvania terminal has left the north side of Thirty-third Street, between Seventh and Ninth Avenues, in a somewhat stilted state. The houses are shored up, it is true, hut no hemlock scantling is stout enough to shore up the hopes of the boarding-house keepers who are affected. The natural result is that some of the houses in which board and lodging may he had, whioh have in front of them but a fringe of sidewalk, are offering unusual inducements to possible boarders. Contrary to custom, this solicitude is not manifest only toward the intending boarder. The lodger already in the house has every detail of his comfort carefully attended to. In some of the houses breakfasts are served, included in the weekly charge for the occupancy of the room, and this rate is lower than in any of the unexcavated sections of the west side. Moreover, it is lower than the rate obtaining in the same houses prior to the great change. One lodger in a shored-up house could not understand how it was that his laundry was never in arrears. For a time he did not inquire too closely. In the end curiosity won a victory over the better part of valor.

"Mrs. Peach," he asked, "how is it that my laundry bills are always paid nowadays?"

"That's easy," she told him; "we give breakfast and laundry with the room."

No More Free Rides on Pennsylvania Ferry.

UNTIL recently the peculiar arrangement of the Jersey City terminal of the Pennsylvania Railroad made it possible for New Yorkers going to the station to meet or bid their friends goodby to cross and reoross the ferry for a single fare, payable on this side of the river. Incoming passengers are supposed to he entitled to free passage over the ferry to New York, and in consequence no tickets are collected from persons who board the boats from the mezzanine floor of the terminal, although Jerseyites and others who pass through the street entrance to the ferry have to contrihute a little pasteboard, or there's nothing doing. Now, however, if you are standing around the train gates waiting for the expected relatives or friends, a man in uniform steps up, and hegging your pardon, asks if you are going back to New York. If you are, the suddenness of his question disconcerts you, and you say "Yes." Then he tenders you a ferry ticket, and asks for 3 cents.

Milk Plenty, but Governors Scarce.

A FRIEND of Gov. Hughes tells this story:

"Shortly after he was elected to the Governorship Mr. Hughes took a run up to the Adirondaoks to recuperate from the exertion of his strenuous campaign. While there he and a couple of friends left camp one morning for a long automobile ride. In the course of the outing the party came to a farm, and the Governor-elect decided to stop and get a glass of real cow's milk. Previous to this Mr. Hughes had been congratulating himself on at least being in a country where human beings were few and far between, and where, as he thought, he was not recognized by the few stragglers he met.

"When Mr. Hughes had drunk the milk he was called upon to pay 15 cents for his indulgence.

"'Milk must he scarce in this neighborhood,' he remarked.

"'No,' replied the farmer, grinning hroadly, 'but Governors are.'"

Just a Difference in Sound.

THE difference between English and American methods of pronunciation often produces misunderstanding. The other day an Englishman who had juet arrived here went to the Waldorf-Astoria. He was a bit lost for a minute just where to find the register book, the Waldorf office being divided into several departments, one for the "Information Bureau," another for "Letters," and so on. The Englishman finally stopped at one of the departments and inquired whether it was the desk of the hotel "clark." "No," was the reply, "this is the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel." Through saying "clark" instead of "clerk" the young man at the desk had taken the Englishman to mean Hotel Clark.

A New Kind of Censor.

IN the parlor of the Martha Washington the group of women were eying with anticipatory interest the little dark woman whose opening words had promised so much.

"Do you know I have heard something that is too awful to repeat—" she had begun, when one of the group, older and more sedate, had indicated a gray-haired woman across the room.

"Hush," she said, "you know perfectly well that that woman over there is the house detective."

PROFESSOR OSBORN FINDS THE PREHISTORIC ELEPHANT

The Success of the Expedition Which Left New York a Year Ago Is Described by Its Head—A Missing Link Soon to Adorn the Natural History Museum.

THE ancestor of the prehistoric American elephant has been discovered, as Prof. Henry F. Osborn predicted seven years ago it would be, in Africa. It was principally to find this elephant, as well as the ancestors of our whale and manatee, that Prof. Osborn, assisted by Morris K. Jesup, organized the Museum Expedition which left New York on the 5th of January for Egypt. Last week Prof. Osborn returned bringing the news of the remarkable success with which the expedition has thus far been attended. The missing elephant link was found in the Fayun Desert, and will ere long take its place at the head of the elephant family tree in the Natural History Museum.

"It is too early for me to be able to tell exactly, in all its scientific bearings, what the Fayun Expedition has accomplished," said Prof. Osborn to a TIMES reporter, "but we have certainly found the skull of a paleomastodon, which antedates the earliest elephant form finding its way into this country ages ago by something like half a million years, and it is quite probable that we have found, in addition the bones of a neritherium, the creature from which the whole elephant race has sprung. The paleomastodon is the link we were after, and if we have a neritherium besides, the line is complete from the first founder of the elephant dynasty in Egypt to the last great mammoth who roamed the forests of prehistoric America.

Extraordinary Fossil Remains.

"The extraordinary wealth of the Desert of Fayun in fossil remains illustrating the former mammalian life of Africa is a discovery made only five years ago by a party from the Egyptian Geological Survey. Since that time paleontologists the world over have turned with eager interest to this Egyptian desert for a solution to many of the problems confronting them in tracing back the ancestries of existing animal forms to their source. The expedition from the Natural History Museum marks the first entrance of American scientists on this novel field of Egyptian research.

"In a former geological era the Fayum Desert was in great part a lake similar in outline to the Lake Moeris of the Ptolemies. This lake was fed by the Nile, and to-day all that is left of it is the shallow and brackish Birket el Kurun, which stretches forty-one metres below sea level and fifteen miles east and west. Rising from the north shore of this lake is a series of terraces, or hills, 1,000 feet thick, forming a great amphitheatre, which is crowned, at an altitude of about 1,100 feet, with the pebbly floor of the Libyan Desert. These terraces are of marine and then of river formation, and extend for a distance of forty-five surveyed miles. It is marvelous country for the geologist, and for many years has been a fruitful field for the excavation of the fossil remains of marine animals. When the bones of land mammals were found in these ancient beds, an important era in paleontology was reached. Of course, in the ages when these extinct animals flourished in and about Fayun the conditions were altogether different from what they are to-day. Fayun was not a desert then, but a well-watered region fringed by noble trees and luxuriant vegetation, the petrified remains of which strew its barren sands to-day.

"With this geological paradise as our goal we left New York during the first week of the year, reaching Cairo on the 24th of January. There the Director of the Egyptian Geological Survey hospitably supplied us with the equipment necessary to make the trip through the desert, and eleven days afterward our caravan, consisting of twenty-two men and twenty-six camels, reached the bone pits which we had selected on one of the Fayun terraces. It was a seventy-mile journey in a southwesterly direction, and followed the lines of the pyramids of Gizeh, Abusir, Sakkara, Deshur, and Lisht. On the Plain of the Pyramids we found two parties of American scientists at work; one, under the direction of Dr. Lythgow, is just beginning an archaeological exploration for the Metropolitan Museum of Art; the other, led by Dr. Reissner, is excavating for the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

"Arrived at our bone pits we pitched a camp of eleven tents and commenced operations without delay. A desert does not supply the necessities of life very plentifully, and the complete dearth of water was, of course, a disagreeable feature to our stay on the shores of this extinct lake. The nearest water, we found, was a three days' journey from where we were—a fact which made it necessary to keep eight of our camels traveling to and fro all the time carrying water tanks to be filled at the distant well.

"The natives whom we employed are said to be direct descendants of the builders of the pyramids, and the tools and carrying baskets which they use are of the same character as those employed 5,000 years ago. Their wages are from 15 to 25 cents a day. Most of our men had considerable experience in the excavation of ancient cities, temples, and palaces, and when it came to the more delicate operation of digging for fossil bones it was necessary to watch them carefully. They did fairly well, however, and while I with Hartley T. Ferrar of the British Antarctic Expedition, made an extended survey of the surrounding desert, these workmen attacked the bone pits under the direction of Walter Granger and George Olsen of the Natural Museum with excellent results. The bone-bearing sand of the Fayum is of river origin and is easily handled with light pick and shovel, or the broad-edged mattocks which the natives prefer. A sharp lookout was kept for all kinds of bones, from the most minute and fragile, belonging to the smaller animals which overran and Fayum thousands of centuries ago, to the fossilized remains of the larger mammals which were deposited there during the same period.

"In ten days' time we had made fine progress in this species of quarrying and had an excellent collection of bones, representing various types of extinct animals, which we preserved in a solution of gum arabic and shellac. From the specimens thus secured it was seen that we would be successful, not only in bringing back the remains of animals already known to science, but would also add to the Museum's collections bones of creatures which are as yet uncatalogued in the world's fauna. The full extent and importance of these discoveries, however, can only be gathered from a more exhaustive study of our various finds than we have as yet been able to give.

"It was since I left Egypt that the expedition unearthed the skull of a paleomastodon, the ancestor of the elephant. Only two very fragmentary skulls of this type have been taken out of the Fayum. This skull, however, is a perfect specimen. It measures two feet in length, ten inches in height, and is proportionally longer than the head of the elephant as we know him to-day. On the other hand, it is smaller than the skull of the trilophodon, or primitive mastodon, which was found in Texas, and which marks the beginning of the elephant race in this country. From various resemblances, however, as well as modifications, especially in the teeth and tusks, it is certain that the trilophodon, who has no American ancestor, was an evolution from the paleomastodon of Egypt, and succeeded in finding his way to this continent at a time when the Bering Straits formed a neck of land joining Asia to America. The prehistoric elephant was the great traveler of his day—a fact which has been abundantly proved by the discovery of his bones in every main geographical division of the earth, except Australia.

"This ancestral elephant, the paleomastodon, was a creature about four feet six inches in height. His tusks were not more than a foot in length and pointed downward. He had twenty-six teeth, while the modern elephant has no more than six. He was long-jawed, and probably had the merest beginnings of a trunk. The evolution of the elephant from this primitive animal has been along the lines of a greatly increased size, as shown in the famous elephant of the Paris Museum, which has a length of over twenty-two feet, and a height of twelve feet six inches. The tusks have gradually increased in size and taken an upward curve since the era of the paleomastodon, while the trunk has become the greatly elongated feature which we see in the African and Asiatic elephants, the only survivors of the paleomastodon to-day. The neritherium, which connects the paleomastodon with the parent mammalian stock, bore a still more remote resemblance in all these prominent characteristics to his descendant, the modern elephant.

"With what the Fayum Expedition has already found it will thus be possible to put on exhibition in the Museum an almost complete series of forms showing the evolution of the elephant from its diminutive Egyptian ancestor to its highest development on the American continent. It is hoped, also, that before the expedition has finished its labors it will discover the primitive ancestors of two other American groups, whose origin has not been found on this continent—the whales and the manatees.

"Another remarkable skull that has just been unearthed in Fayum by the expedition is of an extinct animal known as the arsinotherium. This skull is nearly three feet in length and carries two huge, flat, pointed horns projecting over the eyes, with a smaller pair of horns behind. The arsinotherium resembles the dinoceras somewhat in outward appearance, but is probably not related to him, and has left no descendants. The skull of the queer creature will be the only one of the kind in America.

"Under the direction of Mr. Granger and Mr. Olsen it is probable that the expedition will continue its work of excavation in the Fayum Desert until some time in June. As the fossil bones are collected they will be packed in boxes and carried by camels to Giza, a distance of forty-five miles. There they will be repacked and started on their journey to New York. In all probability they will not be mounted and placed on exhibition in the halls of the Museum until some time in the Spring or Summer of next year."

An African Collection

A STRANGE possibility in the racial relationships of the world has just been suggested by a discovery made in a collection of African ethnological objects purchased last month by the American Museum of Natural History. The coast tribes of California and the tribes occupying Central Africa—were they at some remote period of the world's history related to each other? Judging by what has been found in this latest addition to the museum's collections it is quite in the realm of possibility that they were; and yet, if they were, the whole theory of the past as to the distribution of races over the face of the earth will have to be made over.

Africa has not figured heretofore on the shelves of the museum, although a large amount of African material has been accumulating during the last fifteen years in the storerooms of the latter. This material has come principally from Zululand and the Congo. The addition that has just been made to this, however, consisting of 1,100 specimens and known as the Douglas collection, comes from two native kingdoms in Central Africa, and when it is put on exhibition with the Zulu and Congo material will make the Natural History Museum the principal authority on the races of Africa in the United States. And it is through the museum's wealth in this direction that the remarkable discovery has just been made with its suggestion that some of the American aboriginal tribes are remotely related to certain tribes of Africa.

"I cannot say that I believe there was ever any racial connection between the California Coast Indian and the native of Central Africa," said Prof. Whistler, curator of the Department of Ethnology at the Natural History Museum, to a TIMES reporter, "but I am bound to say that what we have discovered in this Douglas collection opens up a most interesting field of inquiry to the scientific investigator. Let me explain. This collection represents the art, industry, and religion of two great races of Africa, the Bechuannas and the Barotsis, occupying the central part of the continent north and south of Victoria Falls. In this collection we find all the known weaves of basketry in the world. There is no other primitive race of which this can be said, so far as I have been able to discover.

"Now, it so happens that there is a peculiar weave in use in California, known as the 'ti' weave, which hitherto has been supposed to be characteristic of the Pomo Indians, the great basket makers of the Pacific Coast. Until now this weave has never been found elsewhere. It is difficult to describe it with exactness, since it is simply a special method—like a hemstitch or a cross stitch in sewing—by which the basket maker plies his art. It is thus a peculiarly technical affair, a trick in the handling of basketry which has undoubtedly been handed down from generation to generation. Well, in making a careful examination of the basketry contained in this Douglas African collection we have discovered this Californian, or 'ti,' weave.

"Ti" Weave Merely Coincidence.

"This discovery is unique in the annals of ethnology. How is it to be explained? It is the only similarity, so far as I know, existing between a native African and a native American tribe. In historic times we know that there has been no communication between these tribes, and one might be pardoned for supposing in trying to arrive at an explanation of this similarity, that there was communication, or identity of race, in some prehistoric era. Such a supposition, however, in view of all the well-known fundamental differences between the primitive American and African, seems too contrary to all scientific theory, and I am thus inclined to believe that this appearance of the 'ti' weave on the coast of California and in the heart of Africa is a strange coincidence, a case in which two races, living in entirely different parts of the world, made the same identical discovery which has remained peculiar to them through countless ages.

"Otherwise there is no likeness between the Barotsis and Bechuannas represented in this collection. These people are, of course, negroes; but of a very much better type than those found on the Western coast. We do not know very much about them. They live under two Kings, Luinika and Kamma, both of whom reign under an English protectorate. Richard Douglas, who made the collection, is an American, who has lived for the past twenty years among these people, and who is now the financial agent of King Luinika. Douglas traveled through the country for the purpose of making this collection with permits from both monarchs, who are the only traders in their respective kingdoms. Much of what we know of these people we get from him. He describes them as something like the Zulus and Kaffirs in appearance—tall, handsome, and comparatively straight-featured. The country which they occupy is quite level and devoid of mountains. Their houses, grouped together in large villages, are made of mud, circular in shape, with conical thatched roofs. Around each house is a big oval yard, inclosed by a wooden fence, eight feet high, forming a quite impregnable fortification, within which the cattle are confined at night and where they are protected from the attacks of the lions and tigers which abound in the adjacent jungles. Formerly these people were extremely warlike, and the large territory over which they are spread to-day was acquired by ages of conquest. The English protectorate, however, which was established about twenty-five years ago, and has been gradually put in force, has done away with the incessant native wars and made of the Bechuannas and the Barotsis a comparatively peaceable race.

"All of this viewed ethnologically, marks a wide difference between these people and their possible relations on the Pacific Coast of the United States. Another line of comparison would be the languages of these American and African races. Here, however, we are confronted with a remarkable incident in ethnology. The Barotsi people today are using a foreign language which was imposed on them a century ago by a native king. In the beginning of the nineteenth century these people were subdued by a neighboring tribe. The King of the latter forced the adoption of his tribal language. In the course of a few decades he was overthrown and the native dynasty came to its own again, but the people retained, and they have retained until to-day, the language which was imposed upon them by their conquerors. This forms a remarkable incident in racial history, and shows the ease with which a nation can completely change its language—the only incident of the kind, in fact, where this kind of substitution has been actually observed by the scientist. By this enforced obliteration of the Barotsi language, however, it has been made impossible to compare the Barotsi tongue with the language used by the California Coast Indians—a comparison which, in view of the similarity of the two peoples in their methods of basketry, it would be extremely interesting to make.

Earliest Users of Iron.

"This Douglas collection is especially strong in what it shows of the industry and art of these people. It is strong in its basketry, pottery, and woodenware. Such a collection of pottery has probably never before been brought out to the African coast, as it had to be carried for many hundreds of miles in the hands of native runners. Another interesting feature is the large amount of objects made of iron. These people were probably the earliest users of iron in the world. We know from hieroglyphics appearing on Egyptian tombs that they used iron many centuries before the Christian era, and today are the best ironworkers to be found in Central or Southern Africa.

"The collection is rich in musical instruments, also, and in this direction it is interesting to note the 'African piano,' which is very much more primitive than the harp, but which has, undoubtedly, the germ of the modern piano in its series of wooden keys and sounding board of gourds. This piano has a scale of musical notation and is peculiar to Africa.

"There is nothing of this to be found in what we know of the California Coast Indians, and the similarity between the latter and these African tribes remains in that strange identity in their method of making baskets."

First Steel Sleeping Car

THE first steel sleeping car ever constructed, which its designer, Max Schneider of the Pullman Company, believes is a forerunner of the cars that will ultimately displace those of the wooden type, lay for several days last week on a track in the annex of the Grand Central Station. Here it was inspected by President Newman and Vice Presidents Daly, Brown, and Smith of the New York Central, who hope in time to operate such an equipment. Prior to its arrival in New York the Jamestown had been in Philadelphia, where the Pennsylvania officials took more than a passing interest in the new type, since it was at the suggestion of the late A. J. Cassatt that the steel car was built. Mr. Cassatt had then in mind the exclusive use of steel cars in all of the trains that should pass into the tunnel now being constructed across Manhattan from New Jersey to Long Island.

Before leaving the works at Pullman, Ill., where it was built, the Jamestown was subjected to a wreck test. Attached to an engine running at the rate of thirty miles an hour, the steel car was bumped into a wooden sleeper. The vestibule of the wooden car and the tender of the locomotive were smashed, but the Jamestown withstood the crash. As it has a compression of 2,960,000 pounds it is believed by the Pullman people, who are now erecting a factory for the sole manufacture of the steel cars, that it will be practically wreckproof.

While called an all-steel car, some of the minor portions of the Jamestown are of brass and aluminium. Upon the steel underframing, built as solidly as possible, the steel floor is laid down, composed of plates a quarter of an inch thick. Next comes a layer of hair felt, above which is another plate of metal. Upon the corrugated surface of the latter monolith is laid, which completes the floor except for the carpet.

The superstructure consists of two portions, an inner shell and an outer one riveted to beams and joists. Between the two are two layers of asbestos and an airspace fed from openings within the car. This feature of the construction is called by the builders the insulation, and is designed both to keep the car cool in Summer and to prevent the car from being a noisy one. The ceiling of the inner structure is of aluminium, while the window frames are of brass.

The Jamestown cost a small fortune to build, but it is the pioneer, and the absence of a plant properly designed for the sole construction of steel cars added to the cost. The cost of building one of the wooden sleepers ranges from $15,000 to $30,000. With the completion of the steel-car factory, which is to cost in the neighborhood of $1,500,000, the cost of construction will, it is stated, be no more than that of a wooden car. The weight of the Jamestown, however, is some 10,000 pounds more than that of a wooden car. This, too, will be reduced in later cars, so that they will weigh only 5,000 pounds more than the old-type sleepers. This will bring the weight of the steel car down to 135,000 or 140,000 pounds.

The interior appointments, except the berths, are similar to those now in use in the wooden cars. The use of steel, however, has enabled the designer to allow more space between the upper and lower berths. In the Jamestown it is entirely possible for a man to sit upright with a silk hat on his head, if he desires for any unknown reason to do so.

"When you consider," said Max Schneider, the Jamestown's designer, "that our wooden cars are rolled completely over down embankments without going to pieces you can realize what a steel car will withstand. There is practically no comparison between the two types. We believe that we have a car that is practically wreck-proof. Our sleepers are operated over the different roads under various agreements, but in each case the railroad companies pay us something for carrying their passengers in our cars. As the cars are owned by us we shall have all that we can do when the factory is completed to build cars for our own use. We shall make no day coaches to sell, but must leave that to other companies. It is more than likely that once we embark on the building of steel cars we shall not make the old type at all.

"The Pennsylvania is considering the question of using the steel sleepers. Of course if the sleepers in a train are steel cars all of the other cars must be of steel, too, as it would be dangerous to run steel cars in the same train with wooden cars. I think that that particular question will be a matter for legislation, and that mandatory statutes should be passed forbidding the use of steel cars and wooden cars in the same train."

After the Jamestown Exposition opens the Jamestown will journey thither to be an exhibit.

Men Who Travel on the King's Errands

Famous Corps of Silver Greyhounds About to Be Abolished by the British Government.

WITH the retirement of Capt. Philip Wynter from King Edward's service and the death of Arthur Herbert, who went down in the wreck of the Berlin, on Feb. 21, off the Hook of Holland, a famous British royal institution, more familiar possibly in fiction than in history, has begun to pass out of existence. These and no future vacancies on the staff of the King's Foreign Service Messengers are to be filled—such is the official announcement of the British Foreign Office.

Americans are possibly more familiar with the names of Wynter and Herbert than they are with those of other members of the corps, past or present, outside the pages of romantic novels. Capt. Wynter visited this country last August, and was identified by the little silver greyhound which every messenger in the King's service wears attached to his person and is the "open sesame" to all official portals. Capt. Wynter had been in the service of British royalty for thirty-five years. His "On the Queen's Errands" relates many of his adventures of the service, but intimates that the most interesting are left untold. The Hon. Arthur Herbert was the grandson of the third Earl of Powis, and when his ship was wrecked he was on a secret mission to the Courts of Copenhagen, St. Petersburg, Berlin, and Teheran. A messenger is never supposed to part with the leather wallet containing his dispatches, and is expected freely to give his life in its defense. When Herbert's body was recovered no wallet was found. Three days later it was washed ashore. It is believed that the messenger seeing death at hand had cast it from him in the hope that it might be picked up and forwarded to its destination.

The origin of this corps of globe trotters, who bear personal letters between sovereigns quite as often as they do instructions to Ambassadors, is rather obscure. The early messengers were picked men belonging to that institution who started their career as Knights Caligate of Arms, so called because they wore "startuppes," a sort of hoot-stocking to the middle of the leg. After seven years' service they became knight-riders, who gave their name to an extant street within sight of the College of Arms; after seven years more they became pursuivants, who were stationed at specific places, whence the names of their offices were taken, and lastly they were promoted to heralds. The relative importance of the dispatches intrusted to their care corresponded with their rank. Pursuivants were chiefly employed in carrying messages to and from the Governors and the Sovereign, and in the reign of Henry VII. the number was increased, owing to the great correspondence upon the Continent. Heralds had the distinction of conveying personal or public messages from King to King and Prince to Prince, those intrusted with the intelligence of royal births being specially rewarded.

Later the service was transferred from Officers of Arms to persons appointed by the Secretary of State called Posts, and in course of time a Master of the Posts was appointed, and the first of these on record was Sir Brian Tuke, who held that office in 1516. The practice of allowing private persons to avail themselves of the King's Posts for transmitting their correspondence began at an early period, and afterward grew into a regular custom. Its employment was first recognized in a proclamation issued in 1591. Once a postal system had been established—and it may be said to have been first systematized by an edict of James I. in 1619, though the Post Office as at present constituted was not founded till 1660—the dispatches of the Crown and officers of state reverted to the case of special Posts, who were appointed by the Secretary of State, and in course of time became christened King's or Queen's Messengers. Later on the staff was split up into foreign and home service messengers.

The service as it exists to-day is the work of George Canning, who became Foreign Secretary in 1822. He put a stop to the abuses that had grown up in the corps owing to the immense amount of correspondence between St. James's and Continental Courts, occasioned by the ever-changing politics of Napoleon.

Lord Stewart once discovered that a favorite messenger had for a long time taken all his dispatches to Metternich before going to England. Under the present system messengers for foreign service were appointed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the candidate being subject to the following qualifications and examination: He must be a British subject, preferably an army officer, between the ages of 25 and 35, possessed of sound bodily health, able to ride, and competent to perform journeys on horseback. That he has such a knowledge of either French, German, or Italian as will enable him to make himself understood in regard to such matters as concern his duties on the road, those duties being to convey the dispatches intrusted to him safely and expeditiously by whatever means he may have occasion to travel. That he have such a knowledge of the first four rules of arithmetic as will enable him to make out his accounts in the simplest form.

Besides the silver greyhound hung pendant from a tiny royal crown, the messenger is provided with various credentials, one of them being a parchment bearing the words, "We request and require that all demands of the bearer be acceded to with the least possible delay," which is signed by the Foreign Minister. There is also a uniform, but this is now rarely worn in traveling, being donned by the messenger only when he receives or delivers his dispatches. The uniform comprises a dark-blue cloth double-breasted frock coat, a blue single-breasted waistcoat buttoned up to the throat, with edging of gold lace; trousers of Oxford mixture, with a scarlet cord down the side seams; gilt buttons embossed with the royal cipher, encircled by crown and garter, and having a greyhound pendant, and a blue cloth cap, with leather peak, band of black braid, and royal cipher and crown in front. According to the regulations this uniform, and more especially the badge, must always be worn by messengers when traveling, but the badge must not be worn at any other time. In practice, however, the glorified postmanlike kit is obsolescent.

The messenger when traveling has practically carte blanche. "Speed and safety" is his motto. He rides by himself in a first-class compartment when journeying by rail, and has a private cabin at sea. His wallet, which, if its contents were to be known, might make war inevitable, disgrace an Ambassador, or rob a Princess of her fair name, he carries on his person; other letters of less importance are consigned to a dispatch box. In the ordinary sense these letters are not private letters at all, for they relate to public affairs. Yet they are private property, and not State papers, being the outcome of the system by virtue of which public correspondence may be called for by Parliament. They contain matter which, if published in a Blue Book, would render the official and social position of an Ambassador intolerable, as they form the real source of the information, often gathered from social gossip, which one Government possesses as to the doings and intentions of another.

The archives in Downing Street devoted to the Foreign Messenger Service would doubtless—as they already have in the imagination—furnish novelists with the most thrilling themes. Of course, Capt. Wynter's book passed through a most discriminating censorship. Undoubtedly the most celebrated mishap that has befallen a King's Messenger on his travels is the mysterious disappearance of Benjamin Bathurst, when returning from Vienna with important dispatches in 1809. On Nov. 25 he arrived at the German village of Perleberg, and halted at the Post Office for refreshments and fresh horses. He stood outside the inn watching his portmantcau being placed on the carriage, stepped around to the heads of the horses—and was never seen again. Every effort was made by the civil and military authorities to trace Bathurst. Bloodhounds were employed to track the lost man, every well was explored and river dragged, every suspicious house was examined from attic to cellar, woods were searched and gardens turned up; but all to no purpose. Neither Bathurst's body nor any of the dispatches he was carrying on his person were ever found. And so rests the Bathurst disappearance, an unsolved mystery to this day.

The passing of the King's Greyhounds is merely a sign of the times. Safe and easy transit facilities, the cable, and telegraph wires have reduced the importance of their function in the same ratio almost that the importance of foreign envoys has been reduced. The dispatches formerly carried by messengers to and from the British Embassy in those foreign capitals which are accessible by sea have for some time past been intrusted to the commanders of his Majesty's warships whenever possible or to the Captains of first-class liners. Till the other day the staff numbered but eight messengers, two being in receipt of a salary of £400 a year and six £250 a year. The messengers receive in addition a fairly liberal allowance per traveling day, and, of course, their actual disbursements on journeys are refunded them.

Now Enters the Visiting Housekeeper.

TO-DAY there is practically no limit to the money-making scope of capable, agreeable women, even though they may not be skilled along any of the sharply competitive lines commonly alluded to as "professional," for the demand for practical, agreeable help of the non-professional order is constantly increasing through the many exigencies of our intricate social system.

Within the past few years a great demand has been created in large cities for the services of competent visiting housekeepers, women capable of running the domestic machinery smoothly, or, rather, of "starting the wheels" in families whose social obligations are not quite extensive enough to require a full corps of servants, those whose limited means and restricted house room do not warrant the expense of keeping a resident housekeeper; and in households whose domestic needs are too numerous to be thoroughly looked after by a single servant, or even two servants.

Literally speaking, there are three grades of visiting housekeepers, ranking from the woman skilled in the delicate art of correct dinner service, as well as in the more prosaic affairs of household economy, to the merely "handy" woman who knows more about housecleaning and odds and ends than she does about serving course dinners. The first type commands first prices, naturally—and usually earns them. She keeps herself intimately posted on the constantly changing fads of smart dining, so that she is in instant readiness to supervise any social function that her patrons may undertake. Every woman of limited means and house room, who has ever entertained "smart company," even in small numbers, dreads a repetition of the ordeal, which involves more actual brain work and continuous anxiety than a Wall Street panic. She will gladly pay the price of a bonnet or even a gown to spare herself the disquieting experience, so she calls in a first-class visiting housekeeper, who plans the menu, hires extra help, if necessary, and promises personally to supervise the serving of the difficult dinner—difficult because not one ordinary woman out of twenty knows how to serve an up-to-date dinner correctly.

To the competent housekeeper it is very easy, for she has everything at her finger tips, so to speak. She knows exactly how to serve oysters, in or out of the shell, in plates especially designed for either; how to regulate the courses, what silver to use and what not to use, which is quite as important. If her patron does not possess the necessary amount of silver and cut glass, the housekeeper rents whatever is required to make the table beautiful and strictly up to date. If, in her opinion, a butler is required instead of the usual professional waitress, she sees to it that a competent man is procured at a reasonable price. Not only is she present behind the scenes on the evening of the dinner, but she stays until the last course has been set before the guests and the hired help paid and dismissed, thus relieving the hostess's mind of every anxiety. For the above services the visiting housekeeper is paid according to the work involved, which is very slight to her experienced brain compared to what it would have been to the anxious hostess. Ten dollars is considered a fair remuneration for the piloting of a smart little function. What woman would not gladly pay ten or even fifteen dollars to be relieved of the manifold worries of modern entertaining under restricted circumstances?

The second grade of visiting housekeeper is quite as useful as the first, although she caters to a less ambitious class than the former, to the woman interested in charities or science, or to the mother who is forced to devote so much time to the care and education of her children that she is unable to fill the lesser needs of her household. The latter gladly avails herself of the services of a practical, methodical housekeeper, who performs the prosaic duties of looking after the larder and giving the one maid an occasional helping hand. She does the marketing at lowest market prices and highest quality. She can be depended upon to "fill in" in case of a household emergency, such as the sudden departure of the cook or the unexpected arrival of guests, for which she receives additional payment above the stipulated salary. Every morning at an appointed hour she presents herself in the kitchen, makes a list of household wants, gives the maid a lift if the latter is particularly busy in the way of a luncheon or dinner suggestion, which she attends to on her way to market. Her methods are so systematic and efficient that her duties are accomplished within a few hours usually, leaving her free to spend the rest of the day as she likes.

The third class of Visiting Housekeeper is essentially a "handy woman" who can be depended upon, in stress of circumstances, to cook a substantial meal and to make herself generally useful. She has her regular system, however, but makes her rounds only once or twice a week among women of small means and numerous burdens. She does the bulk of the marketing in the way of dry groceries, and very often includes a couple of hours shopping for the busy mother whose means do not admit of the luxury of a servant. The housekeeper, who always has at her command a reliable scrubwoman or two, undertakes the weekly housecleaning and window cleaning with the help of the former, and always manages to put the whole house to excellent rights in a day, besides replenishing the family larder and shopping a little while her help is doing the rough work. Being less skilled than handy her services are not as well paid as those of the more capable order, but even the humblest of visiting housekeepers make two dollars a day aside from the many little extras derived through the application of practical knowledge of everyday things, such as the little economic arts that add life and lustre to homely things.

Is Alcohol A Curse Or A Blessing?

British and German Physicians Who Advocate Its Moderate Use Both as a Food and a Stimulant Are Flatly Contradicted by New York Physicians.

TWO events have deeply excited and enraged the circle of well-wishers of their race who regard liquor as a curse.

The London Lancet, the leading medical authority of the world, has published an article, signed by sixteen physicians of high repute, in which the moderate use of alcohol is justified. And a German physician and scientist has published a book in which he not only sanctions the use of alcoholic drinks, but enthusiastically recommends it as, in the day of city life and nervous tension, a benefit, a positive necessity, a hygienic measure of the highest importance.

The Lancet article runs:

In view of the statements frequently made as to present medical opinion regarding alcohol and alcoholic beverages, we, the undersigned, think it desirable to issue the following short statement on the subject, a statement which we believe represents the opinions of leading clinical teachers as well as the great majority of medical practitioners.

Recognizing that in prescribing alcohol the requirements of the individual must be the governing rule, we are convinced of the correctness of the opinion so long and generally held that in disease alcohol is a rapid and trustworthy restorative. In many cases it may truly be described as life preserving, owing to its power to sustain cardiac nervous energy while protecting wasting nitrogenous tissues.

As an article of diet we hold that the universal belief of civilized mankind that the moderate use of alcoholic beverages is for adults usually beneficial is amply justified.

We deplore the evils arising from the abuse of alcoholic beverages, but it is obvious that there is nothing however beneficial which does not by excess become injurious.

German Scientist's Theory.

The contention of the German writer goes beyond anything ever publicly fathered by a reputable man of science. Dr. J. Starke is a person of some eminence in his country as a physiologist. His book, "Alcohol: The Sanction for Its Use," published in this country by G. P. Putnam's Sons, is a popular statement of the results of his studies in the effects of alcohol drinking. Behind it is alleged to lie a vast amount of scientific data—of which, it must be stated, Dr. Starke apparently believes the lay reader is entitled to no glimpse. While, therefore, his affirmations are positive, often reiterated and expressed with the most absolute confidence, they are very far from convincing. Whatever may be his reputation in his native land, the author of this daring proclamation of the benefits of alcohol is not so well known elsewhere that his ipse dixit is final.

New Theory of Drunkenness.

Dr. Starke affirms that alcohol is a food of the highest value. It nourishes, creates heat, and furnishes strength for muscular work. He affirms that alcohol is the most beneficent agent known to man for the reduction of nervous irritability. It is greatly to be regretted that North America, the land of neurasthenia and of coffee drinking, does not realize that fact. Caffeine is an enemy of the nerves, and it should never be used unless corrected by alcohol. With every demitasse a cognac; "always more alcohol than caffeine" should be an invariable rule of life. He maintains that alcohol is in no sense a "poison"; that it does not of itself possess the property of inducing those who use it to indulge in ever-increasing amounts. Drunkenness has nothing to do with the moderate use of alcohol. Men who get drunk do so through weakness of character which has nothing to do with alcohol. They drink because they are pathological and besotted persons; they do not become pathological and besotted on account of drink. Drunkenness is not the destructive habit it is believed to be, though there are "certain disadvantages" connected with it which are "discernible in time." But the moderate use of alcoholic stimulant liberates the higher self, expands and frees the ego, and is a physiological and psychic practice most strongly to be recommended and insisted upon.

These astonishing teachings are put forward with the utmost seriousness. Dr. Starke's initial fact is that alcohol is not a stranger to the human system. Alcohol is formed naturally by the metabolic processes which go on in the bodies of all living things, both plant and animal, in the cells, in the very citadel of life. The public has been imbued with the opinion that alcohol is a body foreign to nature, created by the artfulness of man. The belief is very general that it was man who succeeded in introducing artificially this dangerous substance into poor innocent organisms, which, not being prepared for the encounter, naturally reacted most strongly with all their shrieking cells against this contact, as if they intended to show their disgust. Every drop of alcohol, accordingly, could only act as a poison upon the natural organism. This organism seems to be depicted as a lamb upon a green meadow.

Alcohol a Natural Food.

As a matter of fact, alcohol is found in the most normal animal and vegetable organisms, where it could never have been introduced by man. It originates, in plants for instance, from the decomposition of starch in the cell. You cannot eat raw fruit or berries without taking alcohol. Its origin in the animal organism is obscure, but the probability is that it is the product of the metabolism of carbohydrates. But what is clear is that the cells of the human body are accustomed by nature to alcohol.

Its behavior when taken artificially is very like that of the carbohydrates. It is easily and rapidly ingested and incorporated with the juices of the body, where it proceeds to sustain life and increase strength. It economizes albumen precisely as do the carbohydrates and fat, and becomes a source of muscular power. It is a common experience that liquor taken in connection with extraordinary muscular work does not "go to the head." It is consumed in feeding the muscles.

Beer particularly is a splendid food. The ill effects of beer guzzling are due to the overnourishment of the body; overindulgence in bread would have much the same effect. Gout and affections of the heart, sometimes attributed to the use of alcohol, are simply the result of overnutrition. If a man uses beer or wine, he should cut down his other nutrients. It is all a matter of how one chooses to take one's food—in liquid or solid form.

All this, let it be remembered, is the German author's dictum.

The Real Nerve-Wrecker.

Dr. Starke is particularly severe on the practice of drinking much coffee or tea. They possess the property of lessening the blood in the skin and congesting it in the internal organs. Besides, they heighten nervous excitability. It is not necessary, perhaps, to avoid coffee and tea entirely, but it is necessary to take more alcohol than caffeine. It is important to drink wine or beer at dinner, and to accompany the cup of coffee with a liqueur or cognac. But if a man will avoid alcohol altogether, Dr. Starke holds it to be proper for him to avoid coffee and tea at the same time. Either both should be taken in corresponding amounts (alcohol and caffeine) or none of either.

What is it that the modern person who is mentally overstrained drinks as a rule in order to spur himself on? A great deal of coffee and tea—coffee morning and noon or afternoon and tea in the evening, (often in the afternoon also.) To force himself to work when he is weary or has no liking for it a man takes continually increasing doses of coffee, which spur him on to greater haste and leave him no rest, even when the task is done. Owing to this artificial stimulation, he now begins something new, for he is "not tired." To carry it out he resorts to coffee again. And thus arises the "vicious circle" of the modern mode of life. Naturally these goaded nervous apparatuses are ultimately still more profoundly exhausted.

In reality neurasthenics are not always persons who are mentally overstrained. The frequent occurrence of the trouble in women forbids the assumption that they are. It is much more probable that the rapid increase in the nervous characteristic of our times corresponds to the simultaneous increase of some factor that favors nervousness under certain circumstances. That is sure. It is not far to seek. The modern rapid increase of nervousness runs parallel with that of the consumption of coffee.

Everybody concerned, and it is well known that very many are, must therefore so regulate his diet as not to heighten his nervous irritability, his reflex excitability. To that end the public must be firmly impressed with the following scientific facts:

a. Of all the articles consumed by us alcohol is the only one that reduces our nervous irritability, especially our reflex excitability.

b. The caffeine of coffee and tea heightens them.

Those are two indisputable scientific facts, fundamental facts, that everybody ought to know. And this rule ought to be followed by all who will not give up their caffeine stimulants: With every demi-tasse of strong coffee cognac or a good liqueur is needed, and with every cup of tea a little rum. Whoever is familiar with countries or circles accustomed to that practice—apart from the glass of wine or beer that is taken in addition with the principal meals—knows how comfortably the people live and how free they are from nervousness.

All this, let it be kept clearly in mind, is Dr. Starke's opinion. It is radically controverted by New York's most eminent physicians.

Psychology of Alcoholic Action.

The most interesting part of Dr. Starke's theory of the benefits of alcohol is his account of the stimulation of drink. He admits freely that men drink for excitement. He declares that this is right and good. The excitement caused by drugs and by caffeine is harmful, but the excitement caused by a moderate amount of liquor is a most excellent thing.

Here Dr. Starke plunges into the realm of metaphysics. He has a most elaborate version of alcoholic exhilaration:

The peculiarity of the action of alcohol is that it lifts a man to his highest and fullest self. It seats the soul on the throne. It frees the ego from the bonds in which it is enmeshed by business and the routine of daily life. It arouses the inmost consciousness and exalts the psychic personality. A man becomes most truly himself under the excitement of drink.

Even the average man not infrequently has days when he feels as inspired as if he had taken wine, when he feels like a thorough man. These conditions of exaltation of the personal ego are more pronounced in a specially gifted and original personality—that is, in a genius. According to Dr. Starke's theory, the same condition of brain and soul excitation can be observed as in the result of the sensible use of alcohol. The psychic excitation produced by alcohol is nothing peculiar. A Spring day will produce it, or the music of a band. We produce it arbitrarily by means of alcohol, when we should otherwise have to wait until nature and life were ready to produce it. Thanks to alcohol, says Dr. Starke, we have a means by which we can produce it at any time when we wish it or when it pleases us.

One evidence of this power of enriching the personality—or, rather, of enabling it to realize itself—is in the fact that drink increases the courage, augments the self-consciousness, and elevates the sense of ability. A few glasses of wine content a man with life and with his own place in life. He appreciates his own abilities, and is ready to believe that others appreciate them. "Dutch courage" has a philosophical explanation. The personality is stimulated; the ego is brought to the front.

Alcohol does not give a new character to a man, but it shows up the whole psychic man and his character. It will not be the fault of the alcohol, but of the person, if the character is not beautiful. Alcohol does not make a man unprincipled, but it shows the deficiency of his character. The same is true, for example, of the temperament. Alcohol is never the cause of a man's having a bilious or melancholic temperament, but by its exciting action it brings out the temperament. From this may he seen the different results of alcohol: one man will become jolly, another pensive, the third furious, and Olympic quietness overcomes the fourth.

Preservative of "Psychic Personality."

Thus Dr. Starke goes on to his conclusion that the man who does not avail himself of the stimulation of alcohol so as to "realize his deeper personality" is a fool. It is to be observed that he always speaks well of beer and wines, (particularly those of Moselle,) and of brandy—all products of Germany—but has little use for whisky.

He concludes:

He who leads the life of a shepherd in Arcadia may indeed be satisfied with goats' milk. And still the shepherds drank wine. But what about him who does not live in Arcadia? What about him who has to comply with the daily increasing demands of practical life? What would become of his psychic personality if he did not possess alcohol? What would become of the psychic personality of all the many men who during the daytime cannot act as they would wish and must according to their ego? They would often pine away without alcohol. No function of our organism can be neglected or suppressed without detriment. Our so-called psychic personality comprises a complex of principal functions of our organism. The depression and repression of our personal ego will be avenged in time, and in this may be a cause of neurasthenia, or of ordinary nervousness. I at least have observed that neurasthenia is seldom found in those circles where there are many very strongly excitable egos which cannot be easily repressed, therefore among artists and artistically gifted nations.

Only think of the Italians. What noise, what activity, passionate in sorrow and joy! But no nervousness. But the less passionate northerners are nervous. That is so clear that it can be found pointedly set forth in literature. How morbid, how pathological do we often find the contents of the modern northern fine writing, and how different the books of the southerner! How healthy are these, notwithstanding the passion and the tragic! The Italians need alcohol much less than we do, and still opposition to alcohol hardly takes root in the Latin countries.

Men have really known all this for a long time, and they therefore like to meet after the labor and burden of the day over a glass of alcoholic beverage. It is so agreeable to them if the ego excited by alcohol changes the lever of the brake and by so doing allows thinking, feeling, and observation, like obedient locomotives, to run on the tracks upon which each would always like to travel if he could do as he wished. Those who examine the conditions more deeply will observe that the glass of wine, taken judiciously, after the day's work, means not only a subjective benefit, but the introduction of a corrective very important for the health of our nervous life. It is no luxury: it is a necessity, a nervous hygienic measure of the highest importance.

New York Doctors Dissent.

There may be in New York physicians who entertain some of the views set forth by the German writer. Considerable inquiry made during the past week could find none. Not one among twenty representative doctors would admit that Dr. Starke's conclusions had the slightest validity in science. A few went so far as to deny, or at least to distrust, the medicinal use of alcohol, but there was practical unanimity of opinion that there is and can be no scientific ground upon which even the moderate use of alcoholic drinks can be recommended.

One of the most eminent physiologists and physicians of the city said:

"This is a most dangerous book. Its argument is altogether specious. Its theory of the advantages of a habitual stimulant and its presentation of alcohol as a nerve sedative is ludicrous, but the author writes with such plausibility that those who do not take the trouble, or who do not desire, to learn the truth about alcohol from the really scientific point of view, may be misled. One is easily persuaded by an argument which points to a conclusion which is secretly desired.

"The best scientific knowledge and thought absolutely contradict Dr. Starke. Any man who uses this book as an authority by which to justify the pernicious vice of tippling is abandoning the path of health and safety at the beck of a mischievous guide.

"It's a pity people can't discuss this question of the use of alcohol on calm, reasonable grounds. I am one of those who believe that alcohol is a therapeutic agent of the highest value. We have no stimulant to which we can resort in case of necessity with such confidence. It is far and away the best in practically every situation in which a stimulant is required. It has saved thousands of lives and prolonged hundreds of thousands more. You may recollect a little controversy some years ago over a night scene by the bedside of the dying Grant. Bishop Newman once or twice referred to the scene as an inspiring instance of the power of prayer. I was constrained to say to Dr. Newman, 'Bishop, I am afraid you are invading my prerogative in this matter. It wasn't prayer, but a stiff injection of brandy that brought the General around.'

"But, mind you, alcohol is a thing to be resorted to in an emergency only, and it is a safe rule to use it in each instance only on the prescription of a physician. It is a drug, and a dangerous drug, and nothing could be worse than to promote a general belief that it is beneficent in any way whatsoever under ordinary circumstances. It is not. There is no evidence whatever—neither does Dr. Starke's book adduce any—that a drink ever did anybody any good except in such an emergency as sickness or exhaustion. And there is abounding and overflowing evidence that it is the father of a thousand ills. The first question we ask a patient who comes to the hospital is, 'Do you drink?'"

"Alcohol may quiet the nerves when taken in sufficient quantity to act as a soporific or an efficient narcotic—that is to say, the nerves of a stupefied sot are for the moment quiet. But its habitual use, even in most moderate quantities, doubtless increases nervousness instead of diminishing it.

Nature Her Own Distiller.

"No, the human body does not require wine or beer or brandy or alcohol in any of Dr. Starke's favorite forms. Our German friend makes the point that alcohol is no stranger to the cells of the body, that is produced by the metabolic processes going on within us. Exactly, nature supplies itself with all the alcohol which it needs. It is not necessary to call in the expert assistance of Dr. Starke. Nature provides good and safe food in abundance—beef, eggs, milk, fruit. Simple food, plenty of sleep, and a clear conscience are the cure for neurasthenia and the promoters of long life. The old may perhaps indulge sparingly in sound alcoholic drinks, but the young man who uses them should be warned by the authoritative voice of science that he is weakening his body and his mind, damaging his natural powers, inviting disease, and shortening his life."

Dr. Andrew H. Smith of 18 East Forty-sixth Street said:

"The plea of Dr. Starke in behalf of the alcoholic products of his native land is an artful distortion of facts, and his conclusions are without a particle of basis in truth and sound reason.

"It is true that nature does manufacture alcohol for its own use. That is the very reason we do not need to introduce alcohol artificially into the body and why we should not do so under normal conditions. Nature furnishes the proper quantity—ordinarily.

"It is true that alcohol is a nutrient, at least in the sense that it retards metabolism. Dr. Starke dwells on this point. But ordinarily we do not want to retard metabolism. Metabolism is a healthy process, by virtue of which life sustains itself, transforming food into energy. It is sometimes, and only sometimes, desirable to check and retard this process. It is desirable to do so after great strain and exhaustion or in extreme weakness. At such times the physician administers alcohol in proper quantity, thus saving the tissues from waste until nature can "catch up" and appropriate new strength from proper nourishment.

"But to check the transmogrification of food into life cells ordinarily is to cause a disorder, not to cure one; to set up a pathological, a morbid, diseased condition where there was a normal one. It is not to the point that the sensation caused by this pathological condition is a pleasant one. All vices are agreeable to those who indulge them. Death itself may be a pleasant experience, for aught we know. Dr. Starke's 'psychic elevation' is a misnomer for 'pathological degeneration.'

"Alcohol never gave strength to a man's muscle nor power to his mind nor energy to his will. Never. It is not a preventive of exhaustion—on the contrary, it hastens it. It does not fortify against the cold—on the contrary, it lowers the ability to resist it. It is a popular error which recommends a stimulant before a great effort. The scientific truth is that alcohol is good to combat exhaustion with only after the fact. A toddy after exposure to the cold, or a dose of brandy after the effort, may stay the waste of tissue till nature's forces come to the aid of the exhausted body. Alcohol is good for the human system only in this way.

"Most pernicious would be the result if Dr. Starke's conclusions should be accepted. There is no vice which has not had at one time or another its plausible defender. I am glad of an opportunity to join in warning young men and all others against the sophistry of this book."

Dr. Beverly Robinson's Opinion.

Dr. Beverly Robinson of 42 West Thirty-seventh Street, while he holds that alcohol is unnecessary, doubts whether, used in entire moderation, it is particularly harmful. Dr. Robinson said:

"In great moderation and for many people at or past middle life good wine or good whisky is not objectionable. It stimulates appetite and helps digestion. A little whisky or gin of an evening, with effervescent or ordinary water, is often very grateful, and I do not believe does notable harm frequently. There are exceptions, however, and there are some people who should refrain from alcohol in any form and even very moderate quantity, as unquestionably it helps develop or aggravates, notably, rheumatic or gouty tendencies. Alcohol is not required at all, except in time of illness, by young people of either sex. It should be insisted upon, also, that alcohol in excess is always bad for the individual, and that bad alcohol—i. e., alcohol which is impure for any reason and not of the best quality—should not be drunk by any one. A great deal of the evil effects of alcohol proceed from adulteration, wrong manufacture, and the use thereof before time sufficient has elapsed to perfect it. Undoubtedly habits, climate, occupation, and race should all be considered carefully when we pronounce in favor of or against alcohol.

"Moreover, the wine or the brew of the country in a measure suits best the native. Germans get along wonderfully well with their light beer and their white wine of the Rhine or Moselle. An Englishman seems to flourish with his vaunted Scotch whisky and an occasional mug of Bass's ale. A Frenchman can live long and happily with a sound Bordeaux of good body, frequently diluted well with water. I believe, however, it is judicious for him, as it may be for us, to take his "petit verre de cognac" after his "demi-tasse," and I am inclined to believe a small quantity of good Jamaica rum is not amiss with tea of an afternoon or evening, after great fatigue, mental or bodily, but no milk with it.

"Is alcohol a food or is it not? In a small measure unquestionably it is food, and a most assimilable kind. Over and beyond a very limited and moderate quantity, and in anything but purest form, alcohol does harm in the long run, and great harm to all our bodily organs."

Dr. S. F. Armstrong, General Medical Superintendent of Bellevue and Allied Hospitals, when asked for his opinion as to the beneficial effects of alcohol replied:

"I know of no evidence to justify the statement that is alleged to have been made by The London Lancet that the moderate use of alcoholic beverages is usually beneficial for adults.

"I will give you tables which will show the monthly expenditure for liquors and drugs in each of the hospitals for the year 1905, corresponding to the year quoted in The Lancet for the London Hospital:

Tunnel Workers Victims of Poetry Habit

Wit and Wisdom in Rhyme as It Is Produced by the Human Moles Who Are Burrowing Under the City.

NOW under the rivers, where the tunnelers work night and day, they find plenty of amusement, although they do not get the opportunity offered other folks of going to the theatre of the opera. Still the sandhogs, as the tunnel laborers are called, find time to crack jokes at each other's expense, while the engineers sing songs for their own amusement, and occasionally write poetry. Just now there seems to be a brainstorm raging among the Subway poets, for in each of the tunnels may be found a genius grinding out verse. When one of the Subway poets breaks loose his poetic effusion is copied on mud-stained paper and handed from man to man, passing from a gang at work under the East River to the other gangs at work in the Hudso ntunnels.

"Ebony" is he nickname applied to the poet of the East River tunnel, a negro sandhog, who spends his leisure hours on a bench in Battery Park, jotting down thoughts. Most of these things, like the thoughts of the other Subway poets, turn to the tube or tunnel in which the poet is employed. "Ebony's" last work was entitled "The Man Higher Up," and told in rhyme the story of the engineer above ground who operates the elevator car of the tunnel shaft in Battery Park. By the Man Higher Up "Ebony" did not mean what is generally meant by that term, his Man Higher Up simply being the fellow at the helm above ground.

But here is an example turned out by a tunneler who was graduated from the sandhog school in the old McAdoo tunnel, and who took a post-graduate course as walking boss in the East River tunnel. The title of it is:

THE SONG OF THE TUNNELLER.

Through wharf and sewer both dark and foul,
Down through the river bed's murky cowl,
We bore, bore, bore.

What care we for the stars so bright,
As long as we can't tell day from night,
As we bore, bore, bore.

Far from the din of the factory wheels,
The trolley bells, and automobiles,
We bore, bore, bore.

Secure from collectors and hold-up gents,
And landlords' agents alooking for rents,
We bore, bore, bore.

Our jewels are safe in granite rock,
For crooks can't pick the new airlock,
As we bore, bore, bore.

We make our storms with dynamite blast;
The thunder follows the lightning fast,
As we bore, bore, bore.

When a rest is needed the tunnel head
Can rest itself in the river bed,
And we bore, bore, bore.

Over in the Pennsylvania Railroad dugout on West Thirty-third Street Hannigan, the blaster, composed this one:

We're a husky, dusky bunch of happy blasters,
Real dynamite and powder are our toys;
We chuckle when we hear of great disasters,
So long as they're accompanied by noise.
And when we wish to make a crowd assemble,
We touch a button which awakes the town;
The tallest of the tenements then tremble
Till the tenants realize they're falling down.

The majority of the poets, however, are found working under the East River in the tunnel tubes of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Here the sandhogs compose songs which become popular down at the tunnel headings, although they are seldom heard of elsewhere. One of these, written by McGuinness, the airlock tender, is entitled:

WHEN BRADY GOT THE BENDS.

Big Brady weighed three hundred pounds
When first he struck the tube;
He said he (in just twenty rounds)
Made Jef' look like a Rube.
He begged us for an airlock job,
In air that was compressed.
And, getting it, threw off his clothes,
In oilskins then he dressed.
He laughed to scorn caisson disease,
While joking with his friends,
But suddenly hooked up his knees;
Poor Brady had the bends.

They dragged him in the airlock place,
Then dragged him out again;
They rubbed cocaine upon his face,
And called the doctor men.
They rubbed his back and twigged his nose,
And sat upon his chest:
They poured carbolic down his throat
Until the burst his best.
He shouted for his children,
And he shouted for his friends.
They had to shut the tunnels down
When Brady got the bends.

Poor Brady was in awful pain,
And squealed just like a pig;
And when they stood him on his head
He danced an Irish jig.
He doubled like a jackknife, closed,
His knees beneath his chin,
And every time they flattened him,
It made the sandhogs grin.
They saved him after many days,
But here the story ends;
It cured him of his hot-air ways
When Brady got the bends.

The Poet Laureate of the Belmont tunnel was in a sentimental mood when he turned out one entitled "The Sunless City." Here is a sample verse:

There's a city that lies in the Kingdom of Rock.
In the beautiful land of the Mud;
It's peopled by folks from all over the world,
But mostly the Isle of the Spud.
There's aerial bridges of timber and steel,
And beautiful streets made of lime;
A gardenless Eden that has no police,
'Tis there that the sun doesn't shine.

Probably the most interesting of the underground poets who prefer to hide their light under a bushel, or, as it should be said, in the darkness of the river tubes, is a man named Smith, who wrote the ballad of "The Sad Sandhog." This was read at the dinner recently given to the tunnel workers by Chief Engineer Charles Jacobs of the Hudson Tunnels Company. Here is the ballad:

Sand-Hog Digapit Subway-Lad
Was a naughty, comical Much-to-th'-Bad.
And the Gods he thanked
That he wasn't spanked
For the way he pranked and pesteredd the "Skwad."
He stole the togs
From the poor Sand-Hogs,
Who worked each day in the Big Subway.
He twigged the caps
Of the dusky chaps
As they grunted loud in their noon hour naps.
Till they grabbed their shovels and cried,
"By Gad,
It's Sand-Hog Digapit Subway-Lad."

Now it chanced one day our Boss, who's gray,
The great King "Jake" of the whole Subway,
A black art wiz,
With a Subway Phiz,
On traveling crane whizzed by that way,
And Subway-Lad, who couldn't resist,
Shied a soft-shell crab at the King—who hissed
As his eyes spat fire
With a Kingly ire,
"Hey there, thou art
A bit too smart
For a low-down hog of a burrowing lad,
So you'd better beware
How you giggle and stare,
Or I'll cut your crust
With a third-rail thrust,
And extract your hair
With compressed air,
Sand-Hog Digapit Subway-Lad.

But Sand-Hog Digapit Subway-Lad,
Who lacked respect for the kingly crown,
Batted his eye and bawled: "By Gad,
I think King Jake is coming down!"
And sure enough the crane unbent
And landed the King in soft cement,
With anger dire, he turned to slay,
But Sand-Hog Digapit leaped away
With a leering laugh and no fear of sprain
Climbed a leg of the traveling crane.
He caught his socks in the tackle blocks
And scraped his hocks on the crane's air locks,
But Sand-Hog Digapit wriggled his toes,
Bringing his thumb
In a gesture dumb,
Straight to the tip of his turned-up nose,
And this salute the whole world knows
Exciteth wrath and calls for blows.

The King reached out and threw the switch,
Which made all dark in the Subway ditch.
The day grew cold,
The thunder rolled,
And Digapit's knees
Began to freeze
To the chilly chains, and the tunnel damp
Locked his arms with an awful cramp.
"Aha!" says the King, "Now take him away,
Such rubbish is better dumped in the bay."
In spite of the shrieks
And bellows and squeaks
Of the tough little, rough little guy it bore,
The traveling crane
Rushed off amain,
And never was seen in Manhattan more.
And the tunnel Skwad
Was candidly glad
To be rid of the Digapit Subway-Lad.

What New Yorkers Lose Every Day

ENOUGH articles are lost in New York every day to stock a good-sized shop having a lively trade. The goods in a big department store do not compare in variety with this flotsam and jetsam of city life. Stray dogs and cats are joined by parrots and canaries left on street cars. The lost books form a good-sized library. There are more umbrellas than a retail dealer could dispose of. In the musical department are accordions, guitars, tambourines, flutes, music racks, and sheet music. Overcoats, belts, and bundles from laundries are as numerous as women's furs and gloves in Winter and straw hats in Summer. Watches, jewelry, and wallets swell the money value of the finds. Bottles of whisky and wine add a suggestion of conviviality.

An official who has charge of the lost property on the traction lines estimated last week that at least 500 articles are lost every day on the street-car lines and the railroad trains entering the metropolis. At least 100 are lost every day on the elevated trains and in the Subway. Three hundred are divided among the railroad terminals. The losses in the streets, shops, hotels, and places of public amusement are probably 500 more. The larger stores have departments where the articles may be recovered. The advertisements in the newspapers indicate the number of the other losses.

According to the men in charge of one of these "lost and found" departments men are as careless and absent minded as the women, if not more so. A girl who leaves her school books behind or a woman whose fur boa drops from her shoulders is more excusable, the officials say, than the emigrant who leaves his trunk on an elevated train or a workman who forgets his rubber boots, pick and shovel on a Subway car. There are dozens of shovels and pickaxes at the Interborough offices; an equal number of boas and muffs.

Every Summer a hundred or more straw hats are picked up on the elevated tracks. Most of them are blown from the windows of cars. Fifty lost umbrellas is an average for a rainy day. The books lost on the Interborough lines number about 100 a month. In Summer the baseball bats come in by dozens. In one set of pigeonholes marked "Odds and Ends" is an indescribable collection of articles—a rat trap, a set of false teeth, rosaries, necklaces, maps, manuscripts, architects' plans, toys, and a child's hammock. A parrot's cage with a parrot was picked up one day on an elevated train. The men in charge of the department called the parrot Oscar. It died after giving them three months of amusement. Now they have a canary, found in its cage on a Subway train about two months ago. The owner seems to have abandoned it.

What becomes of these lost articles? About one-half of them are returned to their owners. If the parcel contains a hint of the owner's identity, and is not called for, the traction companies notify the owner by postal card. Usually the person who has lost a piece of jewelry, a satchel, muff, or bundle of papers calls at the railroad station or the offices of the traction company and files a claim. If the article is not found at once the officials advise the owners to advertise in a newspaper. Some of the companies have signs to that effect hung in a conspicuous place, and near by a card showing the articles lost and found, as advertised every day in THE TIMES. The articles that are not claimed are sold by auction every six months. They are usually knocked down for a trifle.

A VISIT TO THE ACTORS FUND HOME

And Quaint and Picturesque Surroundings the Aged Mummers Enjoy a Life of Quiet Comfort in Strange Contrast to the Feverish Excitement of Their Professional Careers.

TO visit the Actors' Fund Home, you must first go to Staten Island; and that means a trip on the ferry. When you have safely crossed, you make your way to the funny little railroad. The railroad—or, rather, the train of two cars—makes its way around the north shore of the island, and you descend when it reaches the fourth stop on its course, the diminutive station of West Brighton. The Home is at West New Brighton, which means that you must either walk a mile or two or board an electric car which will do so many turns you cannot help thinking it comes of vaudeville stock. If you go on foot it will take you perhaps half an hour to reach your destination, and all the while, as you gaze around, you will be wondering how it happens that you are still within the municipality of New York. The chances are that you will walk, because the railroad and the electric cars, for reasons of their own, make a point of not connecting. Just as you leave the train the electric car deserts its post—and you must wait half an hour for the next one.

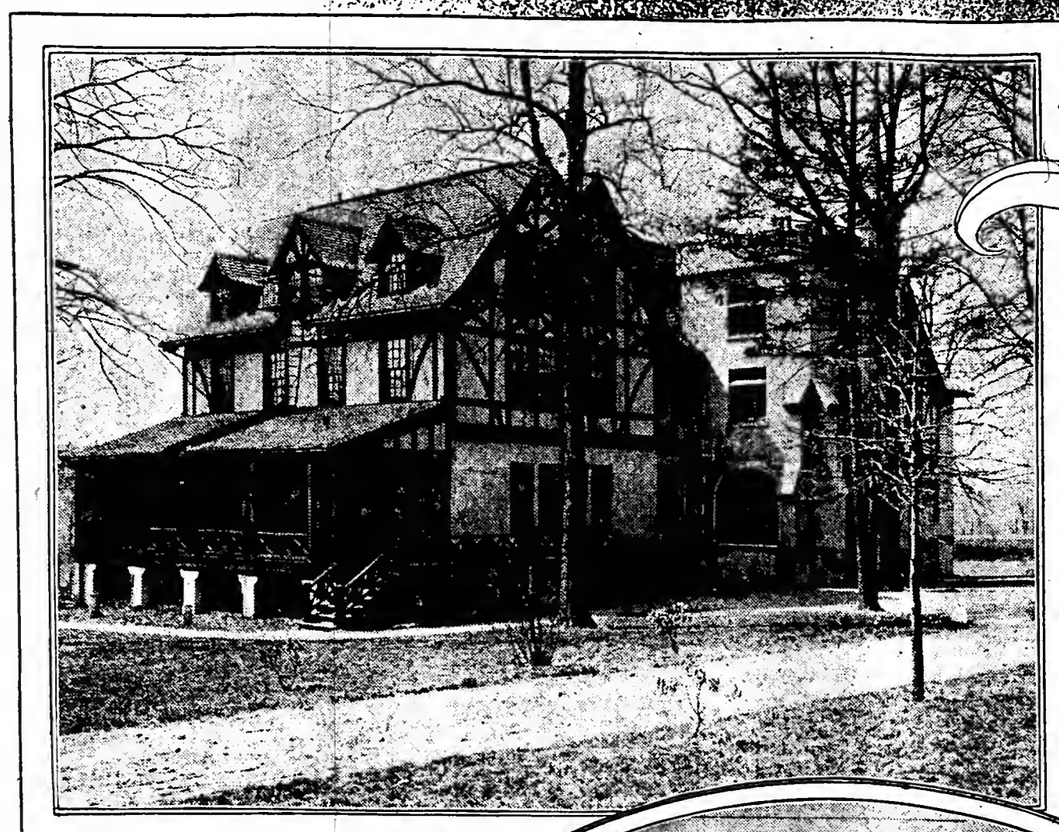
You follow the car track, first straight ahead, then to the right; then straight ahead again, and then to the right a second time; and then straight ahead once more. When the car track branches to the right for the third time you part company with it and go up a country road—still straight ahead—as if bent on crossing the island. You go up a hill—and the road is doing some little turns of its own. You walk for about five or ten minutes, and, on the crest of the rising ground, above the ordinary suburban buildings, you first catch sight of what appears to be a large Elizabethan house, more or less of the Shakespearean and dramatic description. An arched gateway gives the entrance an air of added importance. This is the gate through which the old actors pass to the haven within.

The outside of the building, as has just been suggested, is picturesque. The house is evidently large and commodious. The windows are tiny, and the cement exterior, so to speak, is paneled. The ancient players are obviously in an ancient and appropriate setting.

Behind the house and down in the valley is a lake, which might have been called a pond had it been in some other locality less dignified and sedate. The grounds are as large as a small farm and, in the Summer, they are very beautiful.

If you had been the particular man who recently went out there on his little investigating trip, you would have gone to the door and rung the bell. In a moment the door would have been opened and you would have been in the presence of a white-headed but vigorous and joyful person—Mr. Robert Stevens, Superintendent of the Home. He would have invited you inside and insisted that you take dinner with the family; for the family dines at 1 o'clock, and your appetite has been keenly whetted by finding yourself in a community so rural that the woman who keeps the little shop at the corner doesn't quite know which car will take you back to the ferry.

The dining room is large enough to accommodate all the retainers of the Baronet who owns the manor. To be more literal—and truthful—it easily accommodates all the thirty-four guests of the Home, and could be made to accommodate almost twice the number. The dinner is good—very good, and there is plenty of it—more than you want to eat, in spite of your appetite.



Actors Fund Home
West Brighton, S. I.

The first thing which strikes the visitor in these halls is that the "guests" appear to be guests indeed. They assemble like one large family. They sit where they please, and bear no trace of the institutional manner. They evidently dress as they please. The old ladies look as homelike as one's own grandmother in her own cottage, and the old gentlemen look like grandfathers, one and all. It is only when they speak, many of them in the sonorous and old-fashioned manner, that one would dream in what field of activity their years of labor had been spent. The Actors' Fund Home embraces all the fifty-seven varieties of performers. One old man has been with the circus; another has been a minstrel in earlier days, and a third has been a Shakespearean actor.

A stroll over the building will show the neat little rooms on the upper floors, all heated by hot water and each with its iron bed. But here again each room is fitted up exactly according to the taste of the occupant. Down below is the billiard room with its two tables, and a cardroom—and everything is as comfortable as in a club. There is a library with good books and a collection of current periodicals; and there is the large parlor with the silver loving cup on the centre table.

The most artistic room of all is the reception room, that into which one enters directly he passes the door. In the centre is a desk; at the sides are spacious seats. The walls of the house are literally covered with quaint paintings, prints, and statues of tragedians. Quaintest of all, down in the billiard room, is a large picture frame containing a wonderful paste and paper patchwork of the heads of 1,000 dead actors. Col. T. Allston Brown, who wrote the "History of the New York Stage," is responsible for this.

Library.

More interesting than the pictures or the building itself are the actors and actresses—all apparently enjoying life as much as may be during their declining years.

Mr. Stevens has a little den of his own. There he will sit and tell you of his charges. He will explain how sixty-four guests have been entertained within those walls since the house was first opened on May 8, 1902; how there are now thirty-four guests, and how there have been twelve deaths in the ranks. He will tell you how three have been removed to the home for incurables, and how old Tom Burgess, the circus man, was the last to go, less than a month since. He will tell you how old Tom, most industrious of the clan, always cultivated his little melon patch; how, with hatchet and saw, he built the little punt down in the lake, and how he built the boathouse with the same tools. "Old Tom was a great fisherman!" he says.

Robert Stevens,
Superintendent.

He will tell of "Daddy" Bowers, who is 84 but hale and hearty, and who is known to every man, woman, and child on the island. He will tell of old Mr. Gonzales, who paints in his little room upstairs and many of whose pictures are hung on many walls. And then he will introduce them to you, one and all. He will even admit that they have not outgrown the gossip habit in their old age.

Briefly, this is the Home as it strikes the observer—a genuine home for genuine guests. Those who have no money at all are allowed 50 cents a week for "stamps and tobacco." Now and then they may visit their friends for a few days—if friends they have in the land of the living. When they want clothes they have only to apply to the Superintendent or matron, as the case may be.

"When one of the men says he wants a suit of clothes," says Mr. Stevens, "I tell him to go to the store and buy one, merely fixing a limit to the price."

One rule only is inflexible. No one who has ever been regularly admitted as a guest of the home may leave it and again return to the shelter.

The expense of the Home is less than one-third the expenditure of money made in a year by the Fund. The two-thirds goes to what might be termed the "silent relief," and is given out largely in donations of from $5 to $7 per week. Every case is carefully investigated, for many will apply who are not really in desperate straits, or who have no legitimate claim to be considered as professionals. To receive assistance a man or woman must be destitute beyond question; but if the need is there, the other rules will be enforced with lenient construction. As the Secretary said at the office on Forty-second Street: "We are supposed to help them only when they are ill; but sometimes we think hunger is a pretty bad form of sickness."

At Dinner.

Many are the tragedies the wreckage of which drifts into the ken of the Actors' Fund. There is the mother-actress with small children, unable to find work. There is the old man, so proud that he is half-starving in his attic.

"I wish you would make two things clear to the reading public," said one of the gentlemen actively engaged in making preparations for the gigantic fair to benefit the Fund which is to be held at the Metropolitan Opera House for the entire week of May 6. "I wish that you would explain that the Actors' Fund is a National institution, and in no sense purely metropolitan, and I wish you would emphasize the fact that, though we do our best to succor those in the profession who are really sick or disabled, we positively do not foster idleness."

Perhaps no more succinct statement of the purpose and scope of the Actors' Fund could well be made. That the institution is National there can be no doubt. Besides the main office on Forty-second Street, New York City, and the Fund Home for Superanuated Players on Staten Island, the association now has regular representatives in Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Galveston, Richmond, Kansas City, Denver, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Syracuse, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Knoxville, Duluth, Providence, and Phoenix, Arizona. Wherever an actor or actress is found in genuine distress, if a player in good standing, he or she is never beyond reach of the charity of the fund.

The Actors' Fund of America was incorporated by the State of New York on June 8, 1882, with Lester Wallack as the first President. The forthcoming fair at the Metropolitan Opera House, the second such undertaking in the history of the association, may be regarded somewhat in the light of a silver anniversary, and presents are in order. The first great fair was held fifteen years ago at the Madison Square Garden, and netted about $167,000. Some of this money still remains in the treasury, but annual expenditures have regularly far exceeded annual receipts, and the capital has been depleted. The leading officers of the association at present are: President, Daniel Frohman; First Vice President, Joseph R. Grismer; Second Vice President, Antonio Pastor; Treasurer, Henry B. Harris, and Secretary, Frank McKee.

The number of persons at present receiving pecuniary assistance and medical aid is over seventy, which involves a weekly expenditure of over $500. Then there is the cost of burying the dead, caring for the Actors' Fund plot, and other expenses, making a total outlay of close to $50,000 annually. The expense of maintaining the Actors' Fund Home was $11,645.02.

Husband and Wife On the Stage

In This Country They Usually Go It Alone—It Pays Better.

ARMETE NOVELLI, the Italian actor, who is the latest of the imported stars to cast effulgence in this country at $2 per effulgence, brings his wife with him as his leading woman. H. B. Irving, who has sailed back to England after a campaign in this country that was successful so far as appreciation and fruity so far as currency was concerned, had his wife as his leading woman. Forbes Robertson, another English star, comes in this country, has his wife to play his leads.

And it is right here that there is a big difference between the actor from the other side of the boundary billow and the actor of our own land, comments a writer in the Chicago Tribune. Maxine Elliott, Virginia Harned, Mary Mannering, and a lot of other actresses have husbands with whom they could be acting. All of them at various times have acted with those husbands. At present, however, the husband heads one company while the wife heads another. In England, in most of the companies especially in those headed by actor-managers, the public sees the husband and wife in the same play for the one price of admission. With us there are two profit sheets.

Beerbohm Tree's wife is an actress. She often plays with him. Arthur Bouchier's wife is an actress. She plays leads in his company. So it was when Charles Kean dominated the English stage. With the Kembles it was the same. Mr. and Mrs. Kendal became known together. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft acted in the same company. The instances are innumerable.

With us see what a difference a few dollars make. While E. H. Sothern is starring with Julia Marlowe, his wife, Virginia Harned, is starring alone. While James K. Hackett is starring in "The Walls of Jericho" and has as his leading woman an importation from dear old Lunnon, his wife, Mary Manuering, is starring in Mrs. Young's latest play, "Glorious Betsy."

At one end of the country is Nat Goodwin playing in "The Genius." He is supported by Edna Goodrich. His wife, Maxine Elliott, under management other than that of Goodwin, stars in "Her Great Match."

Before Julia Marlowe and Robert Tabor, her husband, were divorced they played much in the same company. Richard Mansfield and his wife, Beatrice Cameron, used to play together, but Mrs. Mansfield has not been on the stage for several years. Arnold Daly's wife is an actress, but she has not played in his company for a long time.

The parting of the George M. Cohans will make it impossible to see this pair for the one price of admission.

Cohan's father and his mother furnish one of the best examples of lifelong attachment, and year in and year out atage companionship. They have acted in the same company for years and years.

Blanche Walsh, who has been Mrs. William Travers for several months, has her husband in her company. Guy Standing, whose wife was an actress, insisted that she retire from the stage. This she was nothing loath to do.

Dion Boucicault, whose record of more than 400 written and produced plays stands as the highwater mark in the stage of this country, used to act with his wife. She was cleverest in soubrette roles. H. V. Esmond, whose most popular success was "When We Were Twenty-one," is the husband of an actress. They act together most of the time. Frank Moulan and his wife, Maude Lillian Berri, accept no engagements except joint ones.

Robert Mantell follows the English fashion of having a leading woman, Marie Booth Russell, who in private life is Mrs. Mantell. Charles B. Hanford's leading woman is his wife. She is Marie Drofnah. She made her last name up out of her own head, simply by reversing the letters in her husband's name.

The husband-managers on this side of the pond are almost as numerous as the husband-co-stars on the other. Henrietta Crossman is managed by her husband, Maurice Campbell. Mrs. Fiske is managed by her husband, Harrison Grey Fiske. Lloyd Bingham helps Amelia Bingham perform her managerial duties. And there are many others.

When the public willingly pays $4 to see two persons act at different times it stands to reason that those persons, if they are gifted with business acumen, will prefer to act the two times and get the $4 rather than act once together and get only $2 per seat. Of course some of the actors would resent in high scorn any statement which would imply that they can hear a noise like a two-dollar bill when there is a question of art involved, but it's so, nevertheless.

Actors' Society Benefit

The third annual benefit of the Actors' Society of America will be held at the Hudson Theatre on Tuesday afternoon. Among the performers who will appear are Adele Ritchie, Margaret Anglin, Ethel Barrymore, Louise Gunning, Laura Burt, Mary Shaw, Nanette Comstock, Elsie Janis, Annie Yeamans, Mrs. Sol Smith, Mrs. W. G. Jones, Lotta Faust, Anna Boyd, Dorothy Russell, Maude Raymond, Catherine Countiss, Ruth Holt Boucicault, and Mary Ryan.

Ethel Barrymore in "Carrots" and Edward Abeles with Mary Ryan in the yacht scene from "Brewster's Millions," will be the only two offerings of all the programme seen before in the city. A one-act farce, "A Gentle Jury," will include a cast of twelve women and one man, Burr McIntosh, who returns to the stage for this one performance only. The proceeds will be devoted to the building fund.

The Author of "Infidele"

Roberto Bracco Started Life as a Custom House Clerk—His Career as a Dramatist.

IGNOR a successful playwright Roberto Bracco is young, being still under 40, but his career has been remarkable. He was born in Naples and has lived there all of his life. Endowed with a studious and ambitious character, at an early age he showed talent for writing, but his parents, who were in mediocre circumstances, could not afford to send him to finish his studies at the universities. At 17, therefore, he secured a position at the Custom House. But the future dramatist did not lose his courage. He was determined to carry out his ideals.

The following year he met Martino Caffiero, editor del Corriere del Mattino, in Naples, who took much interest in his work and offered him a position on his paper. Bracco started as a reporter, and in the meantime began to write poems in the Neapolitan dialect. At 19 he published his first volume of short stories in Italian, "Le Frottole di Baby," ("Baby's Prattles,") which received high praise.

Roberto Bracco

His devotion to his master, Martino Caffiero, was remarkable. The latter became blind, but his young pupil was his inseparable companion. Caffiero died in 1884, mourned by the whole artistic circle of Italy. After his death Bracco went to another paper. But journalism was not his aim. The drama was attracting him. He wrote four one-act plays, which showed ability. Then a drama in four acts called "A Woman," which is a psychological study. After this he wrote "Infidele," (Comtesse Coquette,) in which Mme. Nazimova is to appear. His next play was "The Triumph," which was regarded as a revelation in Italian drama. Since then a new school, called the Bracco school, has started in Italy, and has many followers. This play is said to be Bracco's favorite. He has written up to the present time twenty-one plays. In "The Hidden Spring," one of his last dramas, the keynote is this:

"The humblest woman may be indispensable to the proudest man."

In fact, the author seems particularly fond of themes showing woman's inspiration to man. Perhaps he may be called a realist, but more than anything else an idealist. He seems especially to understand woman and her inner thoughts.

His devotion and his great love for his mother amount to adoration, and he often speaks of her unwittingly in his works.

Bracco's "Phantasms," which was produced lately in Naples, brought the dramatist much success. This author is an indefatigable worker. He is now the editor of the Corriere di Napoli. He writes for magazines in Italy, Germany, France, and now for America. He devotes his nights to play writing. He is always working at something.

Milan is the Mecca of all the important Italian playwrights, and there is still a strong feeling in Northern Italy against the south, but Bracco wished to remain faithful to his native town, where he struggled and succeeded. Now all Italy has recognized his talent.

A Powerful Theme Handled by M. Brieux

The Misery of Irregular Unions Shown in His Play "Les Hanneton."

LE PAUVRE PIERRE was a pitiful man, with a heart ever ready to brim with geniality. As a teacher of botany we feel sure he was kindness itself to his boys; in other relationships of life we see him amiable and compassionate. But in an evil hour his father had warned him to avoid matrimony as the unhappiest of all states: "Either be a celibate or take a 'comrade'—in no case take a wife." And, after various excursions into the world of emotion, the good son, now 40 years of age, discovers a girl of the shop-assistant class, Charlotte by name, still in her teens, pretty, simple in her tastes, and intelligent. For four years they are friends, steadily drawing nearer to each other; at last he persuades her to be his "comrade"—and when we first meet them they are living in a fifth-story flat in Paris, the liaison is a year old, and the misery of the two is complete. He, wrapped up in his botany, has to bear with her continual lying, hourly tears, and daily "scenes." She, fond of him, but conscious of having no solid hold upon him, resents the isolation of her life, the fact that he never speaks to her of his mother or of the members of his family, and the way in which he is forever either going out to his classes or burying himself at home in his stupid album herbariums. She nags, he bears it placidly. She becomes violent, he declares he will leave her. To provoke his jealousy she allows herself a brief but disastrous flirtation with a veterinary surgeon, and when Pierre hears of this he accepts the story joyfully as giving him justification for putting an end to his thraldom. He taxes her with her crime; she denies it in one breath, admits it in the next, and concludes by telling him she will leave him. At the sight of the calmness with which he receives the threat she becomes a kind of devil, seizes the album of plants in which he has been engrossed, and threatens to tear it into fragments. He shrieks to her not to undo his work; his eyes dilate; she taunts him with looking like a madman, and, stark mad for the moment, she tears a handful of pages from the book. With murder in his heart he rushes at her; she struggles with him for a moment; then he flings her from him with a groan, and in a moment or two more she is gone.

Days pass. Pierre is alone. His life is one of calm once more. He is beginning to see the old friends Charlotte would never let him see, and he is meditating a delightful holiday by the seaside. Letters, now appealing now menacing, are coming from her, only to be returned unopened. Then he hears that she intends throwing herself into the Seine. Ha, he laughs, he has heard that story before! She won't do it! But she does do it, to be rescued by a waterman who brings her back to the flat, and in reluctant payment for the service he has rendered receives the banknote on which Pierre's seaside trip was to have been enjoyed. At the combined request of the veterinary surgeon, the gentleman in the flat below, (who also has a "comrade," a golden-haired lady of 40, of whom he stands in deadly fear,) and a certain lady friend of Charlotte, he forgives her, kisses her, and takes her back, and, with every prospect of the old life of vulgar quarrels and still vulgarer love recommencing, we leave them standing clasped in each other's arms.

Such is the story of M. Brieux's play, "Les Hannetons," (the Giddy Ones,) as described by the reviewer of The Pall Mall Gazette. The play has just been presented at the Imperial Theatre by the Incorporated Stage Society in an English version, the work of H. M. Clark.

This Week's Offerings

ERMETE NOVELLI IN REPERTOIRE,

offering five repetitions and two new plays for his final week at the Lyric Theatre.

ARNOLD DALY IN "THE BOYS OF COMPANY B," a comedy by Rida Johnson Young, at the Lyceum Theatre to-morrow evening.

ALLA NAZIMOVA IN "COMTESSE COQUETTE,"

a comedy by Roberto Bracco, Englished by Dirce St. Cyr and Grace Isabel Colbrun, at the Bijou Theatre to-morrow evening.

EDDIE FOY IN "THE ORCHID," musical comedy by James T. Tenner, with music by Ivan Caryll and Lionel Monckton, and lyrics by Adrian Ross and Percy Greenbank, at the Herald Square Theatre to-morrow evening.

THOUGH the Spring days are fairly upon us, and the welcome April shower may put in his appearance at any moment, yet there are to be three comparatively important theatrical first nights this week. Arnold Daly in a new comedy is to make his first appearance under the direction of Daniel Frohman tomorrow evening at the Lyceum Theatre, where financial drama has so long held sway; Alla Nazimova is to abandon Ibsen with the approach of the warmer season, and will be seen at the Bijou in a translation of an Italian comedy, and the Shuberts are to bring into the Herald Square Theatre one of their most pretentious musical offerings, Eddie Foy in "The Orchid." This is one of the pieces with Summer aspirations. Novelli will appear for a fourth and final week at the Lyric Theatre, adding yet two more rôles to the list of the sixteen parts he has impersonated during his visit here.

"The Lion and the Mouse" has finally said good-bye to the Lyceum Theatre, and Daniel Frohman announces as its successor for the Spring and Summer season Arnold Daly in a new military comedy, "The Boys of Company B," opening tomorrow night. This will be Mr. Daly's first appearance under the management of Mr. Frohman.

Rita Johnson Young, the author of the new comedy, is mainly known as the writer of "Brown of Harvard." In forsaking the Shaw comedies Mr. Daly has chosen a piece of quite another type. The story of the play is founded on the fortunes of several members of Company B—one of the swell companies in one of the swell regiments of the National Guard. Quite as a matter of course, the several love stories interwoven into the plot all end happily; but that of Tony Allen—alias Arnold Daly—comes perilously near being wrecked on the rocks of family financial difficulties. Tony is a breezy young chap whose main capital is the energy which finally wins for him at one and the same time the girl of his heart and a liberal settlement from an uncle whose great specialty has been "living within his income." The first act takes place in the gymnasium and parlor of a fashionable New York residence, the home of Tony's sweetheart; the second act is at Meadows-on-the-Hudson, where the company is in camp, and the third is at a country home close to the scene of the "military operations."

Much of the humor of the second act is said to be based on the plight of Tony's uncle, who haa joined the company for exercise. He gets so much of this exercise, through the careful supervision of his aspiring nephew, that he finally agrees to settle $50,000 on the youngster if only he can be released. An athletic interest is supplied through the gymnasium scene of the first act, when two boys are practicing under the direction of their trainer, and the drill of the awkward squad. The name of Tony's adored one is Eileen.

The supporting company includes Verner Clarges, Joseph Whiting, Alfred Kappeler, Morgan Coman, Howard Estabrook, Charles Arthur, Percival Moore, Jennie Eustace, Frances Ring, Gretchen Dale, and Florence Nash.

During the engagement in this new comedy Mr. Daly will appear in a series of special matinées, at which a number of one-act plays not heretofore presented in this country will be performed.

Ermete Novelli's répertoire at the Lyric Theatre for his final week will include five repetitions and two new plays. The productions will include "Othello" on Monday, "The Basket of Papa Martin" on Tuesday, "King Lear" on Wednesday, "Oedipus Rex" on Thursday, "Shylock" on Friday, "Papa Lebonnard" on Saturday afternoon, and "The Taming of the Shrew" on Saturday evening. The two news plays, it will be observed, are respectively comedy and the most classic tragedy: "The Basket of Papa Martin" and the "Oedipus Rex" of Sophocles.

"The Basket of Papa Martin" is the work of two Spanish playwrights—Cormon and Grange—who have drawn a type of the same lovable nature as Papa Lebonnard. "Oedipus Rex" will now be done here for the first time since Mounet-Sully presented it in his French version thirteen years ago. It was presented in the original Greek by Harvard University students twenty-six years ago. The invocation to the sun before Oedipus tears out his eyes, as delivered by Novelli, is said to be one of the features of the rendition of the classic tragedy of Fate.

Alla Nazimova is to abandon Ibsen, at least for the present, and will appear as a comedienne for the first time in America. "Comtesse Coquette" will be produced at the Bijou to-morrow evening.

This performance should serve not only to introduce the Russian actress in a new "line of parts" such as she has never played in this country, but also to present to American audiences a playwright noted on the other side of the Atlantic, Roberto Bracco, the Italian author of this piece, will now for the first time have one of his works, well known in Europe, performed in the United States in English. Under the name of "Infidele" this play has been offered in Italy, Vienna, Berlin, and Paris. The English version is the combined work of Dirce St. Cyr and Grace Isabel Colbrun, the former of whom controls the rights in America to all Signor Bracco's works.

"Comtesse Coquette" is a domestic satire. It shows how much havoc a beautiful, capricious and determined woman may work on the hearts of susceptible men. Two men and one woman are concerned in the action. One man is the husband of the "Comtesse" and the other is his friend. The husband will be played by John Blair, and the friend by Guy Standing.

Eddie Foy will appear in "The Orchid," at the Herald Square Theatre to-morrow night. This new musical piece, which has already been presented for a fortnight in Philadelphia, is from the pen of James T. Tenner, author of "The Chinese Honeymoon." The score was supplied by Ivan Caryll and Lionel Monckton, and the lyrics by Adrian Ross and Percy Greenbank.

Artl Choke, the character played by Mr. Foy, is an eccentric chnracter—head gardener of the Horticultural College. He has also a leaning for Shakespeare, whose sayings he is constantly quoting. The story of the piece is complicated and chuck full of lovers. It all hangs on the quest of a famous orchid with which the "angel" of the college, a wealthy American, seeks to gain the grand prize at the annual flower show. The Professor, who is sent in search of the orchid, finds himself with so much money that he really spends his time in Paris—where he meets the inevitable adventuress, who later follows him across the Channel. It happens that Arti, in answering a matrimonial advertisement, has chosen the same name that the Professor has used in the French capital—and thereby hangs a series of haps and mishaps. Arti, in some débris, discovers a rare orchid which he sells to the Professor. However, the Professor loses the orchid and Arti gets it again, and manages to win with it the prize of two thousand pounds.

The company supporting Eddie Foy includes Trixie Friganza, Amelia Stone, Laura Guerite, Irene Franklin, George C. Boniface, Jr., Alfred Hickman, Joseph Herbert, Melville Ellis, William Block, and a large singing and dancing chorus.

"Salome" and "The Hermitage," the joint production of sensuous drama and farce comedy now at the Irving Place, will have its last performance to-morrow evening. As has been the custom in former years, Herr Conried will devote several evenings during the weeks nearing the end of the German season to bestow testimonials upon the most popular members of the company. The first of these will take place on Tuesday evening, April 9, in honor of Friedrich Holthaus, when a new four-act comedy, "Honest People," will have its first representation on any stage. The author of the play, Adolph Schaffmeyer, has for many years been connected with the editorial staff of the New York Staats-Zeitung. This play, his initial effort at dramatic composition, will be repeated on the remaining evenings of the week and at the Saturday matinée.

Plays That Hold

Dramatic offerings that remain unchanged are Edward Abeles in "Brewster's Millions" at the Hudson; Katherine Grey in "The Reckoning" at the Berkeley Lyceum; Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady" at the Hackett; Eleanor Robson in "Salomy Jane," with Wednesday matinees of "Merely Mary Ann," at the Liberty; Frances Starr in "The Rose of the Rancho" at the Belasco; William Collier in "Caught in the Rain" at the Garrick; "The Man of the Hour" at the Savoy; special matinees of "Widowers' Houses" at the Herald Square; Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin in "The Great Divide" at the Princess; Carlotta Nilsson in "The Three of Us" at the Madison Square; and "Ben Hur" at the Academy.

This is the second week of "The Ambitious Mrs. Alcott" at the Astor; Ethel Barrymore in "His Excellency, the Governor" at the Empire; and Amelia Bingham in "The Lilac Room" at Weber's. This is the second and final week of Kyrle Bellew in "A Marriage of Reason" at Wallack's.

At Other Theatres

"Men and Women," the noted De Mille and Belasco play, will be the offering this week by the William Morris Stock Company at the Lincoln Square Theatre.

Clyde Fitch's play, "Her Great Match," is to be presented by the stock company at Keith & Proctor's Fifth Avenue.

"Lord and Lady Algy" is to be the offering at the Harlem Opera House, under the direction of Keith & Proctor.

The Rogers Brothers in Ireland are coming to the Grand Opera House.

The production at the Fourteenth Street Theatre will be "Secret Service Sam."

"In New York Town," with an interpolated dance of Salome and the Seven Veils is to be the attraction at the American.

"The Silver King" is to be found at the Third Avenue.

Theodore Kremer's latest, "The Outlaw's Christmas," is the offering at the Thalia.

Jessie Bonstelle in "Sunday" comes to the Yorkville.

"Arizona" is to be seen at the West End.

"Busy Izzy" comes to the Metropolis.

"The Boy Behind the Gun" gives his address as the New Star.

Vaudeville

Houdini, the famous Hand-Cuff King, is to be the special star this week at Keith & Proctor's 125th Street Theatre; and Wilfred Clark, assisted by Miss Cerew, will present a farce, "What Will Happen Next." Others to appear are Jules Garrison; Berner's Mannikins; the Empire Comedy Four; and the Knight Bros. and Sawtelle.

William Gillette's melodrama, "The Red Owl," will be presented this week at Keith & Proctor's Union Square; and Wilson, McCoy, the caricaturist, is also on the bill. Among others will be Bert Leslie and company; Bessie Valdera's Cyclists; Elmer Tenley; and the Basque Quartette.

Alice Lloyd, the English comedienne who has made such a hit recently in the Williams theatres, will be the star this week at Keith & Proctor's Twenty-third Street; the McNaughtons will also appear; and a novelty, entitled "A Few Moments With the Poets," will picture in living tableaux readings from James Whitcomb Riley, Grace Hazard; A. C. Duncen; and the Waterbury Bros. and Tenny will be on the programme.

Will Cressy and Blanche Dayne will this week present Mr. Cressy's new sketch, "The Wyoming Whoop," at Keith & Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street. Among other features are The Military Octette; Okabe's Japs; Greene & Werner; and Henry and Alice Taylor, the sharp-shooters.

Among the special attractions at Keith & Proctor's Jersey City Theatre are Maggie Cline; May Duryea & Co.; the Willis Family; the Four Nelson Comiques; and the Americus Comedy Four.

R. A. Roberts, the English protean actor, will head the bill this week at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre of Varieties, appearing in "Dick Turpin"; and Fred Karno's London company will present "A Night in a London Club." Among the other attractions will be Charles F. Seaman; Staley's English Transformation Co.; Leona Thurber; and the Orpheus Comedy Four.

At the Colonial Theatre Julius Steger, assisted by his own company, will present his sketch, "The Fifth Commandment"; Eva Tanguay will make her first appearance at this theatre; and Wilfred Clark will be seen in "What Will Happen Next?" Among others will be Carter Dellavan and Isabelle D'Armand; Berzac's Circus; and Mayme Remington.

At the Alhambra Theatre William J. Kelly will make his initial vaudeville appearance in "A French Spy"; the Stunning Grenadiers will be seen for the first time in Harlem; and Jack Lorimer will play a return engagement. Sidney Deane, Jack Norworth, and the Three Herzog-Camara Sisters will also be on the programme.

"Wine, Women and Song," with Bonita and Alexander Carr, will continue indefinitely at the Circle.

The "Boston Belles" are coming to the Murray Hill.

The "Champegne Girls" are due at the Dewey.

The "Innocent Maids" will be the new arrivals at the Gotham.

Kitomino and his six Japs, Mme. Bowen and her trained tigers, and several other specialties are to be found at Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum. Vaudeville prevails in the theatre.

The Cinematograph at the Eden Musee is showing pictures of life on a British Naval Training Ship, and Uncle Sam's sailors, who visit the place, have many pertinent comparisons to make. Other attractions are the World in Wax and the Hungarian Orchestra.

Hippodrome

Next Friday night will be the red letter night of the entire season at the Hippodrome, for it will be the second anniversary of the opening of the big playhouse to the public. Bronze souvenirs will be given to every one in the audience both afternoon and evening.

Messrs. Shubert and Anderson have arranged that, after the public performance, the Hippodrome will be turned over to the six hundred members of the company for a little jollification of their own. The Hippodrome Chorus girls and their friends will sit in front and witness a performance about an hour long, especially designed for their entertainment. About midnight the tank will be prepared for swimming races between the mermeids of "Neptune's Daughter"; supper will be served at one o'clock; and then the stage will be cleared for a grand ball. The general public is to be excluded from the festivities, but invitations have been issued to the members of many of the theatrical companies now playing in the city.

Hippodrome Concert

The People's Choral Union, Frank Damrosch conductor, will be heard at the Hippodrome tonight, when Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," will be sung by a chorus of 850 voices. The soloists will be Mrs. Genevieve Clark Wilson, soprano; Mrs. Anna Taylor Jones, contralto; Frank Ormsby, tenor; and William Harper, bass. There will be an orchestra of sixty pieces.

Musical Attractions

Musical attractions that hold their own on Broadway are, Montgomery and Stone in "The Red Mill" at the Knickerbocker; Louis Mann in "The White Hen" at the Casino; Frank Moulan in "The Grand Mogul" at the New Amsterdam; Frank Daniels in "The Tattooed Man" at the Criterion; and Anna Held in "The Parisian Model" at the Broadway.

This is the second week of "The Land of Nod" at the New York; "The Social Whirl" at the Majestic; and Richard Carle in "The Spring Chicken" at Daly's.

Sunday Concerts

Sunday concerts with good programmes are offered to-day at the various Keith & Proctor houses, the Colonial, the Alhambra, and Hammerstein's Victoria. All the burlesque theatres offer Sunday bills, as do also the West End, the Metropolis, the Thalia, the Yorkville, the Grand Opera House, the New Star and the Third Avenue. Mr. Rice has prepered another "New Idea" concert at the Bijou.

Ted Marks concerts this afternoon and evening at the American Theatre will include numbers by Louise Beaudet, Noreh Kelly, De Voe & Hamner, and Kennedy & Wilkins. His last entertainments of the season will be offered at the Jubilee on Sunday, April 28.

At the Circus

The fourth week of the Barnum & Bailey Circus at the Madison Square Garden opens tomorrow afternoon. The show presents all the typical features of the genuine old-fashioned circus, together with many new acts, such es the horse ecte and the acrobatic and gymnastic offerings. The ski-jumping of Carl Howelsen is still the most-talked-of sensation of the performance. It is a great place for little boys—and older boys who have had tha good sense to retain their youth.

A Handbook of the Theatre.

An announcament is at hand from the publishers of "The Green Room Book and Anglo-American Dramatic Register" for 1907. Biographies which appeared in the first edition have been carefully edited and corrected from authentic sources. The book contains nearly 300 biographies of leading American actors, actresses, dramatists, critics, &c., specially compiled by John Parker, the London manager of The New York Dramatic News. The appendices comprise a synopsis of London playbills of the year, compiled by H. G. Hibbert; new productions in New York, Paris, and Berlin; articles on dramatic critics and criticism, by J. T. Grien and the editor; obituary for 1906, and a list of theatrical clubs, charities, and other kindred institutions.

Notes of the Rialto

Last week was April fool week in the theatres as well as on the calendars. It is safe to sey that every man and woman on the Rialto has noticed this fact. It is also safe to wager that, if theatrical men ere es superstitious es ever, the business offices will take warning and there will be few openings on April 1 a year from now. It seems to be a bad period for the show—and a worse one for the first nighter.

One of the advance men of one of these April fool productions is rich in pictures. He was sure of success. His star will scarcely run out of photographs for the next decade. This star has been taken in automobiles, on horseback—in ebout every known attitude end on about every contrivance thet could be crushed into a studio. He has been teken with long-time exposures end short-time exposures, flashlights and snapshots. Such a collection of photographs is eminently valueble. Mr. Advance Man is lamenting the expenditure.

Burton Holmes's lecture on "Ireland, the Beautiful" is to be delivered at the Lyceum Theatre this evening and to-morrow afternoon. Mr. Holmes will contrast the castles of the rich and the huts of the poor. He will conduct his hearere from the lakes in the south to the barren shores of Achill Island on the north. Killarney is to serve as contrast for descriptions of the modern cities.

Richard Harding Davis writes from Cape Town that he has collected enough South African color for his new book and will leave for London, where he is to meet Henry W. Savage. Mr. Savage, in the meantime, has been accumulating some rich brown color on the Mediterranean, and he expects to compare notes with the author to their mutual advantage.

Percy Williams has found a "Mad Musician" whose name is Vasco and who will make his American debut at the Colonial Theatre tomorrow. His managers claim that he is the most versatile of all stage instrumentalists, but it has not yet been announced exactly what species of "brain storm" he cultivates.

Silver compotes will be distributed to-morrow night at the Hackett Theatre to celebrate the 2,000th appearance of Rose Stahl as Patricia O'Brien in "The Chorus Lady." This record includes Miss Stahl's appearances in vaudeville in the one-act play of the same name and in the four-act comedy now drawing the public to the Eighth Avenue end of Forty-second Street.

A large assemblage of theatrical men will attend the special performance of "Ben-Hur" and added choral service at the Academy of Music on next Wednesday afternoon. The occasion will be the eightieth anniversary of the birth of Gen. Lew Wallace. The management has invited a long list of the most prominent writers in this section of the country to be present end many of them have forwarded acceptances. Among the guests will be many of the Hoosier writers and a large delegation from the Indiana Society of New York, including many personal friends of Gen. Wallace.

After the presentetion of the drama the following choral service will be rendered by the choir: "Unfold, Ye Portals Everlasting," Gounod; "The Glory of God in Nature," Beethoven, and "Thine Is the Kingdom," Gaul.

Grace George will appear at Wallack's theatre in "Divorcons" on April 15. William A. Brady promises an elaborate production of the familiar French comedy. Considerable interest is teken in Miss George's appearance in the role of the sprightly "Cyprienne," for such famous actresses as Bernhardt and Rejane have been seen as the heroine of Sardou's comedy. Mrs. Fiske also included this play in her repertoire. During the engagement at Wallack's, two special matinees of Ibsen's "The Lady from the Sea" will be given.

A "Smoking Concert and Vaudeville" will be held to-night at Weber's Theatre as a benefit tendered to Mack Hilliard, treesurer of the house. Vesta Victoria was one of the first to volunteer her services. Among the others who will eppear are Dorothy Russell, Ben Shields, the Empire City Quartet, Orville Herold, Maurice Levi with his band, and the Murray Sisters. Several members of the Weber company will make a trip from Boston to be present.

Several months ago, while under another management than that of Daniel Frohman, who is now directing his affairs, Arnold Daly received from a woman playwright the manuscript of a one-act play which so impressed him that he sent it with a note to his managers, asking them to arrange for its control. This the managers did, sending the authoress a check for $50 on account.

When differences arose between Mr. Daly and his managers they wrote to the woman asking her to return the check. Back ceme the messenger, bearing a cylindrical box, carefully tied with ribbon. An examination of the contents disclosed the battered remains of what had evidently been a triumph of the milliner's art, and, with it a note which read: "Here's all that's left of your $50."

Brooklyn Amusements

"The Road to Yesterday," which ended last night its long run at the Herald Square Theatre, Manhattan, will be at the Shubert Park this week. The characters are made to relive in two acts their seeming lives of three hundred years ago. The company is headed by Minnie Dupree.

Grace George, in "Clothes," a play which had a long run in Manhattan, comes to the New Montauk. Miss George is supported by a company including Frank Worthing, Robert Haines, A. H. Stuart, Selene Johnson, and Ruth Benson.

At the Broadway the attraction will be "The Vanderbilt Cup," with Miss Elsie Janis in the leading role. Miss Janis will give several imitations of Broadway stars.

William A. Brady's perennial "Way Down East" will be the attraction at the Majestic. For the first time in several years Mabel Strickland will be seen as Kate Brewster, and Frank Bell as the Town Constable, the parts they played in the original production.

Melodrama will have a week off at Blaney's, where "Eight Bells" is billed to appear. The production is still headed by John Byrne.

Ned Wayburn's "Side Show" will be seen in Brooklyn for the first time at Hyde & Behman's. Others on the bill are The Five Nosses in the "Venetian Serenade," Stuart Barnes, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes, Inman & Company, That Quartette, and Salvassis, Savan & O'Brien.

Henry E. Dixey, late star of "The Man on the Box," will appear at the Orpheum this week in the one-act sketch, "David Garrick." The bill will also include Rice and Prevost, Gardner and Vincent, Julian Rose, Smith and Campbell, and Master Gabriel.

Fiske O'Hara, the Irish singing comedian, will be at the Folly in a comedy drama, "Mr. Blarney from Ireland." He will sing several songs of his own composition.

"Custer's Last Ride," a new melodrama by Hal Reid, will have its first Brooklyn production this week at the Grand Opera House.

The Greater New York Stars will hold the boards at the Star. Genaro and Bailey are a feature of the performance.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be at the Columbia.

This week's attraction at Payton's Lee Avenue will be "Deliver Me from My Friends," a comedy of domestic life by Frederick Knowles, dramatic critic of The Brooklyn Times.

The Vienna Male Choral Society

THE Vienna Male Choral Society (Wiener Männergesangverein) is to give two concerts in New York on May 7 and 9. The organization comes on a pleasure trip to America and the proceeds of the all the concerts will be given to charity. The chorus of this organization numbers 380 voices and there is an extensive associate membership: 180 of the singing members will make the American tour and the whole party will number close to 400, including about 20 women. They will come on a chartered steamer via Genoa, Gibraltar, and Madeira, and their American hosts will be the German Liederkranz of New York.

After a flying trip to Washington, they will sing twice at Carnegie Hall, and after visiting Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Buffalo, and making a special train trip to Milwaukee and straight back again, they will sail for home as they came.

The members of the choir are of the highest social and business standing in Vienna; among them are government officials, well-known artists, university professors, financiers, lawyers, and merchants. The President of the society is the largest hat manufacturer in Europe.

The Vienna Male Choir was organized in 1843. Its artistic importance is evidenced by the fact that Schumann, Meyerbeer, Mendelssohn, Liszt, Wagner, Bruckner, Johann Strauss and other composers have dedicated works to it. Like Brahms, all these were honorary members of the society. Johann Strauss originally wrote such waltz classics as the "Blue Danube," "Wine, Woman and Song," etc., for the voices of this organization. It was later that they were transcribed for instrumental purposes.

The choir has had a long line of conductors. Its founder and first lesder was Dr. August Schmidt, critic and editor. A. M. Storch was a noted writer of works for male choirs. Johann Ritter von Herbeck acquired such a reputation as leader of this choir that he was appointed director of the Imperial Opera at Vienna and leader of the Court orchestra. Since 1869 Eduard Kremser, a distinguished musician and composer, has been director of the choir. "On the occasion of the 70th anniversary of is connection with the choir he was appointed honorary choirmaster, and for the last five years he has had the assistance of Prof. Richard Heuberger of the Vienna Conservatoire, well known as a writer on music as well as a composer. These two alternate in directing the choir at public concerts.

The programmes of the two New York concerts will include: Strauss waltzes, the lighter works of Schubert, as well as his famous rendering of the Twenty-third Psalm; works of Schumann and Brahms and the best of the folk-songs, as well as the more spectacular music for male voices from "Parsifal" and "Tannhäuser," and the "Totenvolk" (The Slain Host) of Hegar. Schubert's beautiful setting, eight-part chorus with string accompaniment, of Goethe's "Gesang der Geisterüber den Wassern" is one of the choir's battle-horses.

This annual tour is an old custom with the society, whose members are able to make these trips as they please. As early as 1874 the choir made a memorable trip to Venice. In 1891 Constantinople and Athens were visited and a special concert was given before the Sultan of Turkey. Paris was visited at the time of the Universal Exposition of 1900, and in 1905 the choir went to Egypt. Under the shadow of the pyramids the choir sang for the Empress Eugénie, who had last heard them at a concert in Salzburg in 1867 in honor of the Emperor Napoleon III. One of the earliest occasions when the society entertained royalty was in 1854, when but a fraction of its present size, it sang for the Duchess of Kent, mother of Queen Victoria, upon the invitation of Prince Metternich. Last year the choir's pilgrimage was to England, where this royal pâtron's grandson, Edward VII., was the host at an tentertainment at Buckingham Palace.

The society celebrated its fiftieth anniversary in Vienna in 1893 with a series of brilliant festivities. The first concert in New York will be the choir's 793d public performance. The journey to America is the choir's sixty-second, and by far its longest trip. Chartering the Hamburg-American steamship Oceana at Genoa, the party reaches New York on May 5. The German Liederkranz has prepared an elaborate programme for the entertainment of the visitors, and other German and Austrian societies will join in the festivities. A reception to the visitors in the hall of the German Liederkranz will take place on the day of arrival. On May 6 a special trip will be made to Washington, where President Roosevelt will receive the singers at the White House at 2:30 P. M. On Tuesday, May 7, the visitors will call on the Mayor of New York and take in the sights of the city. The first of the two public concerts takes place Tuesday evening, with the assistance of one of the big New York orchestras, at Carnegie Hall. After the concert the guests will be entertained by the Austrian Society of New York at the Hotel Astor.

Wednesday, May 8, will be devoted to sight-seeing and a trip to Coney Island. The second public concert occurs Thursday evening, and is given without orchestra. Here the best opportunities for displaying the qualities of the choir in unaccompanied male singing are shown. The receipts of both concerts go to local charities. On Friday morning the visitors leave for Philadelphia, appearing there on Friday evening, and in Baltimore on Saturday night. A special train then carries the party to Buffalo, where a concert is to be given on Monday evening, May 13. It had been intended to return to New York from Niagara Falls, but the pleadings of the Germans of Milwaukee resulted in the acceptance of an invitation to make that city a flying visit. Five hours only will be spent there, and the special train will bring the four hundred back to Albany, where a boat will be taken for the ride down the Hudson. The visitors will be transferred to their own steamer in the North Riveh and will sail on Friday, May 17, for Hamburg.

The reception committee is headed by the officers of the German Liederkranz, of which Mr. Hubert Cllils is president; Messrs. Chas. Pfitzenmeyer and G. Rudolphy, viec presidents; R. F. Lange and Otto von Schrenk, sceretaries, and Constantin Lucius, treasurer. Chnirmen of various committees include: Reception, Richard H. Adams; finance, H. B. Scharmann; entertainment, Paul Goepel; press, Dr. Joseph H. Senner; music, Dr. E. Baruch; hotel, Louis C. Raegener; souvenirs, F. A. Ringler; decoration, John P. Voelker.

MANHATTAN OPERA HOUSE.

Oscar Hammerstein announces the following programme for the nineteenth week of his season nt the Manhattan Opera House, which is the last but one of the current season. There will be performances every evening. Mme. Calvé will appear twice, singing in "La Navarraise" for the first time at the Manhattan and repeating "Cavalleria."

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

The difficulties that Catholic choir masters have had in carrying out the Pope's directions as to the restoration (or in most cases the first introduction) of the Gregorian plain song in Catholic churches have been very great. To help choir masters in this country where the means of mastering what is to most a difficult and strange form of musical art, G. Schirmer has published a little volume entitled "Gregorian Chant for the Teacher, the Choir and the School." It is by Edmund G. Hurley, organist and choirmaster of the Church of St. Paul the Apostle in New York. It is a strictly practical book intended to explain the Gregorian notation and to facilitate the study of the chants by choirs quite ignorant of both, and also to give elementary instruction in vocalization. The Gregorian system has many difficulties and complications, but Mr. Hurley's book explains them with all the brevity and clearness that can be expected. It must necessarily be something of a compromise, for on his last pages the author discloses some of the contradictions and differences that exist between the "learned authorities" on the subject, not only of details but also some of the principles of the Gregorian chant.

The Oliver Ditson Company publishes a little volume on "The Training of Boys' Voices," by Claude Ellsworth Johnson. As its name implies, it is devoted to vocalization, to aid the cultivation of vocal quality and vocal skill in children, not to the matter of reading or sight singing. The advice and directions as to vocal training are careful and on the whole admirable, directed toward preserving voices from the ruin that too often results from indiscriminate and undirected singing, resulting in shouting and forcing. The author advocates more attention to purely vocal training in schools where sight singing is taught. "Less than five minutes of individual attention suffices to revolutionize each boy's singing." It should begin in the youngest classes. There are chapters on training boy choirs and on the selection of music for boys' voices.

A recent addition to the Oliver Ditson Company's handsome and very comprehensive series "The Musicians' Library" is a volume of Mozart's piano compositions. There are twenty pieces in the collection—four of the sonatas, the rest being variations, fantasias, fugues, and lesser works. The editor is Carl Reinecke, who has been for many years distinguished as a player of Mozart's music as well as a pedagogue. He writes a preface, which contains first a biography, then "A Word Concerning Execution," in which he insists on the necessity of making Mozart's music constantly beautiful; and he adds: "The works of such a fiery spirit as Mozart must not be played merely with a certain dignity and moderation, but in the proper place there must be fire and brilliancy, while again in other places care must be taken to impart the tenderest and warmest depth of feeling."

A SUBSCRIBER COMPLAINS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The present management of the Metropolitan Opera House, under Mr. Conried's direction, has given much occasion for discontent among older subscribers. It would be useless to comment on this if, as an enterprise, it were to be judged solely from the point of view of the ordinary money-making business claiming no higher artistic purpose. In that case Mr. Conried might be justified in answering: "Take what is offered or stay away. I exploit my opportunities as I understand my personal advantage."

With this, the subscribers, who look for a high grade of musical works and corresponding performances, do not concern themselves. What they claim as their right is the fulfillment during the season of the agreements and promises which are held out when he accepts their money before it begins.

Under the former management of Mr. Grau, while it was not an ideal one, at least an effort could be recognized to present a suitable selection of musical works, with occasional novelties of assured interest, presented by a sufficient staff of performers of a high grade. Since Mr. Conried has obtained control, there has been a decline from season to season of this standard. The subscribers are treated on their subscription nights to a limited répertoire showing little variety, and no discrimination is used for a suitable selection of works. Novelties on regular subscription nights consist of insignificant musical plays suitable for a faubourg stage, but utterly unsuited to the dimensions of the Opera House. No doubt there is economy in this, but is it fair treatment of the regular subscriber? Any larger works are reserved for special evenings as extra performances at extra prices, and the dragnet of the operatic manager tries to catch his fish by generously giving subscribers a first privilege of an extra subscription to their seats taken for their season's performances. This may be shrewd business, but it seems a very questionable piece of sharp practice.

Now, how do the very respectable gentlemen of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company stand toward all this? Must they countenance whatever their lessee does, and can they wash their hands of all misuse of the privileges which they accord to him? When lately the question of propriety as to the presentation of Richard Strauss's work "Salome" arose there appeared to be with them a right of exercise of power. Why is this so sadly neglected by them when the interest of those most entitled to regard, the whole body of regular subscribers, is ignored throughout the whole season?

A FEW NOTES ON ITALIAN OPERA HOUSES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The grand opera house of Reggio-Emilia is considered one of the finest opera houses in Italy. Baedeker specially mentioning it. To fully enjoy the following humorous facts, let me state that the public consider the opera season the greatest event of the year. Every family, even to the peasants, from miles around, save up to become abonnés. The opera night is a great affair. They begin to arrive an hour before the performance. On entering the theatre, covered like a wedding cake with fancy decorations—glorious gold trimmings—what is the surprise to find the boxes, which number 145, filled with people of all classes, enjoying dinner or supper. It is a saying at Reggio that if the wine that is served is good, the artists stand a chance of being applauded; if bad, hissed. After this sight it becomes easy to understand this startling notice, printed and hung up:

"The police forbid peop'e hissing, bringing and using tin horns or other instruments, (like pans, &c.,) to interrupt the performance, or from throwing things," (from the tables at the singers.)

The opera "Siberia" was given this carnival season seventeen times in succession. The singers being bad every night the entire house hissed everything. Such a noise I have never heard in my life. These people are true critics, however, and the slightest mistake never goes unnoticed. At one of the final rehearsals of an opera in one of the smaller cities I was astounded to see the chorus in the mob scene which ends the first act walk coolly down to the footlights with never a gesture or a hurried step, line up beautifully, and with placid smiles sing out "Vengeance! Vengeance! Let us tear the tyrants from their thrones!" &c. The author flew in a rage and ran on the stage demanding an explanation. In fury the man screamed at him, "This ain't no Government opera. These people are only chorus people, paid to sing, not to act. If you want acting, pay for it." And this is a truth. Outside of Government opera houses the chorus lines up in every opera as at a concert. The composer paid them all five cents apiece for wine and enjoyed a real mob scene. The following night "William Tell" was given and the same conditions prevailed. The surprising part is that the artists were all more or less famous and also the orchestra.

I had the pleasure some years ago of seeing Tamagno, the great tenor, in Othello. He murdered the lady beautifully, so well, indeed, that the public insisted upon his putting her to bed and remurdering her. This he did some three times to the great enjoyment of the people.

Two years ago in Milan I went to a performance at the Lirico. A ballet was given, also the first act of "Pagliacci." The people applauded everything without a warning of their purpose, until the first act was over and the overture of the ballet began. Such a demonstration I never heard—it was impossible to stop the noise. Do you think they were going to have the work given in that way? Not a bit of it. The entire opera, or the ballet should not go on. In vain the orchestra played on; not a note could be heard. The manager pleaded, to no purpose, that the performance would not end until 3 in the morning if they insisted on the second half of the opera. After some twenty minutes the second part was given while the house cooled down quite satisfied.

Scriabine's Symphony.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I should much appreciate it if you would allow me to express an opinion in regard to Mr. Alexander Scriabine's symphony, "The Divine Poem," performed at the last Russian symphony concert.

Some of our professional critics seem to me to have quite missed seeing its most important quality—that it says something new. The new is always difficult to see from the standpoint of the usual, especially when it is mixed with the usual, as it almost always is.

One hears a great many musical novelties in New York nowadays; but of how many of these novelties can one say that they contain any new thought. For the most part they tell us the same old story under a thousand different technical disguises.

In many passages of "The Divine Poem" an original creative force can be felt. Not to perceive this at once does not surprise me, however, as it seems almost impossible to form a just estimate of such a work as "The Divine Poem" from one hearing only.

In many passages, notably in the slow movement and in the final episode of the symphony, there are true touches of the sublime. Through all the magnificent orchestral color, the grand and noble phrases for the brass instruments, and those upward leaps of the trumpets one feels the presence of a truly spiritually aspiring soul.

Now and again it is as if one could hear the strokes of a valiant besieger of the Unknown, the great unknown ideal country where lies all beauty sleeping, awaiting the awakening kiss of the genius Prince. I truly think that Scriabino has some of this princely quality in his mind, and, best of all, he is a young man and a growing personality. Each of his works shows a marked advance on its predecessor. What may we not expect from him in the future? HENRY F. GILBERT.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

The People's Choral Union will present Haendel's "The Messiah" at the Hippodrome this evening under the direction of Frank Damrosch. The chorus of 850 voices will be assisted by Genevieve Clark Wilson, soprano; Anna Taylor Jones, contralto; Frank Ormsby, tenor; William Harper, bass, and an orchestra of sixty pieces.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist, will give his farewell recital for the season at Mendelssohn Hall on Saturday afternoon. The programme includes Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A flat minor, Schubert's Sonata in A minor, Chopin's Fantasie in F minor, Nocturne in C minor, and Valse in F minor; four of Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, Glazounow's Gavotte in D major, Arensky's Bigarrure in F major, and Gabrilowitsch's "Theme Varie," Opus 4.

Cleofonte Campanini will conduct the concert at the Manhattan Opera House to-night. The orchestra under his direction will play the Overture to "Mignon," the Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and Saint-Saen's "Suite Algerienne." The soloists will be Madanies Russ, and Zeppilli, and Messrs. Sammarco, Bassi, Altchevsky and Sevelhac.

At Daly's Theatre to-night Victor Herbert and his orchestra will give the second of the special Spring series of Sunday night concerts. The soloist is Louise Le Baron, contralto. The programme includes 'Luigini's "Egyptian Suite," Lladow's "Music Box," and several of Mr. Herbert's own compositions.

IN THE ORGAN LOFTS.

Charles Fonteyn Manney's cantata, "The Resurrection," was given last Sunday evening in the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. C. B. Hawlye is the organist and musical director.

Sir John Stainer's cantata, "The Daughter of Jairus," will be given at the Church of the Incarnation this afternoon at 4. W. R. Hedden is organist and choirmaster.

A. J. Holden, organist of the West End Presbyterian Church, will play at the First Baptist Church, Mount Vernon, after May 1.

M. S. Holmes, bass, has been engaged to sing at the Scotch Presbyterian Church after May 1.

William J. Oliver, tenor, has been engaged to sing at the New Rochelle Methodist Episcopal Church.

CROTCHETS.

Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given at the Metropolitan Temple, Seventh Avenue and Fourteenth Street, on March 30. The soloists were Messrs. R. M. Richter, R. H. Bagnell, T. N. Wilkens, and H. C. Flewellin. John C. Beaumont played the organ.

Next Tuesday afternoon in the East Room of the Waldorf-Astoria Miss Edith Rogers, soprano, will give a song recital. Mrs. P. N. Simons will play the accompaniments.

A concert was given last Thursday evening in the Waldorf-Astoria for the benefit of an Italian charity under the direction of the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary.

Margaret Crawford, a contralto, who has sung with Henry Savage's English Grand Opera Company, has sailed for Hamburg, and will fulfill engagements in Berlin and Frankfort.

A musicale will be given by the pupils of Mrs. E. Luty-Crawford at Brady's Hall on April 9.

The National Association of Teachers of Singing will hold a meeting this afternoon at 3:30 at 111 East Fifty-eighth Street, when Mme. Aurelie Jaezer, professor of the Vienna Conservatory and head of the Metropolitan Opera School, will deliver a lecture entitled "My Experiences in Vocal Pedagogy." Hermann Klein will preside at the meeting.

Julia O'Connor, contralto soloist of St. Leo's, gave a musicale in the Astor Gallery of the Waldorf-Astoria last Thursday evening, assisted by Emilio Agramonte, accompanist; Florence Telton Jones, pianiste, and Richard Arnold, violinist.

Frank Croxton, bass, will sing in the Hotel Majestic on April 14.

Cecil James, tenor, will sing with the Woodman Choral Society in Brooklyn on April 15 and in Lexington, Ky., on April 18.

Fred Martin, bass, will sing at Cooper Union to-day.

Genevieve Clark Wilson will sing with the Three Arts Club on April 11, in Brooklyn on April 12, in the Hotel Majestic on April 16, and with the Troy Vocal Society on April 17.

The Mozart Conservatory of Music, one of the oldest institutions for juvenile instruction in the city, will give its annual concert at Terrace Garden on April 19. Three hundred pupils of the college will appear.

The International Grand Opera Company, for American singers and composers, opened early last month at Udine, Northern Italy, with a performance of Legrand Howland's opera, "Sarrona." Mr. Howland is also the impresario of the company in partnership with Thomas Wilhelm. The company goes to Roumania, to Greece, and then back to Italy. The second American opera to be produced will probably be a work by the New York composer, Mildenberg.

Henrietta Michelson, the American pianist, will be the soloist at the concert given by the Volpe Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 14. She will play the Beethoven G major concerto.

The Manuscript Society of New York gave a concert recently at the National Arts Club. The programme included Frank L. Sealy's Quartet for strings played by Messrs. Saslavsky, Martoune, Schnitzler, and Sorlin; five songs for soprano by Mabel W. Daniels, sung by Edith Chapman-Goold, with the composer at the piano; Gustav L. Becker's Second Romance for violin, played by Lotta Davidson, with the composer at the piano; two songs for contralto by S. N. Penfield, sung by Constance King, with the composer at the piano; and a pastorale for oboe and string quartet and a minuet for string quartet by Ernest Carter, played by the string quartet mentioned above and Signor Raku, oboeist.

Katherine Goodson, the English pianist, has signed a contract for thirty appearances in this country in the months of November and December.

The Russian Symphony Society announces its usual series of six concerts for next year. The dates will be November 14, December 12, January 16 and 30, February 13, and March 6. Modest Altschnler will go abroad next month to make arrangements for the season.

The Church Choral Society, Richard Henry Warren conductor, will give Saint-Saens's Psalm XIII. and Elgar's "Light of Life" on April 24 and 25. The soloists will be Genevieve Clark Wilson, Pearl Benedict, Dr. F. Lawson, and Frank Croxton.

On April 26 the Mount Vernon Choral Society, Alfred Hallam conductor, will sing Verdi's "Requiem." The soloists will be E. Virginia Root, Genevieve Wheat, Dr. Lawson and Frank Croxton.

Frank Croxton, bass, will sing with the Orange Choral Union on May 1 in Elgar's "King Olaf." On May 14 and 15 he appears at the New Hampshire Music Festival in Nashua in Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

Dr. F. Lawson sings in "The Messiah" at Norfolk, Va., to-day.

Harold Bauer will return to America for another tour of piano recitals late in December.

The New York German Conservatory of Music gave a chamber music recital recently at College Hall, 128 East Fifty-eighth Street. Those who appeared were Dr. S. N. Penfield, H. von Dameck, Edward Bromberg, Julius Lorenz, and William Ebann.

A musicale was given at the home of Mrs. John H. Flagler, 15 Park Avenue, recently in honor of Mme. Frida Ashforth Gebele. Mrs. Flagler and Miss Bessie Abott of the Metropolitan Opera House furnished the programme.

The students of Mme. Josefa Middecke give a recital in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor Thursday evening.

Francis Rogers, baritone, will give a song recital in Harvard Hall to-night.

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Mrs Muck, will sail for Germany, on Tuesday, May 14. He will return to Boston the middle of September.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ends its twenty-sixth season with the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on May 3 and 4.

Paderewski will make an American tour next season.

A special performance of Verdi's "Aida" will be given at the Manhattan Opera House next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Garibaldi Memorial Fund, under the auspices of the Italian Consulate and the Italian Colony of New York.

John J. Lindley, tenor, will give a song recital Tuesday afternoon, April 16, in the Hotel Astor. The artists who will assist are Idelle Patterson, soprano; Charles Kunen, violinist; Gertude Lefkowitz and Russell Patterson, accompanists.

The last concert of the season of the Olive Mead Quartet in Mendelssohn Hall has been postponed from April 11 to Thursday evening, April 18.

The pupils of Ferdinand Carri will give a violin recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday evening, April 17. Israel Cohen will play Wieniawski's Second Polonaise.

HAVING A "GO" AT AESCHYLUS.

Mr. A. B. Walkley's Opinions of a Performance of "The Persians."

MR. A. B. WALKLEY does not wax enthusiastic over the production at Terry's of "The Persians," by Aschylus, for which the Literary Theatre Society was responsible. To the contemporaries of Aeschylus, he says in The Times, the play must have been a tremendously exciting affair—not only as an audacious novelty in its substitution of current history for myth as a dramatic theme, but also as a lofty appeal to patriotic pride. Whenever Shakespeare celebrated an English victory on the stage he pitched his scene in the English camp. Aeschylus, being one of those old masters who, as Mr. Borthropp Trumbull suspected, were so called because they knew a thing or two more than the young ones, was careful to take the opposite course. Not Athenian rejoicing but Persian grief was his ostensible theme, a properly tragic one. The prowess of the Greeks was celebrated, as it were, impartially through the mouths of their defeated foes. A stirring panegyric of Athenian liberty was made, as it were, to pop out incidentally through the innocent inquiry of a Persian Queen.

These things, to the Greek audience, must have been wine, indeed. But for us they are much more like orange peel and water. We are not Greeks of the best period, or anything like it.

The battle of Salamis was fought a long time ago, and we were not there. We expect plays, even tragedies, to "step lively," as the American policemen say, to be full of bustle and variety, whereas "The Persians" is one prolonged wail.

A chorus of elders is awaiting news of Xerxes and his host. Their leader, having forebodings, starts an anticipatory wail. Atossa, the Queen Mother, has had a nightmare, and is minded to wail. A messenger rushes in and tells the whole dreadful story of Salamis—a wonderfully vivid narrative, which for the time being nearly turns your orange peel and water into wine. Then, of course, the wailing becomes general. The ghost of Darius is evoked and apprised of the situation. He bids them, in effect, to go on wailing, and they do. Enter Xerxes with wails of acute distress. Exeunt omnes wailing. You feel as thought you had been at a peculiarly gloomy funeral—"no flowers, by request."

SHOULD ACTRESSES MARRY?

Members of London Playgoers' Club Decide in the Affirmative.

SHOULD actresses marry? This interesting question was discussed by members of the Playgoers' Club.

Dr. Rappoport opened the discussion with an address, in which he gave an emphatic affirmative to the question.

"An artist without human attachments is unable to render certain human emotions," he said. "An actress who is not married cannot succeed in her art like a woman who has faced the responsibilities of married life.

"I have noticed that actresses act better after marriage than before, having acquired thereby a certain seriousness, a grandeur, and a certain grip which make their emotions much stronger.

"That great actress, Adelaide de Ristori, used to nurse her baby between the acts.

"Actresses with ordinary talents should marry, and marriage enhances their acting, but if there is an actress on the stage who is a real genius she should remain single.

"For sociological reasons I disapprove of consanguineous marriages, and consanguinity in this conection may be mental as well as physical. People who live in Park Lane develop a Park Lane mind. On that analogy people of the same occupation should not marry—hence actresses should not marry actors.

"Let them marry dramatic critics or other literary men. I could name one or two London actresses who owe their success to their husbands. It is opposites who attract one another."

The Chairman (Mr. K. Havcre) said he was disappointed that Dr. Rappoport did not say whether actresses should marry actor-managers.

Mr. L. Cowen said that as married lady doctors and lady journalists could attend to their duties as wives and husbands, so could married actresses. Dr. Rappoport seemed to think that opposites should marry, but he (Mr. Cowen) thought like mated with like.

Just a great big, brilliant, magnificent, harmonious, topsy-turvy jumble of kaleidoscopic splendor, of clever comedians, of delightful vocalists, of graceful dancers, of charming show girls, of vivacious choristers, of stunning costumes, of superb color effects, of picturesque scenery, of dainty melodies, of sparkling witticisms, of everything, in brief, which can possibly be brought together in one performance to amuse, delight and perfectly entertain. It is snap and action and "go" from start to finish. Everybody says "IT IS THE IDEAL, TYPICAL 'BROADWAY SHOW.'"

IN THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Art Collectors and Their Use to the World

Pursuing a Hobby That Sweetens Life and Educates the Mind the Collector of Art Builds a Monument to Himself and Helps Others.

FOR the first time since the gift of the Dutuit collections of paintings and drawings by modern and old masters, bronzes, and other objects of art to the City of Paris have we exact knowledge of the lives of the two brothers Dutuit. A writer in a French monthly, having the correspondence before him between the elder brother in Rouen and the younger in Rome, acquaints us with the singular and one might almost say romantic career of these two men as collectors.

They were sons of a rich merchant of Rouen who made a fortune in Southern France and returned with two sons and a daughter to his native Normandy.

The elder son continued to amass money and became a leader in mercantile circles, an energetic and useful member of the municipality. He did much to preserve the monuments and churches which make Rouen one of the most attractive cities of Europe to those who admire that romantic architecture of France which we very absurdly continue to call by the sneering term of Gothic. But all the while he was a collector.

The younger son began to acquire fine books and pictures while in his teens, and as he could afford the luxury of abstaining from direct money making he determined to be a painter. So he went to Paris and hired himself out to Thomas Couture, the painter, as a man-of-all-work about the studio, that seeming to be what he was fitted for, so uncouth were his manners and so peasantlike his dress. But while he served faithfully for hire, he drew and painted. To the surprise of Couture, however, he also frequented the sales at the Hôtel Drouot and bought. As he seemed a poor man the master was in great fear of the consequences; but nothing happened. What the younger Dutuit was doing was adding to the collections in his father's house in Rouen, constantly in collaboration with the elder brother. It was not till years afterward that Couture, happening to be in Rouen, determined to look up his former studio cleaner and pupil, who had left him just as queer and ill-dressed as he was in the beginning, and found him the son of a millionaire surrounded by marvels of art.

The younger Dutuit had no talent for painting, but, hard-headed Norman that he was, would not give up and acknowledge himself beaten. He went to Rome, lived like a hermit, continued to paint—and continued to aid his elder brother to augment the collections at Rouen.

Collecting had become his passion also. Rome was by no means the only place where the Dutuits had their eye on public and private sales. London, or Paris, or Berlin, or Florence might be visited by a confidential agent just prior to a sale in which things were to figure which the Dutuits desired. Their active correspondence shows that they discussed coming sales, who might be there, the chances that Mr. So-and-So the collector, or Thingumbob the art dealer, would be present, and force prices up. Sometimes the younger would not close a bargain because exchange was high, and a delay, properly managed, might give time to wait for better terms, and thus save a few thousand francs. They were not afraid to pay generous sums for good pieces; but no stone was left unturned to secure an economy by every means known to thrifty merchants.

A very different collector was the late Stanford White, whose treasures began to be dispersed last Thursday. For his friends as well as for himself he bought in a princely way, without caring much for great names. While the Dutuits were supremely concerned in authenticity of name and strove to have nothing that could be questioned, the American looked at old art from the viewpoint of a decorator and valued the object according to what it would do as an ornament for a church or city palace, a great country seat, or a costly cottage. The Dutuits had a museum in mind, while Stanford White was always thinking how a picture or chimney piece would look in a given interior.

The Normans thought of it as a beautiful, or if not beautiful then a rare thing to be placed eventually in that morgue of art, a museum, where things may be lovely but are dead. The American architect pondered how to make the old object live again by adjusting it to surroundings which gave it a reason for existence, which made it alive.

Both kinds of collectors are of use to the world. Each was working in his own way, each followed his own training and temperament. There are many collectors, however, who have no aim at all and seem to buy from the sheer pleasure of buying things. They are not likely to go very far, because there is no goal before them, no ideal toward which to work. There can be no doubt that the younger Dutuit, especially, found collecting the chief pleasure in life, and from an early stage in his career intended to give his treasures to Rouen, though eventually, through the generosity of his surviving sister, it was Paris, not Rouen, that secured them.

LENORA GONZAYA, DUCHESS OF URBINO, BY PALMA (EDWARD BRANDUS COLLECTION)

DAME NOBLE, BY RAVESTEYN (EDWARD BRANDUS COLLECTION)

His purchases had a definite point in view; that must have increased twenty-fold the pleasures of the chase. Not merely the discovery of some forgotten canvas in private hands, triumphantly recognized and secured, but the pitting of his sagacity and nerve against rivals in public sales. Not merely the avoidance of questionable or suspected objects offered to a skeptical public, but the pleasure of gloating over those less astute who fell victims to the ignorance or the imposture of sellers. The Dutuits were cautious as Normans are always supposed by the frivolous Parisians to be; but even they could not avoid mistakes; and it is really comical to read their letters when one of them seeks to convince the other that a horrible error has been made.

An American who has collected with an objective before him is Mr. Charles L. Freer, who is arranging to give his collection of American art works to Washington. Mr. William T. Evans has lately divulged a somewhat similar plan. Very likely the fifty paintings by Americans destined for the coming National Art Gallery in Washington is only part of what he will devote to this object. Another New Yorker who has been collecting in a special line for a definite end is Mr. Archer M. Huntington, President of the Hispanic Society, who has built a museum on Manhattan Island and installed therein the rare and valuable things relating to Spain and the Spanish colonies which he has been gathering for many years.

Collectors ought to try to avoid the mistake of too wide and scattering a pursuit of art objects and accustom themselves to labor toward a certain point where their collections will do good to the public, if not during their lives then after they are no more. The hobby that is worth while is a great sweetener of life, particularly in the case of men oppressed by large responsibilities. But along with this pleasure goes the recognition that others will enjoy and profit by the collections.

Gossip of the Studios

ABOUT forty drawings and paintings by the late Walter Appleton Clarke were sold during the recent exhibition held at the galleries of M. Knoedler & Co. The sale of the pictures brought about $5,000.

Paul Cornoyer has been very busy all Winter painting snow scenes, most of which have been sold to New York and out-of-town collectors. His view in Madison Square, "The Rainy Day," which was exhibited at the Corcoran Art Gallery in Washington and later at the Powell Gallery in New York, was recently purchased by Dr. Higgins of this city. "Street Scene, Upper Broadway," and the other, "Late Afternoon, Morey, France," have been purchased by Mr. Grant Fitch, a well-known Western banker.

Just now Mr. Cornoyer is at work on several new scenes of Madison and Washington Squares. One recently completed snow scene of Washington Square is a commission from a prominent New York society woman. A painting of a group of old houses at Chelsea, England, will be on view at the Carnegie Institute exhibition, which opens soon in Pittsburg. On April 15th an exhibition of fifteen of Mr. Cornoyer's landscapes and street scenes will begin at Bridgeport, Conn., under the auspices of the Bridgeport Art Club. It will be the first exhibition of paintings by a New York artist that has ever been held in that town.

"Afterglow, Washington Square, New York," is now with the Kansas and Nebraska Circuit Exhibition. Several of the Kansas City papers are very appreciative of the painting, and say that the Art Institute there is arranging to purchase the picture. Another of his paintings will be on view at the loan exhibition to be held from April 9 to 24 at the University Settlement House, 184 Eldridge Street, New York.

An interesting article concerning Mr. Cornoyer's work, and several reproductions of his paintings is to be found in the April number of The Broadway Magazine.

William Ordway Partridge has just finished a model for a statue of Alexander Hamilton, which is a commission from the Columbia University Alumni. It is to be placed in front of Hamilton Hall, which has been designed by McKim, Mead & White, architects. A cast of the statue was taken to the university grounds recently and placed in the position it is to occupy later—a plan that is frequently followed by sculptors in France. President Butler, Dean Van Amringe, and the architects were present. The bronze will be placed in May.

Mr. Partridge has made a death mask of the late Mr. Ernest Crosby, from which a portrait bust will doubtless be modeled. A new statue of Capt. Nathan Hale has also just been completed by Mr. Partridge. It is a commission from one of the large cities of the Middle West.

Hugo Ballin, whose painting, "The Three Ages," won the second Hallgarten prize at the Academy, has lately taken up water-color work as a diversion from oil painting. In his studio in the Holbein he has a brilliant water color, which is painted in his usual decorative style. A youth in a purple and gold costume of the fifteenth century is seated beneath a group of trees. A maiden, whose nude figure is partially draped in a wonderful cloth of gold-red color, is on the ground near him. A tiny brook wanders slowly in uncertain direction, in and out, amid the moss-covered stones close to the dreamers. Through the group of heavily foliaged trees, which partly shield the figures, is a distant view of the Alps. The strong blues, reds, yellows, purples, and greens in the painting are treated in such a broad way that it is quite impossible to realize the painting is a water color. The picture will be sent to the Water Color Society Exhibition, which opens at the Fine Arts Building May 1.

Mr. Ballin has just begun a new religious painting, "St. Francis Giving Alms to the Poor." The scene is the Adriatic coast; in the background is a big, wide, decorative arch, through which is a glimpse of the sea. Near the right of the arch stands St. Francis giving alms to a mother who is holding a sick child. To the left of the picture is a crippled youth, eagerly waiting his turn to approach St. Francis, and just behind him kneels an old man receiving wine and food from a young girl. Mr. Ballin believes that all pictures should express some beautiful sentiment. He often destroys a great many canvases before he is satisfied with his portrayal of the thought he wishes to express. He is at work on a sketch for a large mural decoration for a music hall in New York City.

E. Hassmann, whose illustrations of civil war stories have been appearing in the Sunday Magazine, is busy with a number of drawings which are to illustrate other war stories. A late drawing of his illustrated Bliss Carmen's poem, "The Young King's Madness." Mr. Hassmann is a young Austrian artist, who has been in America three years. In Vienna he is known as a mural painter as well as an illustrator. Some of his mural work decorates the City Hall of Vienna as well as several private houses and hotels. He received the third prize from the Municipal Art Society of New York for a sketch which he submitted at the contest for the Morris High School decoration. The sketch illustrated "The First Peace Treaty with the Indians in Westchester County." It was shown recently at the National Arts Club during the exhibition of the Municipal Art Society.

The annual Free Loan Exhibition of pictures at the University Settlement House, 184 Eldridge Street, will be held April 9 to 24. This exhibition is arranged by the Woman's Auxiliary of the University Settlement, and the Art Workers' Club for Women, for the purpose of giving the members of the Settlement and others of the neighborhood the educational advantages of seeing good pictures. Public schools and other settlements are always notified concerning the exhibitions, and as many as 20,000 people have attended the previous views. During the exhibition informal talks on art subjects will be given by different artists.

The committee in charge of the exhibition consists of Miss Helene C. Pupke, Mrs. Jules Turcas, Mrs. F. Louis Mora, Mrs. Nelson S. Spencer, Mrs. Edward L. Williamson, Mrs. J. H. Clements, Miss Heustis, and Miss Alethea Platt of the Art Workers' Club, and Miss E. Mabel Clarke, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Edward R. Hewitt, and Miss F. H. Matthews of the Woman's Auxiliary of the University Settlement. The Honorary Committee includes Frank V. Du Mond, Jules Turcas, Ben Foster, F. Lewis Mora, and G. H. Clements.

Miss Louise Lyons Heustis has been very busy this season with a number of portrait commissions. She is just now finishing a portrait of Miss Hewitt, the daughter of Mr. Robert Hewitt of Ardsley-on-Hudson, and one of Mr. Henry F Dimmick. This is the second portrait of Mr. Dimmick that she has painted; it is being executed for his daughter, Mrs. Cary Hutchinson.

When in Chicago last Summer, Miss Heustis painted several well-known Lake Forest people. Among the number were portraits of Miss Farwell, the daughter of Mr. Granger Farwell; Mr. James Vilas, Miss Phoebe Norcross, and Master Graham Aldis, the son of Mr. Arthur Aldis. The first week in May an exhibition of paintings by Miss Heustis will be held in Chicago at Thurber's Art Gallery.

Hans Temple, the Austrian portrait painter, who has been spending his first Winter in New York, has painted several portraits since his exhibition at Knoedler's, in November. The list includes Mr. Frank Damrosch, Mr. William Mohr, the President of the German Club, the two children of Mr. Phillip Berolsheimer, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Von Bergen, and Miss Joseph E. Fleischmann, the daughter of Mrs. Louis Fleischmann. Mr. Temple sails for Europe April 23, as he has commissions awaiting him in Vienna. He expects to return to America in the Fall.

Local Art Notes

JOSEF BAIL is a French painter, who has not been carried off his feet by the advocates of impressionism in its various forms, but seeks his inspiration where many others have found it, viz., in the works of the old Dutch masters. "A Lesson in Lace Making, Brittany," which is published today in the Pictorial Supplement through the courtesy of M. Knoedler & Co., makes one think of Pieter de Hoogh because of the lighting and background; but there is a gracefulness in the composition and a beauty in the faces which are nearer Wattsau.

Carlton T. Chapman, who is always a contributor to the annual American Water Color Society, of which he is Secretary, is now engaged on a marine in lighter medium for the forthcoming exhibition. He is planning to make a trip to Europe later in the season.

The Salmagundi Club will give a dinner this month in honor of a number of men who have promoted interest in American art. Among the guests will be John W. Beatty of Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, and John E. D. Trask of Philadelphia.

Pictures by Bolton Colt Brown and landscapes by Jonas Lie are now on view in the New Gallery. The annual exhibition of Hudson River paintings by Van Dearing Perrine was opened last Tuesday.

George M. Reeves, who has a studio in West Twenty-second Street, has recently completed a half-length portrait of Henry H. Hall, ex-President of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters. He has just completed a portrait of William Warburton Schugham, Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

An American who has made a distinct mark as an illustrator is Jules Guérin, whose collection of colored drawings, fastidious in workmanship and full of atmospheric charm, is still to be seen at the Pratt Institute, in Brooklyn. Some are in oils, others in water colors and pastel. Here are originals of some of the plates issued by the Century Company in a portfolio of Guérin's pictures of chateaux in Touraine. Jules Guérin was born in St. Louis and studied under Benjamin Constant and J. P. Laurens in Paris. Besides his water colors—he is a member of the Water Color Society—he executes mural paintings. New York, St. Louis, Newport, and other cities have been drawn and painted by him. He has taken many medals.

The highest record in price for a single figure of Sir Thomas Lawrence was made at Christie's the other day when the portrait of a Miss West was sold for $21,000. Miss West married a Mr. William Woodgate. She wears a white gown with blue sash and a pink scarf around her neck; also she holds a watch in her right hand—perhaps a gift from her Sweet William. The dealers who run these auctions and drive off any courageous outsider who dares to bid before making arrangements with them were astonished to find someone capping their bids. At £3,900 the Colnaghi firm, last in the field, gave up, and the Unknown secured the picture for 4,000 guineas. It is understood that the family was bidding. The person who is supposed to have won it is Mr. James Woodgate Arbuthnot. The highest price for a Lawrence hitherto, at open sale, was $12,000, paid by Mr. Charles Davis, in 1904, for his portrait of Miss Juliana Copley.

A large mural decoration representing the ruins of a Greek theatre at Taormina, by Edward Gay, was shown at the Public Library, Mount Vernon, N. Y., recently. The canvas will decorate the interior of the dome of the Carnegie Public Library at Mount Vernon. It was painted by Mr. Gay during his sojourn in Italy and Greece last Spring. This old Greek theatre, it is said, was excavated during the Roman period. The solid rock and ruins of the amphitheatre overlooking the sea still remain, and these the artist has used as a subject for his picture. The Grecian columns and the wall of Roman brick that overlooked the sea constitute the principal features in the foreground of the painting, while in the distance snow-capped Mount Aetna may be seen.

Roger Fry, Curator at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, who went abroad some time ago, has been detained in London by the illness of his wife. It is also reported that Mr. Fry is remaining in London to await the arrival of a prominent official of the Metropolitan, who has recently sailed for Europe.

"Lonely Sea," a marine, by D. J. Gue of this city, a picture which has already been mentioned in THE TIMES, has been purchased by a collector of Washington, D. C. The marine was recently exhibited in the Corcoran Gallery at the capital.

A large marine, "The North Atlantic," from the brush of Charles H. Woodbury of Boston, has been purchased by the Worcester Art Museum. Mr. Woodbury plans to sail for Europe soon, but will return in June to open a Summer school at Ogunquit, Me. His picture, "Midocean," painted from the deck of an ocean liner, now hangs in the gallery of the Berkshire Athenaeum.

Lispeth C. Hunter has opened in Worcester, Mass., an exhibition of fifty water colors. This is the fifth season that Miss Hunter has given individual exhibitions at Worcester. A small group of eight of her water colors was exhibited at the last Pennsylvania Academy. Three of her paintings are now being exhibited in Minnesota. One is a Cornish street scene; another a harbor view, and a third a painting of a convent court in France. Of late Miss Hunter has become much interested in out-of-door life, and intends to devote most of her time in the future to this line of painting.

William Keith, the California landscape painter, is exhibiting twenty-four canvases at the Macbeth Galleries. The entire collection has been purchased by William Macbeth. This is the first exhibition that he has held in New York City for fourteen years, although Mr. Macbeth has occasionally shown a single canvas or two. His paintings are in such demand in the West that Easterners seldom have the opportunity to purchase them, unless as tourists. Mr. Keith was one of the San Francisco artists whose studios were destroyed during the great disaster. All of the paintings then in his studio were lost. He is of Scottish birth. He came to New York in 1850 and worked for Harper & Brothers for eleven years as a wood engraver. In 1861 he went to California, where he continued his engraving. He then traveled from Mexico to Alaska, and it was his paintings of the Sierras that first brought him recognition.

Miss Rouland of Cleveland, Ohio, has for fifteen years made a specialty of unusual styles in aprons of all kinds. She lately exhibited a large assortment of them at the Rip Van Winkle Tea Rooms.

They were shown by Miss K. M. Robeson of Philadelphia, who also exhibited a number of doilies, centrepieces, and tray cloths in Fayal work made by the native women of the Azore Islands. It was one of the largest collections of Fayal work ever shown in New York. There is very little of it in this country, and it is each year becoming more difficult to secure, as the younger generation of islanders are not interested in this sort of needle work.

Private Libraries in New York That Have Cost Large Fortunes

Several Which Represent Expenditures of from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000—Rare Manuscripts and Inserted Pictures the Largest Items on Which Money Is Spent.

AMERICAN millionaires have gradually been recognized as patrons of the fine arts. Much has been written of their collections of paintings, sculpture, and antiques; many of their possessions have found their way into public galleries. On the other hand, the man of great wealth as a collector of books is an unknown quantity. A bookseller remarked a few days ago that some of the private libraries in New York were worth at least $1,000,000. The remark understated rather than exaggerated the truth. Leaving the collection of J. Pierpont Morgan out of the list, there are at least six private libraries in New York worth from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. The money lies not in the books themselves, but in collections of rare manuscripts and the autographs and pictures inserted in fine editions. The prices for these quickly eat up a fortune.

Some of the owners of these fine libraries have a genuine love of books. This is, however, only one of the motives that lead them to gather hundreds of manuscripts, autographs, and volumes with fine bindings. The pleasure of possession counts for much. There is an element of profit in it, for a collector, if he knows how, can make his library as good an investment as money spent for diamonds, railroad bonds, or Turkish rugs. Most of the collectors, however, enjoy the pleasures of acquisition for its adventures. The stories of some of their manuscripts are worthy of a place among the tales of treasure trove. It is these adventures in book-land that cause the value of a great library to mount up so high.

Many wealthy men in New York own libraries with sets of standard works, volumes in foreign languages, and elaborately illustrated art books. The money that can be spent for such works is limited. The fine library of the late Peter Gilsey, for instance, sold for about $55,000. Another such library owned by H. Walter Webb was recently bought by a dealer for $30,000. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney has a fad for collecting presentation copies containing the autographs of authors. She has thousands of them. They cost her not more than $30,000. Even collections of ancient books, like that of Bishop Hurst of Washington, sold for not more than $60,000. Another noted collection was that of Thomas J. McKee. It included many letters, autographs, and first editions, and brought $160,000. For a man to spend $1,000,000 for books argues that the collection must be exceptional.

When a book collector goes in for manuscripts and autographs, the money he can spend is unlimited. Whatever may be the changes of fashion in authors—changes as well defined as those in women's clothes—the supply of original manuscripts and autographs is limited. So many have been added to public and private libraries recently that the prices have soared steadily upward.

The collection of J. Pierpont Morgan is far in advance of any others in this country, and possibly in the private libraries of the world. His purchases of rare manuscripts have been chronicled from time to time, and most of them are familiar. What they are worth is largely a matter of guesswork. People who know Mr. Morgan said last week that even their owner could not tell how much he had spent for the volumes in his residence on Madison Avenue and the art gallery adjoining. One of these acquaintances, who is familiar with Mr. Morgan's purchases, said the library was worth at least $3,000,000.

One of the finest libraries in New York is that of Henry M. Flagler of the Standard Oil Company. Its value is estimated at more than $1,000,000. It is not only very large, but comprises a miscellaneous collection showing every phase of English literature—black letter manuscripts, some of them beautifully illuminated, of the works of Chaucer and the early English authors; Caxtons, mediaeval Bibles, missals, original editions of the English dramatists, and first editions of the Georgian, Victorian, and early American authors, many of them with extra illustrations, and rare Shakespeareana.

In this respect the library is comparable with that of William A. White of Brooklyn. His collection of books and manuscripts would bring $1,000,000 at any time in the open market. Mr. White's collection is especially noteworthy in manuscripts by the later Anglo-Saxon authors, especially those of America, headed by Hawthorne. He owns "The Snow Witch" of Hawthorne in the original manuscript. It cost him $125, and he was recently offered $1,500 for it.

The libraries of both Mr. Flagler and Mr. White are rich in Shakespeareana. In this particular, however, they are inferior to the collection of Marsden J. Perry of Providence, R. I., who owns what is conceded to be the finest collection relating to the English dramatist in America. He started it several years ago by buying as a whole the library of Halliwell Phillips, the commentator, for $150,000. To-day his collection is worth at least $1,200,000.

It does not take many volumes of Shakespeare to eat up a small fortune. The first folio is worth $25,000; the second, $8,000; the third, $10,000; the fourth, $4,000, and other editions cost from $500 up.

Robert Hoe of Robert Hoe & Co., builders of printing presses, and E. D. Church of the Church & Dwight Company are others whose libraries, containing many manuscripts and rare first editions, each represents an investment of at least $1,000,000. Mr. Hoe's is the larger, Mr. Church's is especially rich in Americana. The value of these manuscripts varies greatly. While the general tendency of the prices is upward, the demands for the several sorts change from year to year. The demands for E. A. Poe's manuscripts and first editions, for example, have been conspicuous in the last few years. A sheet of paper with eight lines, signed by Poe, charred by fire and mounted on white silk—a fragment of paper so frail that it hardly bears handling—is quoted at $300.

The library of Frederick R. Halsey is one of the finest in manuscripts and letters of Poe. Frank Mayer has an exceptional collection of American first editions and manuscripts. The collection of W. F. Havemeyer is also rich in Americana, especially in rare Washington prints.

A decade ago letters of Washington and Grant were to be had as low as $3 and $5. The same manuscripts are now worth from $750 to $800. From these figures for single papers, the prices range to $10,000 for a collection of fifty-five letters of Washington.

Other collections of books are specialized to a great degree. John G. Heckscher's library is noted for its volumes on sports, especially angling. John D. Crimmins has one of the finest collections of books dealing with Irish topics in the country. Henry M. Poor owns a very large library on general topics. Beverly Chew's library is comparatively small, but contains some treasures in first editions and old books. Gen. Brayton Ives has another large library containing a little of everything. Whether or not the largest of these libraries are worth a million is problematical.

The prices a book brings at auction are usually considered a standard of valuation. These figures, however, are often misleading. Some wealthy men buy fine books on subscription. If it is found desirable to sell them, the price at auction is not more than 10 per cent. of their cost. A gorgeous set of Dumas's works for which the owner paid $5,000 on the subscription basis, recently sold for $230. Another set that cost $400 sold for $60.

The library of the late Augustin Daly sold for about $185,000. It cost Mr. Daly not far from $600,000. Some of its treasures, however, passed almost unnoticed. There was a life of Gen. Grant, for instance, merely catalogued as containing letters of the author and of Grant. It sold for $1,250. The letters of Grant numbered fifty, and each was worth at least $50.

Some of the libraries mentioned are, without doubt, far more valuable than even their owners suppose. This is illustrated by an experience of Frank Bixby of St. Louis several years ago. Mr. Bixby owns one of the finest private libraries in the country. It is rich in Washingtoniana, and manuscripts and first editions of Dickens and Thackeray, and is worth $1,000,000 at least. Mr. Bixby's chief treasure is the original manuscript of Thackeray's "The Virginians." He found it in the hands of an English dealer, who sold it for £1,500. It is probably worth ten times $7,500 to-day.

What will become of these great libraries? Some of them, like the collection of the late William C. Whitney, will doubtless be divided among the members of the owner's family. Other collectors may bequeath them to public institutions, as rumor says J. Pierpont Morgan purposes to do. Whether disposed of in this manner, or placed on the market, collectors ventured the opinion last week that the treasures would sooner or later be put to public use.

Sure 'Taint.

THE REV. NEHAMIAH BOYNTON, Chaplain of Pratt Institute, lately gave the students a definition of "tainted money." According to his definition 90 per cent. of the country's wealth, which, according to some economists, is owned by 1 per cent. of the people, is "tainted money."

"The only thing I see tainted about it," said Dr. Boynton, "is that it 'tain't' yours nor 'tain't' mine."

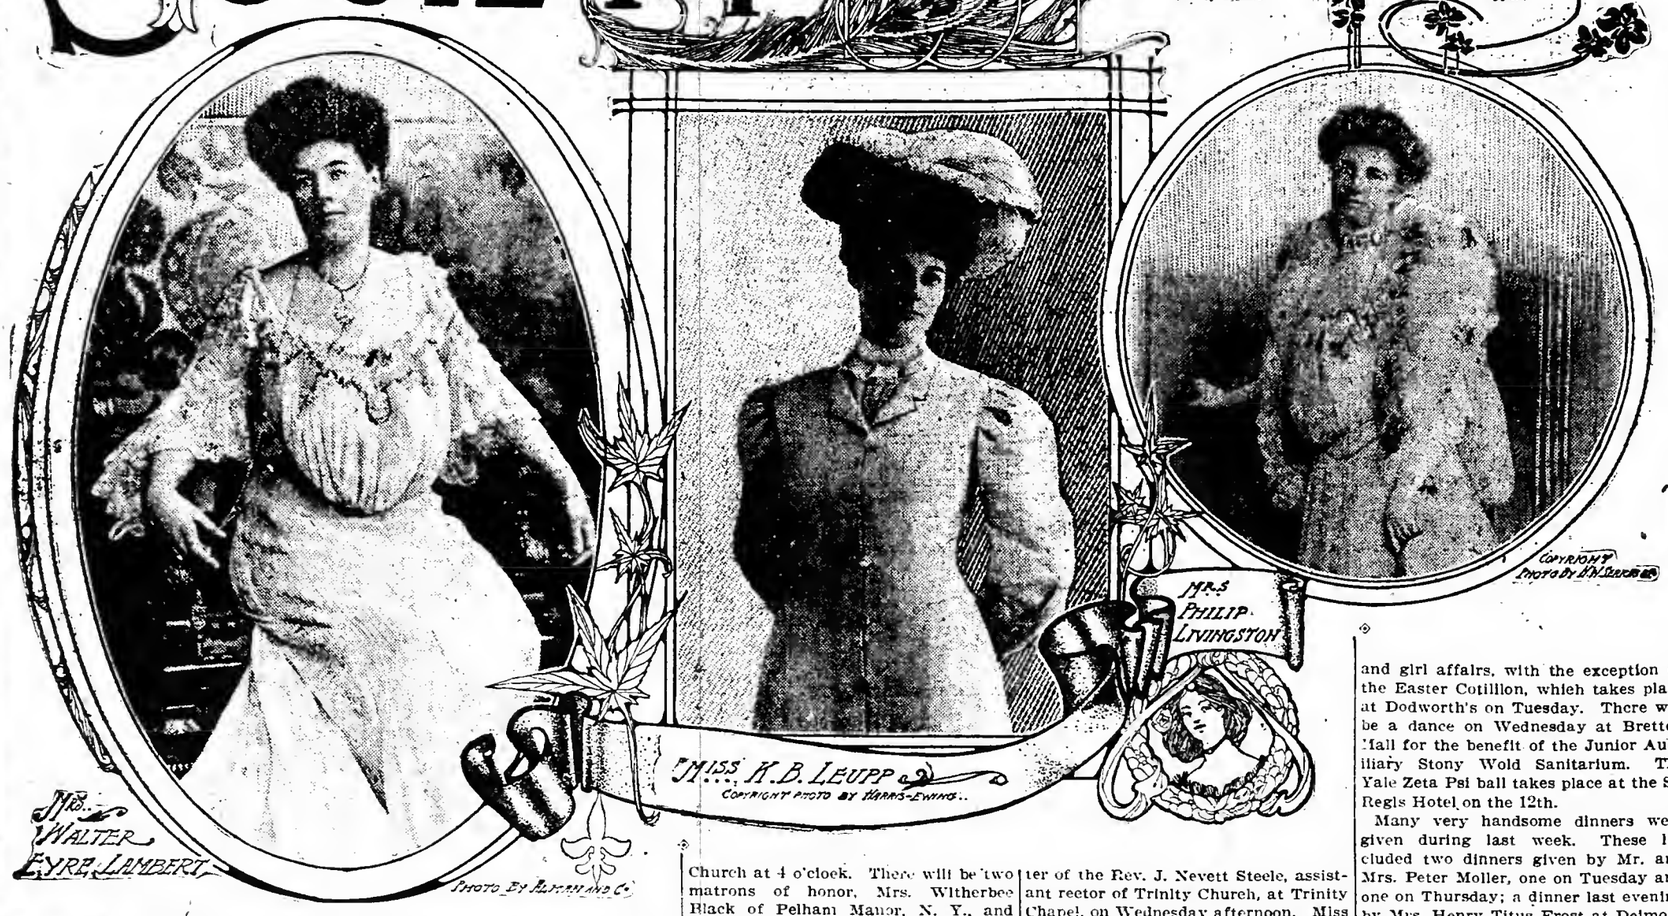
SOCIETY HOME AND ABROAD



MARRYING and giving in marriage occupied the attention of the fashionable element in society last week, almost to the exclusion of any other subject. It was true that there were dinners and evenings for cards and a few dances for young people not yet out, and also a most enjoyable cotillion given by Mrs. August Heckscher on Monday evening, but each day brought its train of weddings. The weather was so delightful that Fifth Avenue and the Park in the afternoons were the scenes of a display of perfectly appointed equipages, luxurious motors, and a bewildering array of Spring gowns and hats. There are still more weddings for this week, but most of the dances are over, and there remains only the University Cotillion, which will wind up the season.

The country is glorious in its promise of Spring, and week-end parties are many. In fact, a number of the town houses are closed, and from now until late June there will be a succession of entertainments in the Meadow Brook region, along the Hudson, at Tuxedo, and in the different residential clubs, such as Ardsley and Baltusrol. Many have gone to Washington for the races. The hunt is on in Long Island. These sharp mornings have gathered together the Meadow Brook set, and there have been some interesting meets with the new M. F. H., Samuel Willets.

Mrs. Barger Wallach begins this week a tennis tournament at the St. Nicholas Rink, at which several of the champions are to play, and many in the Newport set will compete for cups and prizes. The sailing lists have not contained many well-known names, but the latter part of April and the first weeks of May will see perhaps a larger representation of New York society going abroad than for years past. The London season promises to be brilliant, and the International Horse Show, taking place the first week in June, between the Derby and the Ascot, when London is gayest, will prove an extra attraction. Many Americans are sending over their horses. Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt is undecided as to whether she will go to England or remain in this country at the farm near Newport. The William K. Vanderbilt, Jrs., arrived last week, and Harold Vanderbilt was with them. They are to be at their Long Island estate, as the town house is not yet ready for them. Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont remained abroad with her daughter, the Duchess of Marlborough. She may come later. Mrs. Vanderbilt, Sr., and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt have planned to go to California for a short visit. On their return, it is said that they will go abroad again, and in this event there may be little chance of The Breakers at Newport being open this Summer. They went abroad a year ago about this time. Miss Vanderbilt is interested in her musical studies, and the Paris season which begins in May has many attractions.

The engagements announced during the week have been most interesting. Miss Elizabeth Winthrop Stevens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ledyard Stevens, who is to marry William H. Emory, Jr., is one of the season's débutantes. There were several entertainments given for her in the early Winter. Miss Stevens and her mother have just returned from abroad. No date has been set for the wedding.

Both William M. Wright and Miss Sally Dixon, whose engagement was announced in THE TIMES on Saturday, are very young. Miss Dixon is a niece of Mrs. James Barclay and is a very pretty girl. Miss Ruggles, whose engagement to George Lane was another announcement made in THE TIMES, made her début Winter before last. Another engagement was that of Miss Corinne Robinson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson, to George Draper, a formal publication of which, it is understood, will be made on the return of Mr. and Mrs. Robinson from abroad. They were in Italy last week.

Two Interesting Weddings Abroad.

The marriage of Arthur Kemp, whose first wife was Miss Belle Neilson, the daughter of Mrs. Frederick Neilson, the niece of Frederick Gebhard, and the sister of Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, to Miss Sibyl Kaye, was a surprise and a sensation. Both parties are well known in New York. The new Mrs. Arthur Kemp is not as young as her predecessor, who is now Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell. She comes from New Orleans, and was educated at a convent. She has quite a circle of acquaintances in New York. She is a very handsome woman and her gowns and appearance made quite a sensation at the Horse Show some years ago. The little daughter of Arthur Kemp and his first wife is in charge of Miss Kemp, who has become a Roman Catholic and who lives in Rome. The Kemps have a large fortune.

Wadsworth Ritchie to Marry Again.

The announcement comes from London of the approaching wedding of Wadsworth Ritchie, the son of Mrs. Adair, who was a Miss Wadsworth of the Genesee Valley, and a cousin of Mrs. Clarence Mackay. Wadsworth Ritchie's first wife was Miss Tooker of Newport, a sister of Mrs. Whitney Warren and also of "Jack" Tooker, who married the first wife of Hollis Hunnewell. Mrs. Hunnewell divorced her husband. He married Mrs. Arthur Kemp, and Mrs. Hunnewell then became Mrs. Tooker.

Mrs. Wadsworth Ritchie died some four years ago in London. Wadsworth Ritchie was over here last year. His bride-to-be is Miss Daisy Hoare. The wedding will take place at Chesterton, Bicester. The bride is the daughter of a member of a noted London banking firm and is very wealthy. Mrs. Adair, Mr. Ritchie's mother, has been more or less of an invalid, owing to serious trouble with her eyes. She is a rich woman of excellent social position in London. She was twice married, and her first husband, Mr. Ritchie, was killed in the late civil war. Five years later she married Mr. Adair, a millionaire Irishman, who bequeathed to her his entire fortune, and she now owns, in Texas, the second biggest ranch in the world. Her sister, who was the widow of Arthur Post of this city, en secondes noces became Mrs. Hugh Smith Barry and is now, owing to her husband receiving a peerage, Lady Barrymore.

The Lestelle—Neeser Nuptials.

With all the pomp and ceremony of the Roman Catholic Church Miss May H. Neeser will be married on Tuesday to Charles Lestelle of Paris. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. John G. Neeser. The ceremony will be performed by Archbishop Farley at St. Patrick's Cathedral at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It will be followed by a reception at the Neeser residence on East Sixty-fifth Street. The bride will be given in marriage by her brother, John G. Neeser. Miss Elvine L. Neeser will be her sister's maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be Miss Alice Everard Strong, daughter of Mrs. William Everard Strong; Miss Mary Redmond Cross, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Cross, and Miss Rosina Sherman Hoyt, daughter of Mrs. Alfred M. Hoyt. Mr. and Mrs. Lestelle will reside in Paris.

Ogden—Frost.

A wedding of Monday will be that of Miss Gladys Frost, the daughter of Mrs. Henry Titus Frost, and Herbert Gouverneur Ogden. The ceremony will take place at St. Thomas's Church at 4 o'clock. There will be two matrons of honor, Mrs. Witherbee Black of Pelham Manor, N. Y., and Mrs. N. Darrell Harvey of Providence, R. I. There will also be as bridesmaids the Misses Elizabeth Lauder of Pittsburg, Grace Tucker of Albany, and Kathleen L. R. Buckley, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. L. Duncan Buckley of this city. Warren Green Ogden, a brother of the bridegroom, will be best man, and the ushers will be Paymaster Charles Palmer Dyer, U. S. N.; Dr. N. Darrell Harvey of Providence; William S. Peachy and William Mills Thompson of Washington; Witherbee Black, Henry Sheldon, Charles Hildreth Blair, Jr., and Charles Talcott Ellis of this city. A reception will follow at the residence of the bride's mother.

The Wedding at Castle Point.

To-morrow afternoon Miss Mary Pleton Stevens, the daughter of the late John Stevens, will be married to Ogden Haggerty Hammond, at Trinity Church, Hoboken. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at historic Castle Stevens. The bride will be attended by Miss Martha Marvin of Louisville, Ky., as maid of honor, and by the Misses Caroline and Emily Stevens, her cousins, and Miss Mary Chapin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Merrill Chapin as bridesmaids. All of these girls are under 12 years of age, and are related to the bride and bridegroom-elect. The invitations have been sent out by Col. and Mrs. Edwin A. Stevens, the former an uncle and the owner to-day of the old mansion.

J. H. Hammond, who married Miss Sloane, will act as his brother's best man, and the ushers will be John B. Adams, William A. Delano, John F. Talmage, Nelson Burr, Theodosius F. Stevens, and Vance McCormick.

Wednesday's Weddings.

There will be five weddings on Wednesday, and the majority of them will be church affairs. The one exception will be that of Miss Katherine Barney, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tracy Barney and niece of the late William C. Whitney. She will marry Courtlandt Dixon Barnes. This will be one of the most notable nuptial events of the Eastertide, and will take place at the residence of the bride's parents at midday. The invitations will be limited, and it will be followed by a wedding breakfast for the relatives and intimate friends. Miss Dorothy Whitney, the youngest daughter of the late William C. Whitney and a cousin of the bride, will be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be Miss Sarah P. Barnes, a sister of the bridegroom-elect; Miss Jean Reid, the daughter of Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid; Miss Anita Peabody, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Peabody, and Miss Cornelia Harriman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman. The ushers will be Ashbel and James Barney, brothers of the bride; Reginald Fincke, J. Markoe Robertson, Arthur J. Wear, Joseph R. Swan, Louis C. Clark, Jr., and Lawrence B. Rand. H. B. Barnes, the brother of the bridegroom, will be best man.

The wedding of Miss Helen Gillette Ballard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick E. Ballard, and Walter Heyward Powers at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, will be a small and quiet affair, owing to a recent bereavement in the family of the bride. It was to have been one of the largest weddings of the season. James R. Knapp will be best man, and Miss Marie L. Hoopes, maid of honor. There will be no reception.

The wedding of Benjamin Strong, Jr., and Miss Katherine P. Converse, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund C. Converse of Greenwich, Conn., will be performed at St. Thomas's at 4 o'clock by the Rev. Dr. Ernest Stires, the rector. A reception will follow at the residence of the bride's parents, 37 West Forty-eighth Street. Mrs. Edmund C. Converse, Jr., will be matron of honor, and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Lesley Ackerman, Katherine Doremus, Elsie L. Morrill, and Lee Alexander. Henry P. Davison of Englewood, N. J., is to be best man, and the ushers will be Arthur Strong, Edmund C. Converse, Jr., William Griswold, Scott McLanahan, and James Ashley.

The Borden—Steele Wedding.

Joseph Carlton Borden will be married to Miss Ruth J. Steele, the daughter of the Rev. J. Nevett Steele, assistant rector of Trinity Church, at Trinity Chapel, on Wednesday afternoon. Miss Margery Lawrence will be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Nathalie Holmes, Marjorie Rice, Helen Ray, Louise Twitchell, Marjorie Wessell, and Dorothy Green. Albert G. Borden, the bridegroom's brother, will be best man, and the ushers will be Richard H. Davis, Jr., Charles H. Thierot, Russell P. Freeman, H. Lindsley Johnson, Robert M. Miles, Jr., Thomas L. Manson, Jr., Charles F. Watson, Jr., and L. Spencer Steele.

Engagements and Wedding Plans.

The wedding of Miss Eleanor Sedley, eldest daughter of Mrs. Henry W. Sedley, and Theodore Greppo, of this city, will take place at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, on Saturday, April 20. The Rev. Dr. Parker Morgan will officiate.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson, now in Rome, have confirmed by cable the announcement made in THE TIMES of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Corinne Robinson, to George H. Draper, which was denied elsewhere.

The engagement of Miss Jane Goodson Carlisle, daughter of Mrs. William K. Carlisle of Gramercy Park, and granddaughter of the ex-Secretary of the Treasury, John G. Carlisle, to Frederick L. Allen of this city has been announced. Mr. Allen is a member of the University and other clubs.

The wedding of Miss Marion Fish, daughter of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, and Albert Gray, may take place in New York. If so, it will be on June 12.

The wedding of Miss Grace L. Fargo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Fargo, to Daniel Chauncey, Jr., will take place at St. Thomas's Church on April 25, at 4:30 P. M.

The engagement of Miss Elizabeth M. Masten, only daughter of Arthur H. Masten, to George A. Crocker, has been announced. Mr. Crocker is a member of the Metropolitan and other clubs. He is related to the Reese, Suydam, Hydig, and other well known families. His sister married William Sloane, son of the late John Sloane.

An Anglo-American Alliance.

A quiet wedding at Grace Church Chantry will be that of Jocelyn Herle Evans, a son of Sir Francis Henry Evans, M. P., from Maidstone, and for years a member of the firm of Donald Currie & Co., and Miss Blanche Rumsey, daughter of Mrs. William Rumsey and of the late Judge Rumsey. Evelyn Evans, a brother of the bridegroom, will be best man. The bridegroom's mother was Miss Marie Stevens of Albany, a relative of the De Grasse, De Pau, and Livingston families of this State. A wedding breakfast will follow the ceremony at the residence of the bride's mother, 200 West Fifty-sixth Street.

An Evening Wedding.

Samuel Charles Steinhardt will be married on Wednesday evening to Miss Irma de Sola Mendes, the daughter of the Rev. Dr. de Sola Mendes, at the West End Synagogue. The father of the bride will perform the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. Max Grauman. The bridesmaids will be the Misses Vera and Nina de Sola Mendes, Louise Steinhardt, Gertrude N. Strauss, Myrtilla J. Davies, and Selina Belais. Miss Clara Guggenheimer will be flower girl, and Mrs. Frederick J. Lisman will be matron of honor. The bride's uncle, F. J. Lisman, will conduct her to the altar. Edward Steinhardt will be best man, and the ushers will be Bertram Ehrenberg, De Witt Stern, Kurt J. Rahlson, Selon May, Milton H. Stankenthal, and Lawrence J. Levy.

A Home Wedding for Miss Loew.

The wedding of Robert Cutting Lawrence and Miss Marguerite Loew, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Loew, will take place on Thursday at the residence of the bride's parents. Invitations will be limited to relatives and intimate friends. Mrs. Howard C. Brokaw will be matron of honor, and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Angelica and Mabel Gerry, Edith Lawrence, Marion Stoddard, Beatrix Hollins, and Vera Gilbert.

Some Important Social Happenings.

The dances for this week will be boy and girl affairs, with the exception of the Easter Cotillion, which takes place at Dodworth's on Tuesday. There will be a dance on Wednesday at Bretton Hall for the benefit of the Junior Auxiliary Stony Wold Sanitarium. The Yale Zeta Psi ball takes place at the St. Regis Hotel on the 12th.

Many very handsome dinners were given during last week. These included two dinners given by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Moller, one on Tuesday and one on Thursday; a dinner last evening by Mrs. Henry Titus Frost at Delmonico's, the bridal party dinner for Miss McCook and Mr. Whitman on Monday given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, and dinners by Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Oakley Rhinelander, Mrs. Marcellus Hartley on Thursday for Marcellus Hartley Dodge and his fiancée, Miss Ethel Rockefeller, who are to be married on April 18; Mrs. Charles R. Henderson, and others. There were numerous bridge parties each day in the week, and luncheons were given by Mrs. James Martin, Mrs. J. Kearney Warren, Mrs. George Floyd Jones, and receptions by Mrs. Frank Brinley Porter for her son's fiancée, Miss Rachel Lenox Kennedy; Mrs. George Heye, Mrs. Grenville Snelling, and Mrs. Frederick Bull.

Mrs. Dunlap Hopkins had a musicale on Thursday, and Miss Woodworth and Mrs. Woodworth Taylor gave an Easter tea on Sunday at their residence at the Rockingham.

Mrs. Wilson Shannon Dunn will give a reception to-morrow from 5 to 7 to meet the Duke of Newcastle and his niece, Miss Lister Kaye. Mrs. Henry Draper is among the hostesses whose cards are out for a dinner on the 10th.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Shoemaker, their daughter, Miss Blanche Shoemaker, and their daughter-in-law, Mrs. William Brock Shoemaker, who have been traveling abroad, will return to New York about April 15.

Mrs. William Storrs Wells sails this week for Europe. She will be absent three months, and will return to Newport for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Watts Sherman and the Misses Sherman will close their New York residence about the middle of April and go to Newport.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Bourne have gone abroad for the Summer. They will not return until late in the Autumn.

A bazaar for the benefit of the blind will be held at Delmonico's on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, April 11. The money raised will be expended in books for the blind. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Van Brugh Livingston, Mrs. Schuyler Warren, Mrs. Frederick Suse, Mrs. De Lancey Kane, Mrs. G. Stanton Floyd-Jones, Mrs. Duncan Emmett, Miss Marié, and others.

A children's sale will be held April 12 from 2 to 6 P. M. at the residence of Mrs. Charles B. Alexander for the children's bed at the Country Home for Convalescent Babies at Sea Cliff, L. I.

On Thursday, April 11, a café chantant will be held in the banquet hall of the Hotel Astor for the benefit of the Mary Fisher Home.

Mrs. Harold Baring and Mrs. Warburton have been among the American hostesses at Biarritz who have entertained King Edward. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burns have returned to London and are occupying their new town residence. Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills, who are now at their country seat, will sail the last week in April for England.

Sir Percy Sanderson and his sister, Miss Sanderson, will shortly sail for England. As has been announced, this is the retirement of Sir Percy Sanderson from the position of British Consul General in this city, which he has held for so many years. Sir Percy Sanderson and Miss Sanderson are great favorites in New York society and a number of dinners have been given for them recently.

The Grand Opera Party.

On April 12, in the chamber music rooms of Carnegie Hall, will take place the Grand Opera Party in aid of the West Side Juvenile Club. There is a long list of patronesses headed by such well known women of fashion as Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Mrs. C. A. Duer, Miss Moegen, Mrs. Herbert Satterlee, Mrs. Hilborne Roosevelt, Mrs. J. West Roosevelt, Mrs. August Montant, Mrs. Henry Barclay, Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, and others. The entertainment has been arranged by Miss Anna Constable, assisted by Miss Frances Hoppin, Miss Beatrice Pratt, Miss Isabelle Tilford, William F. Beekman, Langdon Geer, Frederick S. Hoppin, Jr.; Harold Imbrie, Arthur C. Nash, and Gardiner B. Perry. It will consist of various amateur performances, costume dances,

Personal and Otherwise

THE large number of Easter weddings recalls to the mind of the older generation that twenty years ago an unusually large number of fashionable weddings occurred, and that many of the débutantes of the past season are the offspring of those unions. For instance, the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander occurred in April, 1887, in Grace Church, San Francisco, and a special car or two conveyed the various relatives of Mr. Alexander to his wedding with the California beauty, Miss Harriet Crocker. Their elder daughter, Miss Harriet Alexander, made her début last Winter, and a cotillion was given for her at the Alexander town house.

In June—Easter came very late that year—there was the marriage of Reginald W. Rives and Miss Mary C. Bulkley. Brockholst Cutting was the best man. Their daughter, Miss Helen M. Rives, made her bow to society this past Winter.

In Baltimore there was celebrated the wedding of J. Ridgely Carter and Miss Allee Morgan, daughter of Mrs. David Pierce Morgan. Mr. Carter is now an attaché of the American Embassy in London, but Mrs. Carter spent part of the Winter here, and her daughter, Miss Mildred Carter, made her début here at a ball given for her and her débutante cousin, Miss Gladys Kissel, by their grandmother, Mrs. David P. Morgan.

On May 11, 1887, John E. Alexandre and Miss Helen Lispenard Webb were married. They have two daughters, the Misses Helen and Civilise Alexandre, but neither has yet made her début.

In April of the same year Howland Pell and Amy Goelet Gallatin were married, and among the wedding attendants were Miss Sands and Miss Caroline Duer. Miss Gladys Pell, their daughter, came out a year ago.

In the latter part of April of that year Peter Cooper Hewitt married Miss Lucy Work, one of the daughters of Frank Work; the other had married James Burke Roche. Miss Jeanne Turnure, now Mrs. J. C. Mallery, and Miss Hildegarde Oelrichs, now Mrs. Richard Henderson, and a sister of Mrs. William Jay, and Mary Roberts, now Mrs. Charles E. Welles, were included in the attendants. The Cooper Hewitts have no children.

In the latter part of April Miss Helen A. Jones became the bride of Francis de R. Wissman. They also have no children.

Andrew Carnegie also ventured into matrimony that Spring, sailing immediately afterward for England with his bride.

In April, also, there was the wedding of Miss Julia L. Peabody and Charles J. Nourse. They have a daughter, Miss Julia L. Nourse, not yet out, and a son, Charles J. Nourse, third, who is a Harvard student.

On April 28, 1887, William M. V. Hoffman, a son of the late Dean Hoffman, and Miss Irene Stoddard, a daughter of the Rev. Charles Augustus Stoddard, were married in St. Thomas's Church. Duncan Elliot was the best man, and Newbold Lawrence's name appears in the published list of the ushers. Among the bridesmaids were Miss Georgina Betts, who married T. Tileston Betts, and Miss Ethel Stoddard, who married Frederic J. Parsons. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons now live in Paris.

Miss Eleanor C. Van Rensselaer and Hamilton R. Fairfax were wed that Spring, and their elder daughter, Miss Katharine Van Rensselaer Fairfax, made her début this Winter at a cotillion at Sherry's.

Another April wedding was that of Henry Eugene Gourd and Miss Emily Noel. They have a son, Marcel Gourd, now in Paris, and three young daughters not yet out, the Misses Yvonne, Renée, and Helen. Among the attendants were Miss Louise Noel, who a few months since married William Armstrong Greer, son of Coadjutor Bishop Greer, and Miss Kate La Montagne, whose marriage to President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia occurred in March. Miss Josephine Noel was also an attendant. This wedding took place in the Cathedral.

The Seligman Residence.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Seligman, 30 West Fifty-sixth Street, illustrated in the Pictorial Supplement, is an excellent example of a fine residence built for comfort as well as beauty. The interior decorations differ widely from other New York residences, and the house has a distinctive character of its own suggesting individual taste rather than an adherence to conventional lines. The entrance hall, of which two views are given, is pure Greek in design and in fine marble in white and gray, the tables, benches, as well as the floors and side walls are of marble.

The marble stairway has its main flight terminating several steps above the entrance hall floor, which is on a level with the street, and one descends several steps on either side to reach the main floor, the square end of this dais floor having a railing. On either side are doors, one leading to the left. At the top the stairs open on each side into the circular hall or picture gallery on the second floor. From this picture gallery and hall there are two doors leading, one on each side, into the drawing room, and at the rear are two similar doors leading into the dining room.

The beautiful Doric library shown in the illustrations is on the third floor. It overlooks Fifty-sixth Street, and runs the width of the house. It is pure Doric in every detail. The colors are gobelin blue and gold with old oak, and the hangings are in gobelin blue with gold bullion threads.

The walls above the bookcases are covered with gobelin blue tapestry shot with gold threads; the window hangings are also of gobelin blue and gold, and the oak furniture is upholstered to match. The floor coverings are in plain gobelin blue. On the walls hang paintings by American artists only, including one of Von Boskerck's landscapes, several street urchins by Brown, a Mosler, a McCord, a Schenck, and others. At one end of the room over a mantel is a Dutch subject painting in oils. The ceiling is finished in stucco crossed by deep plain oak beams.

On the next floor beneath the library is the drawing room. This is of the Georgian style, with polished mahogany pillars at the sides and ends of the room arranged in pairs and thrown into strong relief by the gold-covered walls, figured cloth and cream stucco being the background. The window hangings are in old rose velour and the portieres are in soft apple and leaf greens brocaded with small pinkish roses. The gilt furniture is covered with different delicately tinted brocades.

Returning to the circular hall one may look over the railing of the little rotunda down the marble stairs to the entrance hall. Over this railing are silk rugs, and silk rugs cover the floor. The walls are hung with paintings, as the hall is also the picture gallery. The paintings include a Lawrence and a Gainsborough; also examples of l'Hermitte, James Stark, Diaz, Moreland, Cazin, Henner, Keith, Dubigny, Gérôme, Dupré, Didier, Schreyer, and others, and also Biggs's "Saturday Night," the companion picture of which, entitled "Sunday Morning," is in the Tate Gallery in London.

The dining room entered from this hall is English, the paneled walls are of Circassian walnut, and the walnut chairs are upholstered in gold-embossed, dull-red leather. The floor coverings are in plain red, with borders showing old-gold figures. In recesses at each end of the room are four wonderful antique bronze figures, the four Seasons. From the rear of the dining room at one side is the Japanese room. This room is really a semi-circle, but the straight side being an immense mirror, the illusion of a circular room is produced. The ceiling is in dull gilt, in fluted effect, and the side wall of the semi-circle is in stained glass in dull yellows and soft reds, and is purely Japanese. A seat upholstered in brownish and yellowish Japanese leather follows this wall, and the chairs and tables are wonderful Chinese and Japanese woods, with the finest of hand carvings. Everything in this room came from Japan or China, and much of it was purchased abroad by the family in their travels. The Japanese fireplace has two wonderful Japanese firedogs, as fine examples of the art as can be found in this country. Above this fireplace is a carved Japanese cabinet, the shelves of which are covered with Japanese and Chinese curios in carved ivory, and at one side of the mantel is suspended an old ivory ring, on which is mounted an ivory parrot. Japanese embroideries on silk are placed here and there, and opposite the centre of the semi-circle, against the mirror, is placed the carved square wood entrance of a Japanese temple. Several fine gongs and wonderful bronzes are included in the collection. One bronze, an eagle with his prey, and a figure of a monkey in bronze holding in his hand a cluster of water lily stems, from the tips of which spring amber-studded electrically lighted lilies, are very handsome. One panel framed in curious gray Japanese wood shows raised ivory flowers and leaves and a butterfly, against a glittering black background.

On the wall also hangs a Japanese clock, with the curious Japanese characters for figures. This is blue enamel and dull gilt. Beautiful jade and carved crystal pieces, trays in brass and china are placed here and there.

STOUT WOMEN MADE SMALLER WITHOUT DISCOMFORT.
La Resista
Form-Adjusting Corset.
Prevailing fashions cause many a sigh from the woman of superfluous flesh. How to attain the graceful lines of her more slender sisters has been a serious question. This difficulty has been successfully solved by the invention of the La Resista Form-Adjusting Corsets, with PATENTED ANCHOR BELT ATTACHMENT.
So marked is the effect of this invention that the skirt may be taken in Five Inches Over the Abdomen when this corset is worn. Still more surprising is the fact that this reduction Causes No Discomfort and is recommended by physicians, because La Resista Form-Adjusting Corsets are boned throughout with the wonderful Spirabone,

This is an illustration of SPIRABONE.
Spirabone gives greater elasticity, greater strength than either whalebone or the ordinary flat steels used in all other corsets.
The addition of the Anchor Belt Attachment, which can be instantly adjusted when the corset is on the figure and which makes the La Resista Corset the only perfect corset of its kind now on the market. It positively produces the much-desired outline and makes a trim-fitting gown possible.
REDUCES THE ABDOMEN AT THE PLEASURE OF WEARER,

ONE of the largest and prettiest of the week's receptions was that given yesterday afternoon from 4 untill 7 by Mr. and Mrs Bedell Parker in their home, 317 West Eightieth Street. It was for the Georgia Society and their friends. In the receiving line with Mr. and Mrs. Parker were Miss Edith S. Livingston, who is the fiancee of Dr. John S. Gaines, Mrs. Parker's brother; Mrs. James Henry Parker, and Mrs. John Alton Harriss. Assisting in entertaining were Mesdames Gideon E. Fountain, Lamar Rose, Frank Meador, Floyd Stewart Corbin, and Miss Merritt. Mrs. Parker received in a gown of white lace. The decorations throughout the drawing rooms and dining room were of white and green, Easter lillies, and airy gauze ribbons being the agents employed to give a graceful and dainty effect. Some of those invited were Messrs. and Mesdames Calhoun, J. E. Graybill, G. F. Peabody, A. A. Alexander, J. C. Alexander, C. S. Andrewe, Perry Belmont, J. Johnston, R. S. Millett, E. N. Pendleton, H. H. Raymond, Lamar Ross, P. W. Rouss, M. J. Verdery, W. Wheless, B. Wrenn, Col. and Mrs. Charles H. Jones, Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Thomas, Mr., Mrs., and Miss Thweatt, F. S. Sheldon, H. C. Grant, F. K. Taylor, L. L. Hill, R. Momand Lane, J. J. Crawford, Donald McLean, Wallerstein, Chapman, E. H. Porter, and Legaree Walker.

Mrs. Gardiner Wetherbee, 241 West Seventy-second Street, is in St. Augustine, Fla., where she is spending soma weeks at the Ponce de Leon.

The Knickerbocker Card Club met with Mrs. W. S. Bentley, 314 West Seventy-eighth Street, on Tuesday afternoon.

On Wednesday evening Miss Fulton of the Chatsworth, Riverside Drive and Seventy-second Street, gave a pretty little dinner party to a number of young people. Some of her guests were the Misses Maas, Harriette Ruthmuffs and Merle Kent, and Messrs. Charles Fulton, Frederick Guire, Wick, Gale, and Wilbur Ruthrauff.

On Wednesday, the members of Eclectic will have a Daughters' Day, when all the members who have daughters will bring them to the meeting. There will be a one-act operetta for their amusement, followed by a dainty luncheon. The young girls will all be seated at one table, which will be made as attractive as possible with pink carnations, and special souvenirs. Those taking part in the play are Mrs. Charles Wallace Kitchell, Mrs. Andreas Schneider, Mrs. Carrie Martin Cowtan, Miss Florence Quinn, and Miss Marion Whittaker. The President, Mrs. Doré Lyon, will be assisted by an able committee in making this one of the most attractive of the season's affairs.

Mrs. William R. Stawart, 123 Riversida Drive, gave a reception on Friday at which Mrs. Gerard Bancker was the guest of honor. The hours were from 4 until 7.

Mrs. Charles Austin Bates, Mrs. Arthur Elliott Fish, and Miss Florence Guernsey spent Thursday at the Gramatin, in the Bronx, making arrangements for a big automobile ride that they are going to give a little later. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the Crippled Children's School, in which these three are interested. Tickets will be sold for $5 each, and will entitle the holder to a ride to the Gramatin, a luncheon, two hours of leisure to play bridge or ride about in the Bronx, and the return drive. A number of women have offered their cars and chauffeurs for the day, and a gala time is expected.

The tenth annual luncheon of the Daughters of 1812 was given on Wednesday in Delmonico's. It was preceded by a reception. The guests of honor were the nine real daughters in the New York and New Jersey Chapters. They are Miss M. Louise Edge, Mrs. William J. Taylor, Mrs. Gallagher, and Miss Baker of Jersey; Mrs. J. Alexander Brown, Miss Sarah Calhoun, Mrs. Sarah Kronke Rowley, daughter of Hiram Kronke, and Mrs. E. B. Hinsdale of New York, and Mrs. James Ross of Buffalo. Other guests seated at the President's (Mrs. William Gerry Slade) table were Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Markham, Col. and Mrs. Scott of West Point, Mrs. James Munroe Greene, Miss Janet E. Richards, Mrs. William Lindsey, wife of the ex-Senator from Kentucky; Miss Vanderpoel, Mrs. Kearfoot, Mrs. D. P. Ingraham, Mrs. J. M. Horton, Miss Elliott, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Vivian, Mrs. Malcolm MacLean, Miss Velasquez, Mrs. Wallerstein, Mrs. Hotchkin, Mrs. Jasper Cairns, Mrs. M. H. Parker, Mrs. Beckwith, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Pinney, Miss Mary Garrett Hay, Mrs. Haughey, Miss Mason, Miss Pomerene, Mrs. MacNutt, Mrs. Cramer, Mrs. Greeley, and Dr. and Mrs. Wade of Pittsburg, who have given land for a home in Pennsylvania, where a home is to be erected for tha real daughters. The series of talks Miss Richards is giving the society on current events is for the philanthropic work of the club and about $500 has been raised. Mrs. Letitia Stricker bequeathed $1,000 to the fund, so the real daughters will have a pension fund on which they may draw as the need arises.

Mrs. W. H. Barnes of Tucson, Arizona, is stopping with her daughter, Mrs. John Henry Martin, 146 Riverside Drive, for a month's visit.

A number of society women interested in philanthropic work and civic reform attended the informal industrial peace evening held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, 2 East Ninety-first Street, on Friday.

Tha annual Spring luncheon of Clio will be given on Wednesday in the Hotel Savoy.

A pretty Easter luncheon was that given by Mrs. Thomas A. Muir, 129 West Ninety-second Street, for Miss Beatrice Brown of Philadelphia on Monday. Miss Brown spent the Easter holidays with Mrs. Muir and her daughter, Miss Harriette, returning to her home on Wednesday. The table decorations were pink roses and carnations. The favors were crystal candlesticks. The guests were the Misses Marjorie Minner, Mary Taylor, Ruth A. Ralston, Marjorie Stuart, Jessie Koenig, Marguerite Stitt, Katherine Smith, Edna Thomas, Mary Harmon, Rita McArthur, Laura Tennock, and Marion Muir.

Mrs. E. L. Reaney, 133 West Ninety-second Street, was the hostess a short time ago of a party of thirty friends that she invited to her home to see a number of pictures illustrating life in the Moqui Indian Land. The pictures were presented by Frederick White. After the exhibition and talk there was an informal tea. Some of those invited were the Misses Alan, Miss Freid, Mr. and Mrs. Freid, Messrs. Richard Correll, George Lang, and Harry Gallagher.

The last meeting of the Wednesday morning bridge club was held with Mrs. Thomas Carmichael, 165 West Fifty-eighth Street.

Stony Wold is one of the city's busy charities—it is always busy, philanthropically and socially. On Monday evening there was a dance given by Auxiliary 10 in Bretton Hall. The patronesses were Mesdames Henry C. Lawrence, E. C. Van Glahn, A. D. Middleton, A. Hodgs, Walter Mendelsohn, C. H. Paddock, James Wiggins, Theodore Wentz, R. H. Daubarn, and S. E. Kulner. Auxiliary 2 will give a dance on Wednesday at Duryea's. Some of the patronesses are Mesdames Linton, Kenyon, May, Rich, Reid, Bell, Braxmar, Van Hise, Twiss, Wells, Terry, Terhune, Unrich, Carvalho, Conant, Christie, Storer, Shotwell, and Reisenberg. Junior patronesses, the Misses Adams, Branig, Braxmar, Beckley, Eckerson, Crawford, Furber, Gaines, Guild, Holahan, Hildebrand, Howe, Kuhn, Miller, Moore, Montrose, Pfluger, Snider, Tully, Pohle, Vantine, and Henderson.

Mrs. James Griswold Wentz has just returned from a three months' stay in Cuba and Mexico to her home, 312 West Eighty-first Street.

Mrs. B. Falee Brown of Crescent Court is entertaining her sister, Mrs. Frank Lee of Louisville, Ky. Mrs. Lee has quite a circle of acquaintances in the Southern colony here, and will remain a month. Mrs. Brown has been very successful so far with her plans for the bridge to be given on Tuesday in the Palm Room of the Sherman Square Hotel for the Little Mothers. Some of those who are interested are Mesdamce Bartow Weeks, M. J. Austin, F. M. Lane, W. W. Bage, J. J. Allen, C. C. Naret, J. Theodore Odell, B. G. Carleton, and H. C. Jones. Those who will receive with Mrs. Brown are Mesdames Clarence Burns, C. E. Sprague, Floyd Crane, Lyon De Camp, Lauron Ingols, H. L. C. Gargan, and Richard Esterbrook.

Plans are well under way for the annual garden party to be given by the New York Branch of the Army Relief Society on Governors Island. The day has not been set, but it will be late in May. There will be a military drill and parade. On Wednesday there will be a meeting with Mrs. Charles E. Roe, 37 West Thirty-fifth Street, the President of the New York Branch, to decide on a date and arrange other details. Mrs. Francia M. Gibson is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee and Mrs. F. M. Clarke Chairman of the Press. As Gen. Wade has retired, he and Mrs. Wade will not receive this year, to the regret of the society. Gen. and Mrs. Grant will receive, however, with the officers and their wives.

Mrs. C. C. Ruthrauff has left her apartments in the Hotel Irving and gone to Staten Island for the Spring months.

There was a dance in the clubhouse at Rye last evening which was attended by a number of New Yorkers. Ellsworth Ford and Miss Florence Wyman were in charge of the arrangements. Some of those who went from here ware Miss Behrens, Miss Dorothy Updyke, Miss Kemble, and Messrs. Munroe, Dumont, Carl and Louis Mertz, Kemble, Edwin Updyke, Gustave Kelly, Alan and Harold Story.

Mrs. Fabius M. Clarke, 306 West Eighty-second Street, expects her daughter, Mrs. O'Brien, to come and make a stay of three months with her in about a week. Mrs. O'Brien was Miss Hazel Clarke, and is well known in the younger set. Since her marriage she has been living on Belvedere Island, off the California Coast.

Mrs. Edgar Philp was the hostess on Wednesday and Friday at two bridge parties. There were four tables each time. The decorations were pink and white, with baskets tied with pink ribbons, for souvenirs and prizes of cut glass and Dresden china. There will be two more of these parties, on Wednesday and Friday of the coming week. Mr. and Mrs. Philp will leave their apartments in the Endicott early in May, and go to their country home on the Niagara River.

Miss Miriam Howe, 101 West Seventy-eighth Street, gave a theatre party a short time ago to a number of her friends. The play was "Salomy Jane." Some of those invited were Miss Florence Wyman, Ruth Sanford, Ruth Conklin, and Harriette Ruthrauff. The theatre was preceded by a luncheon.

Mrs. O. Bernard Bergstrom, 174 West Eighty-sixth Street, has invited a number of guests to her home to-day to hear a talk on "Psychic Research and its Importance," by James Hyslop. The hour is 4:30, and a tea will follow.

The vaudeville entertainment given in the Waldorf on Tuesday for tha East Side Clinic was very successful. There were about 800 present. The entertainment was followed by a dance and a reception, at which Dr. Wallerstein received, assisted by the patronesses. Some of them were Mesdames Amerman, Fisher, Baumgarten, Candlish, Braine, Cox, Cartwright, Clark, Healy, Benjamin, Ketcham, Hedden, Hallenbeck, Koepple, Hull, Porter, Richards, Tollner, Valadier, Wood, Horry, Bowne, Spear, Scripture, Gray, Harris, Drossel, Wells, Haynes, Stairs, Hand, Townsend, Crashof, Bergstrom, Taylor, Newton, Swan, Gerding, and Walsh.

The Woman's Democratic Club will give a Jefferson Birthday dinner on Saturday in the Hoffman House, at 7:30. The President is Mrs. John Sherwin Crosby, 110 West Eighty-fourth Street. The speakers will be Lieut. Gov. Lewis S. Chenier, the Hon. Bird S. Coler, Mrs. Fred Nathan, Mrs. Alice Fisher Harcourt, Countess Spotiswood Machin, the Hon. Charles F. Moore, and the Hon. William Hepburn Russell.

The President and officers of every woman's club in the city were invited to attend the reception given by the Municipal Art Society of New York a short time ago. The officers of the society are Charles R. Lamb, Frederick Crowninshield, Mrs. William Cummings Story, William T. Evans, Alexander C. Humphreys, and Samuel Untermyer.

Mrs. Wallace of 135 East Twenty-fourth Street, was the hostess at a bridge party on Thursday, given to the West End Woman's Republican Club, of which Mrs. William Grant Brown is the President.

There will be a reception prior to the annual luncheon which the New York State Republican Association will give on the twenty-third in Delmonico's. The reception will take place on the coming Wednesday. Mrs. J. G. Wentz, the President, will be assisted in receiving by the officers of the club.

Mr. and Mrs. Austin D. Middleton. Miss Middleton, and Miss Molleman left their home in West Ninety-second Street and sailed for Bermuda a short time ago. They will remain in the South some time, returning the latter part of this month. Later Mr. and Mrs. Middleton will open their country home in Stamford, in the Catskills.

Miss Florence Guernsey was the hostess yesterday at a bridge party to about sixty of her friends, who gathered for a social game in her home, 150 Central Park South. There was a prize for each table, a parasol of the newest shape and shade with folding handle, which closed with a spring so that the whole could be tucked away in a suitcase.

A dance was given on Friday evening under the auspices of the eleven patronesses of the Friday Evening Assemblies, which have closed their regular season. They will probably not be continued next Winter, but one or two complimentary dances will be given in the Fall. The patronesses are Mesdames James Griswold Wentz, Robert B. Leake, Wendell C. Phillips, J. B. Curtiss, G. W. Van Vlack, J. H. Henshaw, C. Nestelle Bovee, Benjamin Blossom, William K. Mittendorf, Travers Carman, and Theodore Wood. The decorations on Friday evening were Japanese in effect, hundreds of lighted Japanese lanterns in artistic shapes adding to the brilliancy of the scene. There were about 200 present.

Mr. and Mrs. William A. Redding will return this week from a month's stay in Washington to their home, 344 West End Avenue.

One of the many bridge and euchre parties of the week was that given on Tuesday in Duryea's for Mrs. George S. Studwell.

Mrs. Donald McLean, 186 Lenox Avenue, has been invited as the guest of honor to the reception and dance of the Georgia Society which will be given on Friday, the 12th, in the Waldorf.

The large Easter dance of the Junior Republican League which was originated a short time ago for the younger set of the west side was given Tuesday evening in Leslie Hall, and was well attended. The patronesses were Mesdames W. C. Story, W. G. Brown, Emile Glogau, C. C. Ruthrauff, Stephan A. Post, Ernest Bunzle, J. G. Wentz, James H. Hickey, S. D. Lewis, and Robert Dhu MacDonald.

Mrs. F. Norris Collins received informally on Monday afternoon in her home, 323 West Eighty-eighth Street.

Mrs. Ralph Montgomery Easley and her daughter, Miss Donna Easley, have left their Winter quarters in the Somerset and gone to their Summer home in Yonkers.

The Misses Blanche Woolsten, Madge Martin, and Willie Martin of this city left town on Thursday for the wedding of Miss Janet Mitchell, daughter of the late Senator Mitchell of Wisconsin. Miss Mitchell will be married on Wednesday to Mitchell Mackay in Milwaukee, and these three New York girls will be bridesmaids.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mills will return early in the week from a trip to Atlantic City, to their home, 88 West Ninety-third Street.

Mrs. Wendell C. Phillips will give the second of two informal musicales on Saturday evening in her home, 40 West Forty-seventh Street.

The final meeting of the season of the Round Table was held on Tuesday in Delmonico's. It was the annual Spring luncheon of the club. Mrs. Henry Clarke Coe is President of the body, which was organized several seasons ago for literary discussion and social times.

Miss Edna Holland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Holland, has recently become engaged to the Rev. Christian C. Koppell of Philadelphia. No date has been set for the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. McCarthy of the Hotel Newton are spending the Spring months in Florida.

The Daughters of the Empire State will give a reception on Thursday, the eighteenth, in the Waldorf. It will be the first one given under the new President, Mrs. Gerard Bancker. Mrs. John Miller Horton and George Cary Eggleston will be invited as guests of honor. Mrs. Sylvester D. Gascoigne is Chairman of entertainment, and has arranged an interesting programme. There will be a series of luncheons this Spring given by various members for Mrs. Bancker. The first will be in the home of Mrs. Robert Vermilye, 34 Gramercy Park.

A Potpourri of Fashions---The First of the April Wedding Gowns

THE past week was brilliant sartorially with wedding robes, and the latest creations of modiste and milliner were to the fore, although the chill winds prevented in most instances the wearing of very summery frocks, such as would have been in evidence had warmer weather prevailed. However, the members of the families appeared in the thinnest of chiffon and lace regardless of weather conditions, and very beautiful, too, were some of these gowns.

At even the late afternoon weddings, however, many of the young girls and the younger matrons appeared in tailored costumes, with skirts of walking length, and this costume was worn by a number attending the following receptions, although as a rule more elaborate costumes were donned for the latter.

It is noticeable that there is more simplicity evidenced so far in gowning than last Spring or last Autumn. The piling of superabundant trimmings on otherwise inoffensive frocks is a thing to be eschewed, no matter how much the modiste may urge it.

Mrs. George Gould and Mrs. E. H. Harriman were noticeable among the matrons at the Whitman-McCook wedding for the simplicity of their gowning. The members of the families of the bride and bridegroom are, of course, expected to be elaborately frocked, and this Spring's weddings show no departure from that rule.

The past week has brought an unusual number of home weddings, as in several instances one of the marrying couples was a Roman Catholic and the other Protestant in their beliefs, but in these cases, where the guests to the ceremony were limited, large receptions followed, and opportunity was given to admire the bridal gowns.

At one wedding a guest, a visiting Russian General and Count, almost rivaled the bride in the attention attracted by his wonderful uniform, combining a scarlet coat and a hundred medals, more or less, attached to gay ribbons in all colors fastened to his somewhat slender person.

Miss McCook's Wedding Gown.

Miss Janetta Alexander McCook, now Mrs. Malcolm Douglass Whitman, was the first of the Easter brides to have a large wedding. Mrs. Whitman is a trustee of Barnard College, and received from it her degree of B. A., and from Columbia her degree of M. A. Mr. Whitman during his college career, was three times tennis champion of the United States, so the wedding interested a large number of college girls and athletic collegians.

The wedding gown was a modified Empire princess in heavy white satin, with a plain train and skirt, and was molded closely to her Junoesque figure at the front and sides. The Empire girdle arrangement of embroidered bands curving from under the arms held it at the back. The front of the bodice was cut out in a deep oval and embroidered bands of the satin outlined it and went over the shoulders.

The guimpe and elbow sleeves were of point lace, the latter being each formed of two lace flounces. Her veil was of Brussels point, the centre showing the round dots and the edge of solid lace. This was arranged so that a point came directly over the top of her moderately high pompadour and almost touched her forehead. It was fastened with orange blossoms, and in the back the veil trailed nearly to the end of the long train. The stock of the guimpe was noticeably high. She wore a short string of pearls and carried an immense bouquet of lilies of the valley, showing a cluster of white orchids at one side.

Bridesmaids in Pale Blue.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Susan and Martha McCook, sisters of the bride; Miss Jennie A. Crocker of California, Miss Marian Fenno of Boston, Miss Edith Root, daughter of Secretary Root, and Miss Harriet Alexander, the latter a cousin of the bride.

They were gowned in pale blue chiffon and taffeta silk, with garlands trimmed with ruchings and bows of taffeta and tiny sprays of pink roses arranged in garlands, with white lace in the bodices, and these gowns were topped by immense hats of pale blue mohair, half covered with blue ribbon, lace, and pink roses. Each girl carried an armful of pink roses.

In detail the hats had small high round crowns of the mohair braid, the top of the crowns only showing. Around the crowns were drawn loose but high folds of pale blue taffeta ribbon so arranged as to accentuate the width of the hats in straight lines, and at each side—a little to the front at the left side and a little to the back at the right—were clusters of dull pale pink half-opened roses with crushed loops of the ribbon. In the back the broad ribbon was pulled out quite wide so as to cover most of the hat. Between this ribbon and the ribbon about the top of the crown was a puff of what seemed to be transparent maline. Below the taffeta ribbon and on the edges of the hats were little puffs of pale blue lace, or, rather, the lace was set on in a box-plaited ruche, the lower edge of which formed four-inch ruffles falling over the rim of the brim in curtain effect.

These hats were adjusted to suit each individual face and were charming.

The frocks in detail had stocks and guimpes of fine white lace, and the sleeves, which came below the elbows in flounce effect, were also of fine lace closely plaited at the top to follow the outline of the arm and then flared gradually into two wide flounce effects at the elbows. Pale blue chiffon or lace was inserted in some way into the plaitings at the lower edges of the sleeves. The gowns were modified Empire princess robes modeled along the general lines of the bride's gown, but were fuller. The girdles were similarly arranged so that the slight fullness in the centre back just above the waist line did hardly more than suggest the Empire mode, while the fronts were close fitting. The girdles were folds of pale blue taffeta brought from the back and four cabochons appeared on each in the centre as a decoration.

The skirts were laid in full fine folds or loose plaits at the top and flowed two-thirds of the way to the floor to meet the lower third, and this latter was entirely of blue taffeta, a plain shaped section joined to the blue chiffon. The chiffon, by the way, was over white silk. Gathered ruchings of double bands of the taffeta silk were arranged near the top of the taffeta section, and these extended up over the chiffon, forming a lattice-work effect, and in these lattice-work openings were fastened tiny clusters of artificial pink roses and buds arranged in semi-wreath effects on the chiffon. There were several varieties of ruchings employed, and above the whole small Empire bowknots of blue taffeta were fastened. The effect was very pretty. Pink roses and ruchings also appeared on the front of each bodice.

Mrs. McCook's Blue Robe.

Mrs. John J. McCook, the mother of the bride, was also in blue chiffon over white topped by a pale blue toque oval in shape, trimmed all around the sides with pale blue clover blossoms—for clover like all the other flowers appears in the milliner's garden in all sorts of strange hues—and floating, drooping blue plumes.

The gown was exquisitely embroidered in different shades of delicate blues, and the bodice showed a Marie Antoinette fichu effect. The guimpe and stock were of white lace, and a semi-circle of blue chiffon embroidered in blue flowers was draped around the bodice so that it outlined the guimpe and formed a round top which came at the edge of the shoulders, and the drapery drooped over the sleeve tops and across the back and front. In the back this fichu was gathered up in the centre, and from this arch hung a scarflike end of plain blue chiffon with fringe on the end; this hung nearly to the waist line. The skirt was embroidered about the hem and nearly to the knees.

Mrs. Alexander's White Chiffon.

Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, an aunt of the bride, was in white chiffon, at first glance a simple frock, but one quite elaborate in its shirrings. This white frock was given distinction by a touch of black filet lace let in as a sort of sleeve cap or epaulet drooping from each shoulder over the white lace and chiffon sleeves. The gown had a lace guimpe and the chiffon bodice was edged with delicate nacre embroidery lapped over the guimpe. Her hat was a small three-pointed or rather three-rolled affair in black chip trimmed with three ostrich tips shading from the stems to the edges in different colors.

Mrs. Gould's Black Magpie Gown.

Mrs. George Gould, who was at the wedding, wore a black and white striped gown; the material was some soft liberty or similar satin, and the stripes were each a quarter of an inch wide. The skirt swept the floor; it was gathered slightly at the top and its only trimming was a band of the silk five inches wide set on a few inches from the hem and going quite around the skirt; the stripes in this ran around the skirt.

The sleeves came a little below the elbows, and were gathered quite full at both the top and the bottom, and were finished at the bottom by a single, plain, straight band of the satin perhaps two inches broad. The bodice itself was as simple as possible, being gathered in at the waist line and finished by a fold of the satin, and having a stock with white lace. The bodice seemed to have its sections gathered slightly at the shoulder seams, and down each side of the bodice to the waist line at each side, and starting where the sleeves joined the shoulder seams, was an inch wide ruffle of some fine white material, probably lace. Her not large black hat was very simple, and was trimmed with a knot of ribbon and black feathers. She wore as her wrap a wide pelerine of sable.

A Practical Coat.

A woman in an orchestra chair at the opera recently donned before leaving a sensible coat in light tan cloth showing a yellow tinge, relieved by bronze brown velvet. The coat came to within ten inches of the floor and had a series of little simulated capes about the neck, with sleeves showing a series of simulated cuffs, and a double box plait down the back. In detail the coat began with a little flat circular collar section of the bronze brown velvet. This was deeper in the centre back and at the side fronts than at the points between, and it tapered down the front to nothing at all, disappearing under the cloth fronts. Then came three circular sections of the cloth, the outer one coming to the armholes; these went across the back and down over the shoulders to the bottom of the coat, the top one forming the inner edges of the coat; these were each stitched about a quarter of an inch from their edges to the foundation.

In the centre back a double box plait was laid. This was some seven inches wide at the top by fourteen at the bottom, and was pressed in, the inner box plait being fastened twice at each side at both the top and the bottom by two bronze buttons an inch across, eight buttons in all.

The coat, which was flat at the bottom line of this yoke arrangement, hung in full folds at the bottom, it being gored to spread. The front hung straight and flat owing to the stitched bands, and was closed down the front by a row of the bronze buttons and loops of silk cord. Across the fronts, also above the bust, was arranged a double row of bronze buttons, two on each plait or band, the upper row an inch and a half above the row below.

The sleeves were immense, and were plaited at the top into armholes of extreme width, and were again plaited above the wrists into shaped flaring cuffs of the cloth, each made of three three-inch bias sections of the cloth, arranged to overlap and stitched at the bottom to the foundation, and at the top also, but detached at that point. The cuffs flared at the top and were open at the back seam, each three-inch section showing two bronze buttons somewhat smaller than those on the body of the coat. These buttons made a straight up and down line at the back, and the lower section had its half next the bands of bronze velvet, or, rather, the velvet was inlaid.

From under the lowest of the three neck pieces a doubled piece of the bronze velvet came out over the sleeve tops. This formed a crescent-shaped epaulet and relieved the otherwise too drooping shoulder line, so ugly and yet the fashion at the moment.

Pinafore Princess Robe.

A soft castor brown panne velvet robe to wear at receptions, weddings, and other events of the Easter season has its full trailing skirt laid in two box plaits at the top in the back. These plaits are pressed in and held by bronze-gold buttons. The skirt itself is circular, smooth across the hips and front. At the outer edge of each box plait are set three cabochons an inch and a quarter across and three inches apart. This arrangement gives a postillion effect.

The top of the robe is cut out in a deep V in both the back and the front, and wide semicircular bretelles form the sides of the pinafore, and flare into cape sleeves that extend half way from the shoulders to the elbows. These bretelles cross in surplice fashion, but are smooth, and on each bretelle at the inside next the lace guimpe and just above where they cross are three one-inch buttons matching the cabochons. Imitation buttonholes worked in dull gold thread are their frame, so that the effect is given of the velvet buttoning on to the guimpe. There is a folded girdle of liberty satin ribbon that closes in the back under a bow some seven inches long and quite wide. This bow has two loops, but no ends.

The guimpe is formed first of folds of liberty satin next the velvet, matching the girdle, followed by a band of gold embroidery on yellow, and then a V of yellow Irish lace, the lace being dyed, and a stock to match lined and edged with yellowish chiffon.

The sleeves are full and of yellowish chiffon, ending below the elbows in deep cuffs of Irish crochet lace. The chiffon is laid at the top under the velvet in fine plaits and is encircled around above the elbow with three narrow rows of brown panne velvet, the widest being an inch wide and the narrowest a half inch. These were an inch apart. A hat to wear with this is in yellow chip. The crown has a fold of brown velvet around it and a cluster of full, wide ostrich tips is placed at the left side near the front and tumble in all directions. These are in different shades of brown.

Simple Cloth Costume.

In the trousseau of an early April bride there is a coat costume in chiffon cloth so light and so thinly lined as to be cool enough for even warm Spring days. It is a "dressy" costume and by no means intended for walking purposes, although if the skirt were shortened it would serve that purpose. The skirt is long, trailing all around, and is finished by three inch and-a-half-wide tucks at the bottom, an inch and a half apart, and the top is quite smooth, but it is so cut as to spread and to be quite full at the knees as well as about the feet.

The half length coat is tight fitting and plain, and has two rever sections going from top to bottom, stitched smoothly down; then come two turned back, rolled revers, only two inches wide at the top, that taper down to nothing at the waist line; these are of blue velvet, contrasting with the pale-blue cloth of the costume. Then comes the vest of pearl-gray cloth, closing with groups of tiny silver buttons an inch apart. There is a stock of lace applique over chiffon, with a tapering cascade of the same lace extending to the waist line. This waistcoat is stitched several times at its edges, and this stitching with the small silver buttons is the only decoration.

The sleeves end at the elbows. They are coat sleeves puffed a bit at the top and are laid in plaits at the bottom, with turned-back cuffs of blue velvet finished at the top with folds of the pale gray cloth. The wide revers of the coat and the turned-back cuffs are decorated with braid and passementerie ornaments.

Three-quarter-inch shaded blue silk braid showing threads of brown and green is laid in three loops, the centre one the longer, and a fold of the braid is turned across the base of the loops and suspended from these tops are passementerie silk drops in silver. There are two of these on each wide cloth rever, two just above the bust line, the other two being set on just far enough below to clear the silver pendants. There is also a smaller ornament of narrower braid on each cuff.

An immense sapphire blue Tuscan hat, trimmed with black ostrich plumes and large silver buckle, set with rhinestones, is to top this costume.

White Satin Wedding Robes.

So far the April brides have nearly all chosen satin for their bridal robes, one reason perhaps being that Easter coming unusually early, the Spring is not advanced and satin is more appropriate for chill wedding days than airy chiffons and lace frocks.

Miss Constance Lalor Crimmins, a daughter of John D. Crimmins, Sr., now Mrs. Frederick Robbins Childs, wore a white satin princess gown with a plain train, but the skirt was flounced about the bottom with point lace, a point lace panel extended from the yoke in the front to the flounce, and the guimpe and sleeves were also of point lace, as was her long veil, so that the costume was an unusually rich one.

The bridesmaids, the Messes Mercedes and Evelyn Crimmins, sisters of the bride, Miss Katharine McCann of New York, and Miss Anita Harvey of San Francisco, were in white chiffon frocks, hand-painted about the bottom with pink roses. Pale blue ribbon was arranged in panel effect on the skirts, and the hats topping these costumes—also white—were each trimmed with three huge pink roses and pale blue ribbons, and the large bunches of pink Killarney roses each girl carried were tied with floating blue ribbons with floating ends.

Miss Matthews Wears Satin.

Miss Graces Eulalie Matthews, now Mrs. Henry Taber Ashmore, also wore white satin. It was a princess robe on simple lines, with the top and sleeves of old rose point, the satin of the robe going over the shoulders in suspender or bretelle fashion. Her full tulle veil, bordered with rose point, was arranged in an unusual but effective fashion and set off her brilliant brunette beauty. In the front the orange blossoms and lace formed a diadem above her dark pompadour, and the veil was gathered full at the back below the pompadour, instead of starting from the diadem.

The two matrons of honor, Mrs. W. Lewis Stevens of Castle Point and Mrs. Lloyd Aspinwall, (Miss Bessie Moulton,) and the bridesmaids, the Misses Guenn Matthews, a sister of the bride, Madelon Mattbews, cousin, and Miss Ruth Ashmore, sister of the bridegroom, wore delicate chiffon costumes in light coral pink, embroidered in silk flowers in the same shade. The necks were cut in the Dutch fashion, and little yoke pieces with V-shaped pieces in the front in deep cream lace were inserted. The bodices had the cross-over effect, and the short sleeves of chiffon had the long armhole, and all the edges of the gown, including the cross-overs, were bordered with chiffon bands, perhaps two inches wide, embroidered in the pink silk. Their small white hats of some thin material were round and more like inverted bowls in shape than anything else I can think of; but the arrangement of the sprays of small pink roses and ribbon and maline was such that the bowl shape was largely concealed, and they were very pretty, and much better suited to a house wedding than larger hats could be.

Miss Violett in Satin.

Miss Corinne Violett, now Mrs. W. Denison Hatch, Jr., was the third bride of Wednesday who had a home wedding, and she, too, wore a white satin princess robe, a close-fitting gown with plait in the back. This had a guimpe and sleeves of duchess point. Her veil was entirely of tule. Her young sister, Miss Thelma Violett, not yet out, was in a simple white organdy and lace frock, and carried pink roses.

New Type of Raid.

A RAID upon a groupe of sweatshops by a number of factory inspectors the other day disclosed the fact that the garments being made amid surroundings so repulsive and disease breeding as to defy polite description were not, as was at first thought, merely batches of clothing intended for firms of cheap purveyors of ready-to-wear clothing, but were garments that had been cut in a number of well known Broadway tailoring establishments. This recalled the fact that among the garments held up by the inspectors on a similar raid was the dress suit of Senator Thomas C. Platt. Quite as were more plebian garments, the best togs of Platt were labelled with the red official ticket of the state department of labor, which bears in large capitals: "UNCLEAN."

A SUCCESSFUL FLOOR POLISH

Housekeepers who have grappled with the problem of keeping their floors, furniture, woodwork, etc., clean and polished, will find in Jordan's perfection Wax Oil Polish (The Famous "Donkey Oil") the best preparation ever placed on the market for that purpose. Applied with a cloth, cleans instantly, restores lustre, hides scratches, removes stains, brings out grain and leaves no odor. Socialistic Agitation Disturbing London

Lord Rosebery Enlivens British Politics with His Picturesque Prophesy of Disaster for the Liberals.

LONDON, March 27.—The "retired raven on a withered branch," alias Lord Rosebery, has enlivened British politics very much with his picturesque and pungent remarks to the Council of the Liberal League. When he said Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's Government was "pledged to the impossible," and ventured to prophesy the Liberal Party at no distant day would find itself "squeezed out between Conservatism and Socialism," he clothed with stinging words opinions that had become widely prevalent. Those epigrammatic phrases will not be forgotten, and there isn't much doubt they will give the Premier and his associates in the Government a good many uncomfortable moments. Lord Rosebery seemed to think the Government would do both too much and too little, and so disgust the conservative Liberals and disappoint the radical Socialists. To trespass on the terminology of the fiscal protagonists, one may say the Government, with respect to its Socialism, is bound to be a "little-pigger"; it cannot be a "whole-hogger." That means, of course, dissatisfaction on both sides. If Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman undertakes to fulfill all the promises and quasi-promises made by him and in his behalf to the Socialists, the conservative, property respecting people of his party will be apt to part company with him. On the other hand, if he should be able to redeem all his pledges, he still would be confronted with Socialistic demands which would come to him in the nature of ultimata.

The Socialists are not standing still. What they will demand before they are through with their reconstruction of civilization and society one may imagine but not predict. An inkling of what the future has in store is furnished in the propositions that are to be offered for the consideration of the Annual Conference of the Independent Labor Party, which is to be held early in April.

In addition to the resolutions declaring for pensions for all who are 60 years old and over, adult suffrage, equality of the sexes, nationalization of mines and railways, municipalization of the coal supply, and the complete abolition of the House of Lords, several proposals which are quite novel will be submitted by branch societies.

The West Bromwich branch has instructed its delegates to ask the conference to declare:

"This Conference recognizes that financial magnates are, equally with land and machinery monopolists, a burden to the community, and instructs the National Administrative Council to appoint a commission of Socialists to investigate and report, through the National Administrative Council to the branches, the inquiry to include the following points: (1) Nationalization of Bank of England, and the use of same for all public accounts, local and imperial; (2) the effect of opposition to municipal Socialism by those persons controlling the money market; (3) the question of a note currency, and the abolition of the Bank Charter act."

The Moss Side branch has drawn up a proposal which deals exclusively with the money question in a sort of Soion Chase fashion. It asks the Conference to commit itself as follows:

"That in view of the fact that modern industry, commerce, and, consequently, employment, are based upon a system of credit, which is interpreted in terms of gold (a commodity which is inadequate to satisfy the popular demand for the said credit,) this Conference affirms its conviction that the demonetization of gold (and all commodities,) and the socialization of credit by a paper credit and currency system based upon actual wealth pledged as security, is the most pressing requirement of society, as it would free production and commerce from the crippling restrictions imposed upon them by a commodity currency and gold-based credit."

Another branch wants the Conference to demand the establishment of a body of trained nurses to be trained, remunerated, and supervised by the State. Another branch thinks women should be allowed to serve on juries.

There isn't much likelihood Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman would take up with all of these schemes if they should be submitted to him; but the close association of his Government with those who put them forward and his dependence upon them for support, is detracting to some extent from his hold upon the country.

The unqualified and indiscriminate support he and his fellows gave to the Municipal Socialists and trades in the recent London County Council election unquestionably has caused a serious diminution of the respect and confidence in which he formerly was held by the British electorate.

In this connection I would like to quote a few lines from Volume 25 of the "Stock Exchange Official Intelligence," in which some very impressive figures are given to show how the local debts of this country have been piled up by municipal trading. The matter referred to reads as follows:

"The latest local taxation returns which have been published show that the indebtedness of the local authorities in England and Wales has increased since 1875 by 324 per cent.—that is, from £92,820,100, the amount at which it stood at the end of the financial year mentioned, to £393,882,146, the sum which it had reached on March 31, 1904. Moreover, it is not undeserving of notice that the latter amount does not include the very substantial addition of some forty millions which has been made to the debt by the transfer to public ownership of the undertakings of the metropolitan water companies. About one-half of the total debt at March 31, 1904, represented the loan capital of local authorities and certain harbor bodies in respect of trading undertakings."

Writing about aged poor, I am reminded of an inmate of the St. Pancras Infirmary who alleges he was born in 1799. He says he formerly was in the navy and that he fought in the Crimea. He is a garrulous person, but nobody seems to know whether he is truthful. His mates are bothered most by what he tells them when he indulges in reminiscences of Nelson; they have their suspicions, but they so far have been unable to establish a case against the old man.

Debates of Duma Educating Public Opinion All Over Empire—Stolypin Inclined Toward Progress.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 6.—In the course of the past week I have talked with prominent leaders of all parties in the Duma with the exception of Premier Stolypin, whose views and hopes, so clearly expressed from the Ministerial bench, have reached you from another source.

It is admitted by all whose opinions I have asked that the situation is difficult to describe. Outside, the pitiless war still goes on between the Terrorists and the Black Hundreds of the reactionary groups, a war in which all other classes of this unfortunate country are involved. Inside the Duma the contest continues between those irreconcilable factions of the extreme Right and Left who combine to compel the dissolution of the Duma, and the Constitutionalists of all shades who recognize in the maintenance of the Assembly and its gradual development the only safeguard against a reign of terror which would prove equally disastrous whether the Anarchists or the hirelings of the autocratic power got the upper hand.

In my dilemma I appealed to Prof. Milliukoff, the leader of the Constitutional Democrats, so well known in America because of his lectures at Harvard, Chicago, and other educational centres, and this morning he favored me with the following statement:

To begin with, and to my surprise, he stated that the figures of the number of officials of the Czar recently assassinated, published in THE NEW YORK TIMES on March 16, were conservative, and, he was inclined to believe, an underestimate. In one respect, he said, never was the situation so alarming. In other days, even the darkest, there was apparent method in the campaigns of murder that were waged. Now there was apparently no central organization in either camp. He added:

A War of Extermination.

"We are confronted with an epidemic of assassination which will lead us no man knows whither. Two groups of fanatics are waging a war of extermination, apparently not caring very much that our best hopes are involved and that the nation may be destroyed in the struggle.

"Prime Minister Stolypin has not shown himself absolutely refractory to public opinion as expressed by the majority of the Duma, and his agreement to suspend, temporarily at least, the severe sentences of the military courts in purely political cases is the first triumph of our somewhat embryonic Assembly. For the last four or five days not one of the hundreds of political prisoners under sentence of death has been executed, and if the Ministry will only continue this magnanimous course an end may be put to the mediaeval conditions which recently prevailed, and all Russians of good will may find it possible to unite to save our country, devastated by a foreign war, and more much more, by civil strife.

"I am more than half inclined to trust M. Stolypin—more than many of those who often act with me are inclined to do. We should judge a man by what he does, and that we are certainly trying to do, but at the same time it is hard to forget how many times we have been deceived by his predecessors, who, each in his day and generation, spoke us fair, made us all kinds of promises, and fulfilled none of them.

"When the Duma was convened, it was quite clear that the Government proposed to dismiss the Assembly at a very early day. Then they saw a new light. Of course, there was the money question, but above all there was the tremendous increase in the Socialistic representation. We, the Red Radicals of two years ago, are regarded in Russian politics to-day as old fogies, and the tremendous pace this once conservative people are going has made the Government pause.

Value of the Duma.

"To-day, though, of course, an order for dissolution may be issued as a ukase to-morrow, M. Stolypin has, I think, made up his mind to rule with the help of the Assembly, and of course every hour that the Duma is in session is a tremendous gain to the progressive parties. A session of the Assembly open before all the world is worth in the matter of political education fifty years of secretive propaganda. We may be on the very brink of the Tarpeian Rock, but to me, since some appreciation of the force of public opinion was shown in the matter of military executions, the ground seems firmer under foot.

"Day after day, one after another, we are confronted by thorny questions of the hour—the administration of justice, agrarian reforms, financial control and responsibility. Not any have been solved, and are not likely to be in the near future, but they have been discussed. The debates are read from one end of the Empire to the other and public opinion is receiving higher education than it ever enjoyed before, and, above all, the Duma is still open and still deliberates upon the destinies of one hundred and thirty millions of people.

"Tell my friends in America to work for the Duma. It will not take us into Paradise, but it does furnish a safety valve and a clue to the labyrinth in which, through no fault of our own, we are involved. Hope? Why, I am full of it. While the dangers which menace the Russian people were never so great, never was society here so fully aroused. In this awakening I see the dawn of salvation."

SPIRIDOVITCH'S MISSION.

Is Made by Himself and Not Official, Says the Russian Foreign Office.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 6.—Gen. Spiridovitch is now in the United the interest of a movement here to form a Russo-American alliance against Japan.

The General, who retired some years ago, is an official of many Pan-Slavic societies, which have employed him as an orator and propagandist in the Balkans. At the Foreign Office I was informed to-day that his mission to the United States was self-imposed and wholly without sanction.

By the public the efforts of Gen. Spiridovitch are followed with amused interest.

STEPHEN BONSAL.

General interest was aroused here in Gen. Spiridovitch—known in New York by his full title, Count A. de Jcherep-Spiridovitch, Major General in the Russian Army—when he gave a luncheon at the St. Regis at the end of March to a large number of guests prominent in society, including the Russian Consul General and Baroness Schilling. Mark Twain made a speech at this function in which he paid compliments to the Count, and the latter replied, lauding the Czar as the friend of America and telling of his great efforts to give Russia a Constitution.

It was supposed by this that the Count was a sort of friendly emissary sent here by the Russian Government at this time of trouble with Japan. He has been introduced as President of the Slavonic Society of Russia and of the Latin-Slavic League of Paris and Rome, organizations new to most Americans.

BERLIN, April 6.—At a meeting of the German Röntgen Society this week a resolution was passed declaring that it was advisable to prevent unlicensed persons from making diagnoses by means of the rays, owing to the danger to life.

Prof. Krause of Breslau gave an address on the influence of the rays on the blood of human beings and animals, and Dr. Schmidt of Berlin on the influence of the rays on embryos.

Dr. Köhler of Wiesbaden produced kinematograph pictures illustrating the breathing of healthy and sick persons. This is the first time the inner action in the breathing movements has been demonstrated in this manner. The part played by the diaphragm and the ribs was indicated clearly, as was the participation of the heart.

The condition of the stomach in a case of cancer was shown also by the same method. If the salts of bismuth, either the subnitrate or subgallate, are administered to the patient before the pictures are taken they are reflected clearly in the Röntgen pictures. It has been proved that the action of the rays is of immense value to such patients.

SWISS PATRIOTS PROTEST.

Don't Want William Tell Chapel Made Annex of Tourist Hotel.

GENEVA, April 6.—The Swiss patriots are up in arms against the projected construction of a funicular railway at Axen Strasse in the neighborhood of the chapel dedicated to William Tell. The old chapel was crumbling in ruins when in 1877 the Swiss Fine Arts Society prevailed upon the cantonal authorities of Uri to have it reconstructed and redecorated. The society now protests against the funicular railway on the ground that its construction would be a profanation similar to that of displaying on an inn table the venerable federal pacts to draw customers.

"We recognize," says the circular distributed for signatures, "that from a spectacular point of view the neighborhood of the William Tell Chapel would not be spoiled by the funicular railway, but the dignity of the spot would be greatly lessened by running such a line. The place which the Swiss people and foreigners now visit with deep poetic emotion would become the vestibule of an inn, and legend so dear to every Switzer would become the advertisement for a modern hostelry."

SHARP ALCOHOL DISPUTE.

Manifesto of English Physicians Arouses Stormy Opposition.

LONDON, April 6.—That remarkable manifesto in defense of alcohol published in The Lancet last week over the signatures of sixteen of the most distinguished medical men in Great Britain has aroused a controversy that grows more strenuous day by day. The substance of the manifesto lies in these two declarations:

"Recognizing that in prescribing alcohol the requirements of the individual must be the governing rule, we are convinced of the correctness of the opinion so long generally held that in disease alcohol is a rapid and trustworthy restorative, which in many cases may be truly described as life-preserving, owing to its power to sustain cardiac and nervous energy, while preventing the wasting of nitrogenous tissues. . . .

"As an article of diet we hold that the universal belief of civilized mankind that the moderate use of alcoholic beverages for adults is usually beneficial is amply justified."

The signers of the manifesto expressed the belief that these opinions were shared by the leading clinical teachers and the great majority of medical practitioners. The teetotalers are now endeavoring to show that this is not true. They object tremendously to the declaration that it is the universal belief of civilized mankind that the moderate drinker usually gets good out of his tipple. They say the declaration is both untrue and cheeky.

Without doubt the controversy will receive considerable attention in America before it is quieted.

TOBACCO FREED OF NICOTINE.

France Puts Harmless Weed on Sale, but Doesn't Guarantee Flavor.

PARIS, April 6.—French scientists are discussing the question of whether nicotine can be extracted from tobacco, leaving the latter all its characteristic flavor. The Government, which has a monopoly of the manufacture and sale of tobacco, put on the market this week a variety of caporal, a common form of pipe and cigarette tobacco, which had been freed of nicotine.

This step was taken as a result of experiments on rabbits. An infusion of ordinary caporal tobacco was injected into the veins of a rabbit, which died five weeks later. A post mortem examination showed that the aorta was covered with large spots due to arteriosclerosis. Another rabbit was subjected to a similar test with nicotineless caporal. This rabbit lived two months and was then put to death. The aorta was found perfectly healthy.

Dr. Calmette Withholds Positive Assertion of Its Efficacy Pending Further Experiments.

PARIS, April 6.—Dr. A. Calmette, Director of the Pasteur Institute at Lille, and a scientist whose researches are of marked individuality, read to the medical congress now sitting at Cannes a paper of great interest on the question of tuberculosis. Dr. Calmette was not ready to announce a world-echoing discovery, as he said that much yet remained to be done in the way of experiment before it was certain that the investigations he and Dr. Guerin were making at Lille were conclusive. But he said there were hopes that man could be vaccinated by a simple process, which utilized what might be called the normal channel of tuberculous infection—that is, the digestive canal.

Drs. Calmette and Guerin at Lille and Dr. Vallee at Alfort, the site of the great French veterinary establishment, have injected animals, especially oxen and goats, possessing absolutely the tuberculous taint, preferably at an early age, (for at that period the intestine has practically unlimited absorbing power,) with a very small quantity of tuberculous bacilli rendered nonvirulent and incapable of causing lesions. These bacilli penetrate the intestinal wall and are retained by the glands, which first dissolve and then destroy them. This destruction produces in the organism the formation of protective substances, and it is beyond dispute that animals so treated later remain immune when subjected even to frequent injections or virulent bacilli, which inevitably induce tuberculosis in subjects not previously vaccinated.

It remains to be seen, said Dr. Calmette, whether the immunity so acquired is lasting enough to triumph over prolonged association with persons suffering from open lesions.

Germans Dispute Theory That Ophir Is Identical with Mashonaland.

BERLIN, April 6.—At a meeting of the Anthropological Society of Göttingen, held this week, Prof. Wagner and others discussed the theory that Ophir, the place where Solomon obtained his gold for the temple at Jerusalem, is identical with Mashonaland, as asserted by Dr. Peters, ex-Governor of German East Africa.

Prof. Wagner and others declared that the theory was untenable. Prof. Von Lushan of the Berlin Anthropological Museum said that the architectural embellishments of the ruins found by Dr. Peters were the clumsy work of negroes. He added that the evidence on which Dr. Peters mainly relied, a little clay figure pronounced by Dr. Petrie to be an image of Thothmes III., which was offered to the Berlin Anthropological Museum for $1,000, had been declined as a forgery. The well-known expert, Heinrich Schaefer of Berlin, also pronounces the figure a modern forgery.

The latest investigators repudiate the theory that South Rhodesia is the land of Ophir. They say its distance is far too great and that in ancient times it would have been impossible for laborers from a distant land to work the mines.

GERMAN SCHOOL AT SHANGHAI

BERLIN, April 6.—The Prussian Ministry of Education has decided to appropriate $10,000 for the establishment of a medical school at Shanghai. This is the result of the earnest recommendation of ex-Consul Gen. Knappe, who convinced the Government of the immense importance of such an establishment in connection with the future influence of Germany in China. The school will form a part of the existing German hospital. Herr Knappe believes that the school will have a large number of students.

Prussia recently sent books to various Chinese schools, particularly an edition of 100,000 copies of a pamphlet describing what the Chinese Commissioners saw in Germany. The work was printed in Chinese, and its object was to give the people an idea of the greatness and influence of Germany.

The medical school is intended to compete with the French establishment recently opened at Schang-Tu and the Anglo-American Medical College at Peking.

BERLIN, April 6.—The convention here of graduates of American dental schools practicing in Germany elected Julius Mielke, a graduate of the New York College of Dentistry, its President.

The question of the rights of American diploma holders in Germany was discussed. At present the practitioners are not only unable to use their American titles, but every effort is made by the German dentists to prevent them from obtaining German degrees. The matter will be presented to the American Dental Association and later to the United States Government.

Dr. Von Beust of Dresden announced important bacteriological investigations in the interest of dental science.

BERLIN, April 6.—The Mayor of Berlin, in an interview, declares that the municipal market halls are being operated at a loss, and that the question of leasing them to private concerns is being seriously considered. There are fifteen of these halls.

The question was recently discussed by the City Council. The present situation is attributed to the lower prices at which department stores are now selling foodstuffs.

PARIS, April 6.—Henry Watterson, who recently arrived here from Rome, where he had an audience of the Pope, to-day courteously gave to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent his views as to the latest developments in American politics, particularly as affected by the Presidential attitude on the railway situation and the Roosevelt-Harriman controversy. Mr. Watterson said:

"It is the merest yellow journalism, where it is not an angry outburst of crimination and recrimination. The fight over the succession in the Republican National Convention was bound to be lively under the best conditions. Mr. Roosevelt has made it implacable. In taking the bull of plutocracy by the horns he has made a new and surprising departure. The Republican Party has been nothing if not a rich man's party; time and again it has bought the Presidency.

"Now comes the President and calls a halt—for the country a most timely and salutary halt, but a halt involving nothing but combustion for the elements upon which the Republican leaders have hitherto relied for their equipment and resources in closely contested States. This would create a great opportunity for the Democrats if they were prepared to take advantage of it.

"And the end of it?" was asked.

"The era of dog-eat-dog politics which long ago swallowed the Democrats seems at last to have overtaken the Republicans. In the meantime the politicians of both parties are running to extremes. The railway magnates have only themselves to thank for the dilemma, or worse, in which they find themselves. For years the best of them have been carrying it with a high hand. Yet sensible people ought to see, and do see, that to hurt railway properties is to hurt not only the shareholders, but every man. Mr. Bryan's ownership remedy is worse than the disease. Can Mr. Roosevelt's supervision remedy be made effectual?

"The Roosevelt-Harriman quarrel is unfortunate because it introduces into the controversy extraneous matter, purely personal and partisan, which can only inflame public judgment and divert it from the main point—the regulation of the railways. It is unimportant which told the exact truth regarding Presidential promises and campaign contributions. We all know contributions were made, but as to promises they are the merest issue of veracity between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Harriman. This will probably constitute a seven days' wonder, and then make way for a new sensation."

Asked about Mr. Harriman and Mr. Roosevelt from the personal point of view, Mr. Watterson replied:

"Mr. Harriman is at a signal disadvantage. The whole crowd of high financiers in politics are a flock of sheep, weaponless, and protected only by their wool and fat. I once laughingly told J. Pierpont Morgan he ought to have a guardian; that he talked politics much as I talked finance and art, knowing quite as little out of his sphere as I out of mine.

"The President is a mighty man of war; the ablest practical politician of this or any other day. His resources are boundless, his wit keen, his popularity immense, while Mr. Harriman has nothing except his money to fight with, and Mr. Hearst will be able to tell him how impotent money is with no moral force behind it.

"Too frequent elections in the United States," continued Mr. Watterson, "especially the quadrennial Presidential elections, have reduced American politics to a circus performance between rival organizations. These allow no sideshows; third parties have never counted for much or anything. As a consequence little room is given for discrimination, and there is but a single alternative. At this moment the President heads one party and Mr. Bryan the other. Existing between the two is a great body of thinking people who would exclaim, 'A plague on both your houses!' but are powerless to make an effective or even a considerable diversion.

"I do not think Mr. Roosevelt will seek the nomination for himself. I take him at his word. His nomination, in my judgment, would mean his defeat. It would not only precipitate an overshadowing issue, but so reinforce the Democrats by Republican defections as to insure the election of Mr. Bryan."

Mr. and Mrs. Watterson will sail for America on April 12.

PRAISE FOR COLLEGES.

Prof. Brandl's One Criticism Is That Too Much Time Is Given to Sports.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 6.—Prof. Alois Brandl, head of the English Department of the University of Berlin, who visited the United States last year, writes for the Deutsche Rundschau an article in which he gives his impressions of American universities. At the Franklin celebration in Philadelphia he met professors from all parts of the country, and he remarks that there were no marked differences of dialect such as would be found in a similar gathering in England.

Prof. Brandl was astonished by the Americans' energy and lively temperament. He says he now understands the words of Björnstjerne Björnson, who after visiting the United States said he had learned more in one year than in his whole university course at home.

Dr. Brandl was much impressedwith the healthy lives and physical culture of the students, as compared with the frequent disastrous nervousness of German students before their examinations. Healso found that American students expressed their ideas clearly, while a German professor is often compelled to spend hours putting a dissertation into good style.

The professor says it is an excellent thing for young Americans to attend college, even though they are destined for business life. However, he believes that too much attention is given to sports in the American universities. He praises the libraries in America, particularly the Congressional Library, and remarks that it would have been better if Harvard University had built a library instead of the Stadium. He declares that Dr. Eliot is the foremost university President in the United States, and says he exerts great influence, not because he desires to accomplish something extraordinary, but because he desires to do something practical.

Dr. Brandl, discussing the exchange of professors between America and Germany, laments the lack of political influence exerted by the German-Americans, as compared with other nationalities. He says that the only true friends of Germany in the United States are the universities. He advises closer relations between the schools of the two countries, and in this connection says every possible courtesy should be extended to American professors by German universities.

BRITAIN KEEPING SECRETS.

No Information About Her Ships or Army to be Divulged.

LONDON, April 6.—Naval officers attached to the foreign embassies and legations are finding it almost impossible to obtain information with regard to Great Britain's naval plans. Great Britain in this repect is adopting the policy of her Far Eastern ally.

When the battlesbip Dreadnaught was launched the naval attachés did ascertain some of the details of her construction, but all possible secresy is being observed in connection with the three giant cruisers, Invincible, Inflexible and Indomitable.

The first two vessels are now under course of construction, and the Indomitable was launched recently at Glasgow.

All the naval attachés weer invited to the launching of the Indomitable. They attended, expecting that in the morning, before the general public arrived, they would have an opportunity of looking over the ship. But this was not to be, for Great Britain's policy has changed. The attachés were placed under the guidance of an officer, who kept them busily engaged inspecting the boiler shop, while they weer all eager, but too polite, to suggest visiting the Indomitable. They reached the ship's side in time to be present at the baptismal ceremony and see the vessel slids into the water, but with this exception everything, even the thickness of the armor, remained a Government secret.

The Admiralty has issued orders that henceforth the same secrecy be maintained regarding all new shipe, and that the construction staff be placed upon oath to divulge nothing.

The same secrecy surrounds the improvement in naval guns which Sir Percy Scott, the gunnery expert, has perfected and is now installing on the Mediterranean fleet. This device, it is said, greatly increases the capacity of the guns, but its nature is known only to those in the inner circle.

The Army Council also has issued more stringent regulations to prevent the doings of the army from reaching possible enemies. Officers and soldiers have been forbidden to communicate to the press any military information or their views on any military subject. They are also to be held responsible for all statements communicatsd to friends which subsequently may be published.

Circumstances Somewhat Similar to the Roosevelt-Harriman Quarrel.

DUTCH ENVOY INVOLVED

Recall of Chevalier de Stuers May Be Demanded as a Result of the Montagnini Revelations.

PARIS, April 6.—France has its pendant to the Roosevelt-Harriman difference of opinion as to a question of fact in the inability of Premier Clemenceau and M. Piou to agree regarding certain matters as Mgr. Montagnini reported them in the documents the publication of which has been the sensation of the week in Paris.

"Cherchez la femme" is a proverbial crystallization of Gallo wit and wisdom, and in thie case even holds good to the extent that a woman, and an American woman at that, was the unwitting cause of the trouble, whioh culminated in the Frsnch Premier branding M. Piou in unmeasured terms as a liar and blackmailer, and in the Catholic Parliamentary leader denouncing M. Clemenceau as playing a comedy of indignation for the public benefit, and descending to the lowest depths of political villainy.

The lady concerned is an American artist, and it was she who invited MM. Clemenceau and Piou to a luncheon party at which, according to M. Piou, M. Clemenceau indicated that he was willing to modify his attitude toward the separation law.

It was at first thought that either Miss Lee Robbins or the Marquise de Wentworth was the American woman who brought MM. Piou and Clemenceau together at the luncheon, but it is now learned on the best authority that she is Miss Cassatt, an impressionist painter of great talent. She is a sister of the late A. J. Cassatt.

An incident similar to the Sackville West affair is likely to result from the publication of the Montagnini documents. The diplomat involved is the Chevalier de Stuers, the Dutch Minister, who ten years ago figured prominently in American news because of his litigation over the custody of his daughter with his former wife, an American. The latter, after obtaining a divorce from the Dutch diplomat, married Elliott Zborowski, the victim of a fatal automobile accident on the Riviera a few years back.

Though no authoritative announcement shows any intention on the part of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs to demand M. de Stuers's recall, it is made apparent by a document which the Figaro publishes this morning that there are ample grounds for doing so. In fact, Mgr. Montagnini's revelations of the Dutch Envoy's disregard of etiquette in giving expression to his personal views about the Government to which he is accredited are, perhaps, the most surprising portion of the correspondence.

In a letter to Cardinal Merry del Val dated Jan. 10, 1905, Mgr. Montagnini tells of a visit made to him by M. de Stuers, "an excellent Catholic, who expressed deep regret at the course of politico-religious events in France, which is falling deeper and deeper into the hands of Freemasonry, which would lead it to ruin or barbarous revolution."

"M. de Stuers," adds Mgr. Montagnini, 'did not hesitate to tell me he denounced the conduct of the French Government toward the Holy See, and that its bad faith was evidenced by the pretexts under which it sought to trample upon diplomatic courtesies and usages. He added that, having read attentively the book published by the Holy See, he had noted the methods employed by the French Government against the Holy See. He concluded by making very sombre predictions as to the future of this country, and citing the examples of other states, where, notwithstanding present day tendencies, religion was free and respected."

Mgr. Montagnini's report further describes M. de Stuers as predicting the fall of the Combes Cabinet, then in office.

The Figaro to-morrow (Sunday) will publish extracts from the Montagnini papers dealing mainly with the secret reunions of the Bishops and Archbishops of France in Paris, beginning last year, to discuss Catholic action in regard to the Separation bill. It will be remembered that a large body of the most influential lay members of the Catholic body, including Ferdinand Brunetière and Comte Albert de Mun, were of the opinion that the Catholic Church in France should accept such provisions as the bill made for the continuance of Catholic worship. Mgr. Montagnini's correspondence indicates that the majority of the Archbishops and Bishops held a similar view, which, however, did not find acceptance at the Vatican.

Every one knows how the imbroglio began, Mgr. Montagnini, an official of the Papal Nunciature in Paris, being expelled from France and his papers seized as containing evidence bearing upon various phases of the conflict between Church and State. Whether the Government was justified in confiscating a diplomat's papers is still a matter of acrimonious debate, Catholic partisans declaring that the republic would not have committed such a breach of diplomatic usage if the Vatican had had an army at its back, and there being an equal division of opinion as to the utility of the step.

Before the exact nature of Mgr. Montagnini's communications to the Papal Secretary of State became known, it was suggested that they contained damning evidence of the interference of ths Vatican in the domestic affairs of the republic, but now even Radical writers in the Paris press admit that no harm could bo done to the republic by persons who, while taking a keen interest in politice, knew so little about them. "The Montagnini papers prove," says the Petit Parisien, "that the Catholic Church was interested in our elections and was in relations with the men who are in France the militant chiefs of the Catholic Party. The examination of the confiscated correspondence, then, results in the rediscovery of America."

However, the papers were seized and a Parliamentary Commission was appointed to examine them and report upon the advisability of pursuing certain Catholic leaders and prelates as conspiratore against the security of the State. Then, this week, before the commission had begun its labors, Le Figaro announced that it had the Montagnini papers in its possession and was prepared to publish them in installments. Every day since Parisians have been subjected to a perfect deluge of letters and reports written by and to Mgr. Montagnini, supplemented by extracts from the journal kept by that indefatigable diarist.

Mgr. Montagnini, while in Paris, was very much to the fore in political and diplomatic society of reactionary tendencies. When, in December last, the news that he had boen conducted to the frontier and perquisition had been made at the Nunciature in the Rue de l'Elysée reached the salons of the Faubourg Saint Germain, many aristocratic ladies lamented Montagnini's hard fate. "What, poor Mgr. Montagnini, who so adored bridge and macaroni, arrested as a conspirator!" cried tho good dames, who were accustomed to see him at dinner eating macaroni specially prepared for him or seated at the bridge table, always smiling and amiable.

Montagnini's Diary.

But Montagnini did more than eat macaroni and play bridge. He kept his ears wide open, and every night consigned what he had heard to the presumably safe keeping of his journal. And the publication of thcso papers shows the affable prciate much more of a gossip than a diplomat. One Catholic writer admits that it would be difficult "to be more foolish than this Monsignor," and that Cardinal Merry del Val, "as Director of that Papal diplomacy which has the reputation of being the most cunning in the world, could have procured better information if he had selected his correspondents from among the office boys of the newspapers."

Deputy Laffere, writing in L'Action, says that if this be the best of the occult agents of Cardinal Merry del Val, the Vatican has lost its ancient reputation for shrewdness.

"Mentagnini," it adds, "was a spy moving in high circles, but without discernment and discretion. From the amount of unimportant stuff he wrote he might have been receiving payment at so much a line."

In fact, nine-tenths of Mgr. Montagnini's gossip is of no more political importance than the paper it was written on. Some of it is decidedly trivial in every sense. Mixed up with political tittle-tattle are notes about the dispatch of two barrels of wine to a Cardinal on behalf of M. Piou, who is head of the Catholic body known as L'Action Liberale, and a reminder that another prelate would like some candy.

The Clemenceau-Piou Tempest.

Here and there Mgr. Montagnini recorded matters the publication of which, as in the case of his reference to M. Clemenceau, has aroused a tempest. Montagnini wrote to Cardinal Merry del Val in April, 1905, when the question of the separation of Church and State was on the carpet, that through the kind offices of a worthy American lady, M. Piou had been able to have two or three conversations with M. Clemenceau. On one occasion M. Piou had been next to M. Clemenceau at luncheon, and while naturally he had not been able to propose to the latter to drop the Separation bill, he had succeeded in convincing the French Minister to such an extent that it was to be hoped that M. Clemenceau would be less antagonistic to Catholics when the bill came before the Senate.

Furthermore, continued Mgr. Montagnini—and this was the part that aroused M. Clemenceau's ire—M. Piou suggested that by means of a sum of money. M. Clemenceau might be induced to favor leaving the churches in the hands of the Catholics instead of putting them in the care of the vestry-like associations proposed by the law. "M. Piou told me," added Mgr. Montagnini, "that a big sum would be required."

M. Piou denied having expressed to Mgr. Montagnini the idea that it was possible to buy M. Clemenceau's services, but this did not satisfy the French Premier, who declared in a letter published this week that he preferred to believe Mgr. Montagnini rather than M. Piou.

"What interest," asked M. Clemenceau, "could Mgr. Montagnini have in inventing such a story? On the other hand, the interest M. Piou would have in talking as Mgr. Montagnini records is patent. He is engaged in a formidable undertaking; he is leading to battle all the enemies of the republic gathered under the banner of Rome. For the first time since the 16th of May the coalition believed in success. To-day we know how the ovent would have belied that hope, but at that time it was the current conviction in the Clerical world that the Separation bill had disgusted the country and that the Republicans were courting disaster. No effort, consequently, was being spared. It was war to the death.

"Now, the sinews of war are money. A deal of money was required, and M. Piou was sparing no pains in getting it, counting particularly upon the help of the Church, the chief beneficiary in case of success."

M. Clemenceau continued, in the trenchant style peculiar to his pen, to explain how M. Piou was trying to extort money from the Vatican by holding out prospects of bribing the French Premier, Montagnini being merely an innocent and unsuspecting agent who was to play M. Piou's game with Cardinal Merry del Val.

The Famous Luncheon.

"Piou," explained M. Clemenceau, "went on to say that he met me at the house of a third person. He called upon an American woman, one of my friends, and one of the glories of our modern school of painting, who wrote to ask me if I would meet M. Piou at luncheon. I had no reason to refuse, but all that M. Piou had to say to me was to remark at coffee that he was opposed to the separation of Church and State. I did not hide from him the fact of my different opinion."

This much promised, M. Clemenceau argued that M. Piou gave Mgr. Montagnini a fantastic account of the meeting, which, reported at the Vatican, would unloosen the strings of the papal treasury in M. Piou's favor.

The President of the Council concluded his letter by saying:

"Ruffians who steal and kill deserve public esteem in comparison with the man who seeks to cast dishonor upon persons by secret, underhand methods, and hopes to clear himself by a stammering denial."

No reply from M. Piou to this was forthcoming till yesterday, when he was seen by reporters at Mende, for which place he sits in the Chamber of Deputies. He responded in part as follows:

"M. Clemenceau makes me out to be the worst of criminals, and says thieves and assassins are children in comparison with me. In the scale of criminal wickedness M Clemenceau is still my master, for only he could have invented an abomination the shame of which will rest upon him forever."

CUBAN EDITORS THREATENED.

Menaced with Death for Printing Black Hand Stories.

HAVANA, April 6.—The editors of important papers here, including the American editor of The Post, have recently been receiving letters threatening them with death if they do not cease publishing Black Hand Society stories. The letters are signed "The Sister Society."

Secret Service officers lately have arrested several members of the Black Hand Society who have been terrorizing merchants.

PARIS, April 6.—The nervous Parisians have been asking themselves each morning as they sip their coffee and munch their rolls if they would have bread to eat on the following day. For a week past reports of a general strike of bakers have been in the air.

Frequent meetings have been held at the Labor Exchange, and the organizers of the projected strike talk mysteriously of the appalling fate in prospect for Parisians. Other trades concerned in the provisioning and feeding of the city, it is said, will join the strike. Probably because of a lack of other more interesting subjects the papers have been making the most of the threatened blow to life in Paris, but in reality there is little cause for uneasiness. The Government is prepared to draft soldiers to protect the bakeries and also to make bread for the city if necessary.

However, disunion in the Socialist ranks will probably preclude any attempt to make a general strike successful. The so-called French Socialist Party, in Congress at Lyons, condemned the policy of a general strike, which is favored by another organization styled the French Unified Socialist Party, and the General Confederation of Labor, which is trying to engineer the strike, is at odds with both branches of the Socialists.

In connection with the strike rumors the Parisians received a mild shock at the beginning of the week when the greater part of the garrison at Vincennes marched into Paris and occupied the police and fire stations. The prefecture was in a ferment, as nothing was known of the reason for the invasion. Eventually it turned out to be a mistake. Secret orders had been sent from the War Office to the commander of the troops at Vincennes directing him to take certain steps under certain conditions, but this was merely a provision for eventualities. Through an error, which is variously explained, the officer commanding at Vincennes carried out the orders forthwith, the result being his removal from the command by a Military Board appointed by Minister of War Picquart.

NEW CARDINAL FOR SPAIN.

Bishop of Burgos to Get the Red Hat on April 15.

ROME, April 6.—It was announced today that the seventh Cardinal to be created at the Consistory to he held on April 15 will be Mgr. Aguirre y Garcia, Bishop of Burgos, Spain. The selection of the Bishop was decided upon in view of his meritorious career. He was to have been created a Cardinal at a later Consistory, but the Vatican authorities, considering the festivities which are to follow the birth of a child to the royal family of Spain, thought it best to include him in the Cardinals to be created at the Consistory of April 15.

It was also remarked at the Vatican that Spain has the right, through custom, to four Cardinals, while now only the Archbishops of Toledo, Barcelona, and Compostella belong to the Sacred College. The Archbishop of Burgos will make the fourth, showing, it is asserted, that the Vatican does not consider Cardinals Merry del Val and Vives y Tuto, who live in Rome, as being Spanish.

Spain, however, with 18,000,000 Catholics, has one-tenth of the members of the present Sacred College.

LONDON, April 6.—I wrote last November to a friend stationed in the Congo country and asked him to tell me frankly what basis there was for the charge that the natives are inhumanely treated by the Belgian authorities. In his reply, received to-day, my friend says:

"I am inclined to believe that there have been cases of ill-treatment of the natives, but not to the extent stated by the European press. I consider the laws of the Congo relating to natives the best I have met anywhere in Africa, and I have been in most parts of the Continent. We have in this vicinity several hundred natives working alluvial gold. They seem to me to be well treated.

"Labor is more or less forced, in that the chiefs are obliged to furnish men when required, but the men are paid mostly in cloth, the only currency here. They get more and better food than at home, including as an extra luxury a pound of meat every week, which they would never get in their villages, no fresh meat being available. In the last two weeks each laborer received a pound of the best canned meat, which cost a shilling a pound delivered here. The chef de poste alone has authority to punish natives, and he can order no more than twenty-five strokes, given without removal of the clothes. Such flogging is a pleasure compared with the birchings administered in English schools.

"The missionaries have greatly exaggerated the abuses that have taken place in the Congo in spite of the law. This is due to two reasons; first, they resent the restrictions placed on their movements in the Congo; second, they seem to regard the native man as a brother, which he is not.

"Recently a man came into my camp with both hands cut off at the wrists. My servants said that the Belgians had mutilated the man for not bringing in rubber and ivory, but when I talked to the man he said his chief did it, but what for I could not find out. He was going to the Belgian post to ask the white man to punish his chief. I don't doubt that if the missionary had heard the first yarn he would have sent it to the papers, and it would have gone all over the world.

"I saw two other natives, each minus a hand, chopped off by chiefs, they said. I don't believe a white man of any nationality would chop a hand off, but maybe the native soldiers might do it in a scrap. The Belgian system distinctly militates against atrocities, for every Belgian seems to be spying against every other Belgian, so that any one guilty of breaking the law is almost certainly brought to book.

"Of course, I don't know everything that goes on in the Congo, but from careful observation and diligent inquiry I have reached the conclusion that some very tall stories have been told about this country. Moreover, I fancy that if the Belgians never had entered the Congo there would be cruelties practiced there. The Congo chiefs, undoubtedly, are fiendish beasts. Undoubtedly they were fiendish beasts before the Belgian invasion. I don't believe the lot of the natives is any worse for the Belgians' coming. Very likely they are better off than before."

CANADA'S FUTURE ENIGMA TO BRITAIN

Dominion Apparently Drifting from England and Toward the United States.

SECRETARY ROOT'S POLICY

Ambassador Bryce's Activity Tends to Favor Mr. Root's Tariff Plans.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 6.—If the British temperament were built on the American plan there would be a good deal of excitement in this country just now about the future of Canada. Excepting the dispatches which tell of the sentimental outbursts that Ambassador Bryce and Premier Laurier indulged in at the recent banquet at Ottawa, as they discussed the relations of Canada and Great Britain, the news that comes here from both the Dominion and the United States suggests that the future of Canada is considerably in doubt.

Construing this news in the light of the present attitude of Great Britain toward her colonies, it seems to many Britishers to indicate that Canada is drifting away from Old England, and, if not actually getting closer to the United States, is acquiring a distinctly complacent disposition toward her southern neighbor.

If all we hear is true, Secretary Root, with artful cajolery, is undermining British interests in Canada. At any rate, some of the great imperialist statesmen of England think so. They reason that the Canadians will go home from the coming Colonial Conference dissatisfied with the mother country's colonial policy, and convinced that they must look elsewhere for trade arrangements necessary to their country's development—that is, to the United States. And has not Mr. Root already told them that the United States, like Barkis, is willin'?

Holding this view, the alert imperialists say that the Canadian question is the biggest thing in international politics that confronts the country at the present moment, but their pronouncement does not arouse much interest. The Government ignores it, possibly because the Premier, like other Radicals, does not care a fig what becomes of Canada. The public ignores it because it has not been awakened to it.

And so the warning movement that is under way on the other side of the Atlantic, that apparently tends toward weakening the British Empire, passes unheeded. Curiously, too, every influence the Government is exerting through its ambassadorial representative in America favors the realization of Mr. Root's plans, for it operates toward the removal of all existing obstacles to close relations between the United States and Canada. The prophecy is thus being fulfilled that Mr. Bryce, as the British Ambassador, would prove a very valuable American asset. Over here, notwithstanding what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said at the Bryce banquet the other day, Mr. Root is credited with an intention to arrange a reciprocity treaty with Canada greatly advantageous to his country. At the same time, we hear that Mr. Bryce is hard at work as a result of a determination to establish an ideal friendship between Canada and the United States, and that means, of course, his doing work likely to produce a situation favorable for Mr. Root to submit his tariff proposals.

Somebody warned Mr. Bryce, just before he sailed for America, that when he ran up against President Roosevelt and Secretary Root he would encounter a pair of politicians who, in international matters, would need to be watched as one would watch a New England farmer in the mazes of a horse deal. Maybe Mr. Bryce has forgotten the warning. On the other hand, it is suggested that he may look at the Canadian question in a broad, philosophical, altruistic way, and reason that it would really be a grand thing for Canada and America to become one country, and that the more he can contribute toward the realization of this desideratum the better he will discharge himself of his duty, not to Great Britain, but to the world. This suggestion comes from an unfriendly critic, but some of Mr. Bryce's warmest friends wonder at the eagerness he shows to furnish to the world an instance of perfect love of the international variety, seeing that, if he succeeds, his achievement will most likely have as a corollary trade concessions by Canada to the United States at the expense of Great Britain.

There ie an amusing story current here, to which reference was made a few days ago in the House of Commons. It sets forth that Mr. Root means eventually to coax Canada into adopting the same tariff the United States has made against Great Britain and all other countries, and then to establish free trade between Canada and the United States.

If that most improbable thing should be the outcome of Mr. Bryce's amiable endeavors, he very likely would come into a popularity in America that would transcend that accorded to him in his home land.

Half a Million Persons, Living in the Towns, Manage the Country— The Causes of the Revolt.

LONDON, April 6.—Dr. Moses Gaster, Chief Rabbi of the Spanish and Portuguese Jewish Congregations in England, who has exceptional knowledge of the conditions of the Jews in Roumania, said to me this morning:

"The recent outbreak of anti-Semitic and Agrarian riots in Roumania has added enormously to the misery of the Roumanian Jews. Upward of 50,000 of them, absolutely innocent, are now homeless, with starvation staring them in the face. No help can be expected from the Government. All that the Government will do for them undoubtedly will be to make them scapegoats for the outrages that others caused. In a hardly less miserable state are the peasants, who, though they constitute about five-sixths of the population, namely 6,000,000, are, like the Jews, without political rights. Half a million persons, all of whom live in the towns, manage, or rather mismanage, the country. Their activities are directed chiefly toward excluding others from sharing their political rights.

"The anti-Semitic agitation has been a political weapon ever since its introduction into Parliamentary life. No interest has been taken in the ill-fed, ill-clad, underpaid, sweated, and oppressed peasant. The absent landlords, through their agents, kept the peasants in a condition worse than slavery. Instead of coming to the relief of these oppressed people, the politicians twenty years ago resorted to the device of driving the Jews out of the villages as though they were responsible for the poor peasants' plight. The peasants, who considered the Jews their best friends, petitioned against the expulsion, but in vain. There is now not a single Jew in any village of Roumania. The legend of the oppressive Jewish publican and money lender is exploded by the simple fact that no Jew can keep a public house or live among peasants.

"Once resorted to, anti-Semitism became an institution of the country. It was always most virulent when the Conservatives were in power, the Liberals, fathers of anti-Semitism, regularly appealing to the worst passions of the mob and bringing about disturbances which invariably turned the Conservatives out of power. From the politicians' point of view it was a harmless game. The Jews were outside the law, and nobody would lift a finger to protect them. Had not the Roumanian Government hoodwinked Europe and turned the solemn treaty of Berlin into a mockery? And America was still further way. And was not Roumania helped by a jealous European diplomacy to defeat the noble efforts of Secretary Hay?

"So the Jew, handicapped, crushed, subjected to an ingenious system of economic boycott and legal discrimination, was gradually excluded from every right. He cannot be a chemist, a lawyer, or even a hawker. He cannot sell even matches. He must pay taxes and see his children excluded from the schools maintained with his money. He must serve in the army, but cannot be promoted, and so on through all forms of economic and social life.

"Last year anti-Semitism assumed a new form. Instigated by Liberal leaders, the university professors started a violent anti-Semitic crusade in the schools, which resulted in riots against the Jews by schoolboys in all the important towns of Roumania. The university students joined the movement, and, going through the villages of Moldavia, where the greatest number of Jews live, turned the natural unrest of the peasants against the Jews. There are not more, perhaps, than two Jews holding land of their own in Moldavia, and less than a dozen middlemen. The students turned the peasants against these, and the peasants, seeing that they could attack the Jew farmers with impunity, reasoned that they could treat the town Jews in the same fashion.

"Every Jewish home, shop, and institution in all the principal towns of Moldavia has been pillaged and destroyed and the Jews, whose poverty was proverbial, are now reduced to the verge of starvation. But what the agitators had not foreseen the Nemesis of history brought about. The fire, kindled for political purposes, became a great conflagration. The anti-Semitic riots turned into agrarian riots and brought ruin to thousands in Wallachia, all of whom without exception are Christians. No Jew was affected in any of the country places in Wallachia, for none lived in the country.

"It behooves all men of righteousness to raise their voices on behalf of the downtrodden Jews and sweated peasants of the civilized land of Roumania. Immediate help should be given to the starving and immediate protection furnished to the victims of Roumanian barbarism."

Famine Relief May Be Transferred from Government to Zemstvos.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 6.—Scurvy is making great strides in the famine districts. The official reports for the second fortnight of March show 1,035 cases in Ufa Province and 717 in Saratoff, compared with 438 cases in Ufa the first fortnight of March and 356 in Saratoff Province during the same period. There has been a slight decrease in the spread of typhus.

The project to transfer the famine relief from the Government to the Zemstvos has been approved by the Cabinet and will be submitted to Parliament.

FROHMAN'S PLANS FOR NEXT SEASON

New Plays for Ethel Barrymore and Maude Adams—Marie Doro a Star.

DOMESTIC PLAY BY SUTRO

To be Produced Simultaneously Here and in London—"Brewster's Millions" to be Given in England.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 6.—Charles Frohman outlined to me to-day his plans for the American season of 1907-08, which are of an unusually interesting character. Several new plays will be produced.

Capt. Marshall, author of "His Excellency the Governor," is writing a comedy for Ethel Barrymore, undertaking to give her a part well adapted to her talents. For Maude Adams will be used an adaptation of a French play, "Les Bouffons," in which Sarah Bernhardt is now appearing in Paris. Miss Adams will first appear, however, at the Empire Theatre in New York in "Peter Pan," which will be run through the Christmas holidays. In her new play she will again assume a male part. She follows in the footsteps of Mme. Bernhardt in "Les Bouffons," just as she did in "L'Aiglon." Her new play, though fantastic, has a practical side, and possesses interesting human qualities.

Mr. Frohman's new star will be Marie Doro. She will appear at the Lyceum, in New York, in the early Autumn, in "The Morals of Marcus." She will sail for London at the end of April to meet Mr. Locke, the author of the play, who will study the new star with a view to making some small changes in the character of Carlotto so as to make it fit closely Miss Doro's personality and temperament.

A new domestic play in four acts, which is being written by Alfred Sutro, will be the Frohman pièce de resistance both in London and New York. The play will be produced simultaneously in the two cities in September. Marie Tempest will head the London company. The American star has not yet been selected. The plot of the play Mr. Frohman will not divulge at present.

Among the American plays which Mr. Frohman is to produce here will be "Brewster's Millions," with an English company, Gerald Du Maurier taking the principal part. The approaching marriage of Edna May necessitates the early discontinuance of "Nellie Neil" at the Aldwych Theatre. Pauline Chase, of pink pajama fame, will be starred in London in September in a new play. A year later she will probably appear in a play that Mr. Barrie will write for her.

Miss Chase came to London five years ago, when 16 years old, as a dancer in "The Girl From Up There." She gave as her reason for remaining here when the company returned to America that the roads here were better for motoring.

Mr. Frohman says he found another successful American in Flossie Hope, who came to dance in "Nellie Neil." She will have an important part in New York next season.

The first presentation of "Peter Pan" in Ireland took place at Dublin this week. Both Mr. Frohman and Mr. Barrie were present, and the production was very successful.

FROHMAN OFFER TO CHICAGO.

If a Theatre Is Built He Will Produce the Highest Class Dramas.

LONDON, April 6.—Charles Frohman said to-day that a plan had just been matured for raising the standard of the drama in Chicago. Its success depended solely on the view Chicago capitalists took of the proposition that they construct a theatre for original productions, like the Frohman theatres in New York and London. Mr. Frohman said:

"If Chicagoans will furnish a theatre, I will agree to divide my time each year between London, New York, and Chicago, giving two or three months to Chicago. The western metropolis, I believe, now demands drama of the highest class, and if my proposals are accepted, I shall produce as many new plays in Chicago as in the other two cities.

"Miss Adams's present long Chicago run convinces me that Chicagoans should be justified in undertaking the project. I am willing to furnish the attractions and pay the rent of the theatre if Chicago capitalists will build it. I do not ask Chicago people to subscribe for seats or to subsidize the enterprise in any way whatever."

GERMAN DRAMA AND ART.

BERLIN, April 6.—Gerhart Hauptmann is at work on a new social drama. The title has not yet been decided upon.

The Berlin Philharmonie Orchestra will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary with a festival concert at the end of April. The performances will be led by Profs. Nikish, Ochs, and Schumann.

Prince Augustus William, the Emperor's fourth son, is now in Holland studying the artistic treasures of that country. Later he is going to Belgium to continue his studies there.

The scene when the Emperor addressed the crowd after the recent Reichstag elections is to be painted by Prof. Scarbina. The Emperor, it is said, intends that 1,000,000 copies of the work shall be circulated. Recently Prof. Scarbina submitted the first sketches, and the Emperor objected to them on the ground that his figure was too much in the foreground. He declared that a gray spot indicating his helmet in the window of the Schloss would be sufficient. He said all he could see of individuals in the crowd was a black spot for each person, and he felt sure the people could not see more of him. Prof. Scarbina agreed to change his sketches in accordance with the Emperor's suggestion.

In spite of the attacks made by a newspaper of Munich on Dr. Mottl, when the Director appeared at the last performance this season of "Tristan und Isolde," there was a great demonstration in his honor, which was repeated several times in the course of the evening.

Miss Maud Roosevelt, who is said to be a cousin of President Roosevelt, has been engaged for the opera at Elberfeld.

James Stokes of New York has expressed his intention of sending, for the adornment of the fambus Shell Room in the Schloss here, a number of precious stones from the Lake Superior region. It is believed that the Emperor will accept the gift. The matter is in the hands of the German Embassy at Washington.

PRINCE OF MONACO'S GIFT.

Takes His Opera Company to Berlin to Give Performances for Charity.

BERLIN, April 6.—The Prince of Monaco's Monte Carlo Opera Company is occupying the Royal Opera House here, giving a series of performances. The entire proceeds will go to charities. The Prince came here with the company, which costs him personally $11,250 daily.

Society is eager to go to every performance, and the house is crowded nightly. Princes and Princesses and others of high rank have attended. The boxes cost $80 each, and it is estimated that $62,500 was taken in at the box office for five performances.

The Prince of Monaco has become an intimate friend of Emperor Willia m in recent years. He always visits him in June, during the yachting week at Kiel, and comes to Berlin once or twice a year. The Emperor in October, 1905, bestowed on the Prince of Monaco the Great Gold Medal for Science, on the occasion of the opening of the Oceanographical Institute. The Prince is believed to have been a conciliatory intermediary between France and Germany during the Moroccan controversy.

PARIS, April 6.—After brilliant weather for four days the week-end in Paris was cold and rainy. The thousands of English visitors who came over for Easter have returned to London, and the native Parisians are again in evidence on the boulevards. Not many Americans are here yet, though every day brings arrivals from Rome and the Riviera. All the hotel keepers anticipate a good American season. The bookings ahead are above the average at this time.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, who had arranged to sail for home on the Amerika on April 12, have postponed their departure until May 3. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lorillard and Mr. and Mrs. George H. Allen will sail on the Amerika.

The Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe have been here a few days en route from Monte Carlo to Kelso Castle. They left to-day.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Leeds have arrived in their automobile from Biarritz. James Stillman has come to Paris from Rome by motor car. Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Sloane are here to remain some weeks, as also are Lord and Lady Newborough. Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Lehr, who come from Berlin, will remain in Paris some time.

The Duchess of Marlborough is paying a visit to her mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont at a Paris hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey J. Blair, Miss Blair, and Craig Wadsworth are among the other Americans here.

Mrs. Robert Lehr and Miss Lehr of Baltimore have arrived. Mrs. Neeleon Brown has returned to her Paris apartments from New York, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Gray of Detroit have arrived from Rome. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell M. Chittenden, Mrs. Walter M. Brown, and Paul Loving of Columbus, Ohio, came in a party from Monte Carlo. Mr. and Mrs. H. Scott Rokenbaugh, who wintered in Algiers, are now in Paris, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Tatham of New York have arrived from Nice. Mr. and Mrs. S. S. White of Philadelphia, with Miss D. S. Haines, arrived from Italy and will remain some time. C. F. Wright and H. B. Cram of Boston, James H. Gill of New York, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Durbur, and Mrs. George Haigh of New York, Mrs. C. E. Noble, and the Misses Noble of Morristown, N. J., Mrs. Elizabeth Mackin of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bowman of New York are among the latest arrivals.

F. N. Doubleday, the New York publisher, gave a dinner for Mr. and Mrs. Booth Tarkington. Among the other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson.

All the well-known Americans now at Cannes were present at the cotillon given by the Marquiso de Morès at the Château Della Bocca. The favors were very handsome. Among the guests were Mrs. Chauncey, Mrs. Spreckels, Mrs. Hoadley, Mrs. C. O. Alexander, Ralph Curtis, Gerald Winthrop, Harold Winthrop, and Francis Otis.

Lady Cheylesmore, née French, gave a dinner for Grand Duke Vladimir and Grand Duchess Maria Pavolvna at Cannes, where the season shows few signs of approaching dissolution.

While the Riviera season is just finishing, and the season at other resorts has not yet begun, there are many Americans here and there about the Continent. J. Pierpont Morgan has arrived at Florence, where he will remain a few days before going to Rome.

Mrs. Charles H. Marshall and daughter were received in audience by Queen Margharita at the Quirinal on Wednesday. Other Americans in Rome are Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Sidney, A. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sinclair Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Welsh, and O. A. Campbell of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Macmillan of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. W. Bourke Cockran, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas P. Kelly, and Mr. and Mrs. S. Girard Fox of New York form the nucleus of the American transient colony in Naples. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gould of New York are reported at Florence.

At Taormina, Sicily, are Mrs. Billings and the Misses Billings of New York, and the Misses Saltonstall and Miss Sherwood of Boston. Mrs. Codman and the Misses Codman of Boston have arrived at Pau.

Mrs. Henry Lane Wilson, wife of the American Minister to Belgium, has left Brussels for New York. United States Minister Collier and Mrs. Collier gave a big diplomatic dinner at Madrid this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Marquand are at Wiesbaden. Mr. and Mrs. M. Cotelle of Philadelphia at Antwerp, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Haber of New York at Dresden. Mrs. J. W. Spalding and her son Albert, the talented young violinist, are at Lucerne.

MONTE CARLO'S SEASON.

Americans Among the Easter Guests—Motor Boat Races This Week.

MONTE CARLO, April 6.—Many Americans were here for Easter. Thomas S. Walsh, his wife, and daughter have left Biarritz and will spend May in Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Kirkland have just left for Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Blumenthal made a long visit here, as did Mr. and Mrs. Dillsworth. Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt met here Mrs. Henry Kent, Mr. Webb, Mr. and Mrs. Salomon, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin, with Lord and Lady Craven. Eugene Higgins is on his yacht Varuna in Monnco Harbor.

Sir Thomas Lipton has come here especially for the motor-boat meeting, and his yacht Erin is in port, where the motor boats are darting in and out preparing for the races which begin on Sunday. It is the finest motor show ever got together, representing all the nations except America. As builders of so many motor boats it is a pity that the Americans could not arrange to be represented here.

Mr. Joseph Pulitzer is making several short trips on his yacht Honor and has taken the Villa Lisert at Cimiez for next season.

GENEVA, April 6.—The American Minister and Mrs. Clay have rented the De Rougemont house and are likely to entertain on a large scale this season.

Mrs. Justin Kellogg announces the engagement of her daughter, Marguerite, to Capt. Gotting of the German Navy, who is now stationed at Kiel.

Mrs. Francis Gallatin is going to return to New York next month.

DENIES CZAR WILL ABDICATE.

Russian Ambassador at London Says Rumors Are Unfounded.

LONDON, April 6.—Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador, issued a statement to-day, saying there was absolutely no truth in the report that the Czar's abdication was imminent.

Major James E. B. Martin, Controller and Treasurer of the Household of Prince Christian, father of Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, to-day authorized a denial of the report of the engagement of the Princess to the Grand Duke Michael of Russia. He declared it to be "absolutely without foundation."

TO TAKE CONRIED'S PLACE?

Herr von Possart Mentioned, but Metropolitan Director Isn't Worried.

BERLIN, April 6.—It is reported here that Herr von Possart, formerly Director of the Munich Opera, has received an offer of the post of Director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Herr von Possart telegraphs that no such offer has "as yet" been made to him.

Mr. Conried, who spent the greater part of yesterday at the Metropolitan Opera House, smiled when he heard of the rumor abroad that Herr von Possart might succeed him.

"There is absolutely nothing in it," he said. "It is well known that when I retire the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company loses its lease of the Opera House, as that lease is in my name. I have no thought of retiring for four years, and shall sail for Europe next Tuesday to make preparations for next season."

ARREST NEAR ROYAL YACHT.

Suspected Anarchist Caught as Queen Alexandra Reaches Toulon.

TOULON, April 6.—Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria arrived here today and went on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert. King Edward arrived last night from Biarritz.

The police arrested a German on a small steamer near the royal yacht. The man, who could not explain his presence on the vessel, was detained on suspicion of being an Anarchist.

King Edward delayed the departure of the Royal yacht in order to visit the battleship Iéna, upon which the explosion of March 12 caused the loss of about 120 men. The King expressed the sincere sympathy of himself and Great Britain with the French Navy in this disaster. King Edward then went on board the Victoria and Albert, and the royal yacht sailed for Cartagena.

CARTAGENA, April 6.—Preparations for the reception of the royal visitors have been made on a magnificent scale. King Alfonso will reach here on Monday morning immediately before the arrival of King Edward and Queen Alexandra. The visit of the latter will be of very short duration, owing to King Alfonso's anxiety concerning the condition of Queen Victoria, whose accouchement is expected soon.

LESS FRICTION IN MOROCCO.

Good Sign in Wireless Agreement—Sultan's Little Ruse.

BERLIN, April 6.—An agreement between France, Germany, Great Britain, and Spain regarding the establishment of wireless telegraph stations in Morocco has been concluded.

The Foreign Office here is much gratified at the agreement, as it is the first sign of a practical entente between France and Germany over Morocco since the Algeciras Conference.

TANGIER, April 6.—Native couriers report that the Sultan has made public at Fez a declaration to the effect that Gen. Lautey and the French troops under his command occupied Oudja by his (the Sultan's) orders, with a view to the suppression of the Pretender.

Consequently, the Moors regard the intervention of France with indifference

SHE HAD NO CREDENTIALS.

Mr. Graves Explains Why Mrs. Von Claussen Was Not Presented.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, April 6.—The American Minister, Mr. Graves, in a letter to the newspapers published to-day, explains that he declined to present Mrs. Ida M. Von Claussen of New York to King Oscar because there was no evidence that she had any royal invitation or proper credentials.

The Swedish newspapers treat the incident with ridicule.

Mrs. Von Claussen, who is the daughter of Adolph Von Claussen, a retired merchant of New York, recently complained to the State Department at Washington that Minister Graves had refused to present her at the Court of King Oscar. The Minister in reply sent to the State Department the letters Mrs. Von Claussen wrote to him on the subject. The letters were subsequently published in the United States. Mrs. Von Claussen later gave further letters to the press.

Mrs. Von Claussen, who is one of the heirs of the Byrnes estate, assumed her maiden name after obtaining a divorce from her husband, Dr. William Francis Homan.

PLAN TO CURB NICARAGUA.

Five Nations Confer in Washington on Central American Peace.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Secretary Root and Mexican Ambassador Creel today decided that the time was ripe for concerted diplomatic action to terminate hostilities in Central America. Beyond moral suasion and earnest representations neither is willing to go, but all possible pressure will be brought to bear.

The appearance in Washington of Frederico Mejía, as a Minister from Salvador, with large powers, believed also to be authorized to speak for Honduras, seemed to afford the opportunity for diplomatic action here. Therefore, a series of conferences began early to-day at the State Department, which it is stated by the participants probably will lead to a peaceful settlement of the troubles, and, moreover, one that will endure longer than the few months that frequently mark the life of these Central American compacts. The basis for the agreement is yet to be defined.

Present at the conference were Assistant Secretary Bacon, Ambassador Creel of Mexico, and Ministers Calvo of Costa Rica, Mejía of Salvador, and Toledo Herrarte of Guatemala. A notable fact was the absence of the Nicaraguan Minister, Señor Corea.

It was suggested that the purpose of the conference was to frame an agreement for the future settlement of all disputes between Central American countries and then submit this to Nicaragua and request her adhesion, failing which that country would find itself standing alone among the Central American States. It is believed that a few days will bring about important developments and that either peace will be declared or a general war will follow with Nicaragua on one side and the remaining four States on the other.

"It is highly to the interests of the republics of Salvador, Costa Rica, and Guatemala," said Mr. Mejía, "that peace should be brought about as soon as possible in order to avert the chance that the war may be extended into their respective domains. To that end the representatives of those countries here will do all they can. Meanwhile, those countries have found it expedient to mobilize troops on their respective frontiers. When I left home Salvador had about 2,500 men on the border, though it would be possible to increase that number to 25,000

AMERICANS AMONG KING'S HOSTESSES

Mrs. Baring, Mrs. Moore, and Consuelo Duchess of Manchester Entertain Him.

MRS. HARCOURT POPULAR

J. P. Morgan's Niece to Give a Series of Dinners in London—Lady Paget Again Entertaining.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 6.—The King has been good to the Americans at Biarritz this year. Ambassador Whitelaw Reid has dined with him several times, both as host and as guest. Mrs. Harold Baring, who has given some of the smartest parties at Biarritz this season, has entertained King Edward and has been entertained by him. Mrs. Moore of New York and Paris, who has been a good deal in his circle, has given several parties at which he was present, her last being a dinner for eixteen. At this dinner Sir Horace Rumbold was a guest. Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, has also been among the hostesses of royalty. Her cleverness and humor have always made her a favorite with the King. Her sister, Lady Lister Kaye, and Miss Yznaga are also prominent in society, but the Duchess rather outshines them.

Mr. Reid is quite restored to health, but will remain at Biarritz until April 20.

Many talk of Mrs. Glasgow as the coming hostess among Americans in London. She has spent two or three seasons here, either at Claridge's or in a house, and has entertained considerably, but not conspicuously. This year she will entertain in her own house, her husband having bought Lord Northcliffe's Berkeley Square property. She is now furnishing the house and expects soon to give her opening entertainment.

Mrs. Lewis Harcourt, J. Pierpont Morgan's niece, who was Miss Burns of New York, will give a series of dinners after the Easter recess of Parliament. Her husband, who has just become a member of the Cabinet, is extremely popular, and owes his popularity to no small extent to his tactful and charming wife. She is an invaluable aid to her husband in politics, and the Liberal Party looks to her to become one of its most influential hostesses.

Lady Paget is more energetic than ever since she is again able to go about. She is very lame still, but her lameness does not keep her from accepting invitations to dinners and luncheons, and she entertains a great deal in her home. She seems handsomer than ever, notwithstanding the suffering she has gone through. She is very busy just now collecting relics of James the First's time for the Jamestown Exhibition, and she has formed a committee of leading Americans in London to help her. Sir Arthur Paget is in the Riviera, Miss Leila Paget has been wintering in Ceylon.

J. Wadsworth Ritchie's marriage to Miss Daisy Hoare takes place on April 10 at Chesterton Church, Bicester. It will be a quiet affair, only the relatives and close friends of both sides having been invited. Miss Hoare is the daughter of C. T. Hoare of Bicknell, Bicester. Both families are well satisfied with the engagement. Mrs. Adair, the mother of Mr. Ritchie, will be present at the wedding. She is in much better health since her operation than for a long time before.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Richardson left London for New York a few days ago. They are great friends of First Secretary of Embassy Carter and spent a large part of their time during their stay in London with him.

The American Embassy was well nigh deserted during the Easter holidays. Mr. Carter went to Deal for the golf and took Grant Smith with him. Craig Wadsworth went to Paris. He had a very gay time with English and American friends and came back with a dreadful cold. Capt. Cloman, the military attaché, and Mrs Cloman, and Capt. Gibbons, the naval attaché, and Mrs. Gibbons went on a motor tour. Mrs. and Miss Carter went to the Continent. They are now in Paris, getting dresses for the London season, and are enjoying much social gayety. Miss Carter is as popular in Paris society as in London. She is regarded here as an extremely beautiful young woman. She was quite the prettiest girl at both Lady Dunleath's dance and at that given by Mrs. Herbert Gladstone just before Easter.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

ROME, April 6.—Regret is expressed in official circles at the fact that the continued indisposition of Queen Helena makes it impossible for her to receive Ambassador Griscom at present. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson have gone to Castel Porziano, on the seashore near Ostia, near which a royal hunting lodge is situated, and where King Victor Emmanuel will land on his return from Greece

KIEL, April 6.—The German cruiser Roon, which is to be one of the warships to represent Germany at the naval review in honor of the inauguration of the Jamestown Exposition, today received orders to sail on April 8 for Hampton Roads.

ROME, April 6.—Mgr. Baldassarri, Bishop of Imola, was received to-day by the Pope and Secretary of State Merry del Val, to whom he reported the result of the inquiries he had made regarding the miracles attributed to Pope Pius IX. for use in his beatification. The Bishop pointed out the political and religious influence which the canonization of the Pope, who was deposed from temporal power, would have throughout the world.

PARIS, April 6.—The limitation of armaments will be the subject of an interpellation of the Government at the reopening of the Chamber of Deputies, when M. de Pressense, Unified Socialist, will ask Foreign Minister Pichon to explain the instructions given to the representatives of France who are to attend the Peace Conference at The Hague.

TOULON, April 6.—All the torpedo boat destroyers here show signs of activity, and the squadron has been ordered to hold itself in readiness to go to Marseilles to carry the Corsican and Algerian mails in the event of the outbreak of the threatened seamen's strike.

PARIS, April 6.—The various Ministries intend to take severe measures against the authors of the violent manifesto of March 30, vilifying the action of the Government in refusing permission to the State employes to form trades unions, which was placarded throughout the city. Their dismissal from the service of the Government is expected.

SNOWFALL AT RACES ON BENNING COURSE

Pink Coat Steeplechase Taken by Ardette, but Essex Was Best Horse.

BILLIE HIBBS IN FORM

Finishes Easily in the Lead In Washington Nursery Stakes—Banker Heads Field.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—What was expected to be the banner day of the Spring meeting at Benning was spoiled by the unpleasant weather to-day. The air was raw and damp, and a cold wind swept the course and blew into the faces of the spectators in the stand. Before the horses went to the post in the last event snow began to fall, and the crowd went home through a storm, wet, cold, and in many cases miserable.

The race which a large proportion of the crowd went to see was the Chevy Chase Pink Coat Steeplechase, but it turned out to be a farce. Dion Kerr's Essex and Ardette were considered to have the race at their mercy. The other starter was Clarence Moore's Ordessu. Mr. Kerr declared to win with Ardette, on whom he had the mount; Robert Taylor, the Baltimore rider, being up on Essex, which was easily pounds the best horse. Ordessu and Ardette alternated in the lead to the last fence, where Ardette, under a hard drive, got a slight lead, which he maintained to the close.

The other feature of the card was the Washington Nursery, for two-year-olds, in which Woodcraft and George Howard's Billie Hibbs met again. The start was a poor one. Billie Hibbs shot across the field right after the barrier rose and out of the rest of the horses. He soon took a long lead and in the stretch came away in the easiest possible manner, winning in a gallop by half a dozen lengths. Summary.

FIRST RACE.—Selling, for four-year-olds and upward; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Azelina, 91 pounds, (McCarty.) 18 to 5 and 7 to 10, won; Anna Smith, 91, (Medlicott,) 2 to 1 and 1 to 2, second; Jack McKeon, 98, (Henry,) 13 to 10, third. Time—1:29 3-5. Gentian and Ivanhoe also ran.

SECOND RACE.—Third running of the Washington Nursery Stakes, for two-year-olds, $1,000 added; four and one-half furlongs, old course. Billie Hibbs, 110 pounds, (L. Smith,) 3 to 1 and even, won; Gun Cotton, 107, (Alex.) 15 to 1 and 5 to 1, second; Woodcraft, 107, (Englander,) 2 to 1, third. Time—0:57 3-5. Dead Gone, Teaney of Courtesy, Matches Mary, Oredon, Bilfil, Easter Bell, and Landale also ran.

THIRD RACE.—For maiden three-year-olds and upward; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Cobleskill, 99 pounds, (McDaniel,) 3 to 1 and 8 to 5, won; Pins and Needles, 97, (Medlicott,) 8 to 1 and 6 to 5, second; Grumbling Soph, 97, (Goldstein,) 5 to 1, third. Time—1:30 3-5. Salt and Pepper, Water Bearer, Harlarb, Sheridan, I Am Trying, Wayside, Knockirby, Jobstown, Canvas, Isidor Hirsch, Millstone, and Lucy Strome also ran.

FOURTH RACE.—Sixth running of the Chevy Chase Hunters' Steeplechase, for five-year-olds and upward, owned by members of recognized hunting clubs; about two miles and a half over the full course. Liverpool Jim, 152, (Ardette,) 161 pounds, (Dion Kerr,) 1 to 10 and out, won; Essex, 154, (Mr. Taylor,) 1 to 10 and out, second; Ordessu, 154, (Mr. Leith,) 8 to 1, third. Time—5:39.

FIFTH RACE.—For two-year-olds; four and a half furlongs, old course. Lady Isabel, 102 pounds, (J. Johnson,) 6 to 5 and 1 to 3, won; Queen's Guard, 104, (McDaniel,) 9 to 5 and 1 to 3, second; Blember, 99, (Hennessy,) 4 to 1, third. Time—0:56 4-5. Senator Barrett and May Time also ran.

SIXTH RACE.—Selling, for three-year-olds and upward; one mile and 100 yards, old course. Banker, 110 pounds, (Mountain,) 3 to 2 and 2 to 5, won; Water Dog, 103, (J. Johnson,) 3 to 5 and 2 to 5, second; Betsy Binford, 84, (Mahon,) 4 to 1, third. Time—1:52. Blue Buck also ran.

"Horses in Training" for 1907.

"Horses in Training" for 1907, the annual record of training statistics, compiled by M. A. Buck, editor of the Jockey Club's official newspaper, The Racing Calendar, has been issued for the coming turf year. The names, ages, and pedigrees of more than 4,500 race horses in training are included, in alphabetical order, in the book, together with full data of 693 separate racing stables, under the names of the owners, with trainers and jockeys added. Other features of the book are all registered names for two-year-olds of 1907, the rules of racing, scale of weights records for important stakes, racing dates for 1907, and the fastest time records.

New Orleans Steeplechaser Killed.

NEW ORLEANS, La., April 6.—Gould, a steeplechase horse, which has won many races here, broke his leg while taking one of the jumps in the long course steeplechase at City Park to-day. He was destroyed.

The Lyric Handicap, $1,000 added, was won by Lancastrian, the favorite, by about six lengths. The fifth race furnished a great finish, three horses crossing the line heads apart. Posing, who had the rail, won.

Rapid Water's Handicap.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., April 6.—Rapid Water gained an easy victory over a clever field in the Rose of Ormonde Handicap, the feature to-day at Oakland. Vox Populi was the favorite throughout the betting, but was beaten when he came in for strong support. Ruby led most of the way, but Rapid Water passed her in the stretch. Braggart took the Morenda Handicap for two-year-olds. Thirty-four regular and two field books drew in, which is a record for Oakland.

"MIDDIES" WIN BOAT RACE.

Score Hollow Victory Over the Georgetown Eight on the Severn.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 6.—The eight-oared crew of the Naval Cadets to-day scored an easy victory over the Georgetown University eight in the first boat race of the Middies' schedule for the season. They pulled away from the Washington University boys and won by six lengths over the two-mile course. The time was slow for the distance and far behind the record, but the conditions were so unpropitious that there was ample excuse for the poor showing in the matter of time.

There was a cold wind blowing in from the sea that made good rowing difficult at best, and bucking the current, it whipped up a choppy sea that was disconcerting. It was impossible to row smoothly under the circumstances, and the Middies, more accustomed to the vagaries of the course than their college rivals, had decided advantage. The University boys were severely blown by their efforts, but the Middies finished apparently as strong as they had started the race.

The official time for the distance was 11 minutes and 51 seconds, while the record for the course is 9 minutes and 30 seconds.

The Cadets are confident that their crew will get permission to race at Poughkeepsie in the big inter-collegiate regatta on the Hudson for the first time in the history of rowing at the Academy. Their confidence is based on a practical pledge that, provided they make an especially good showing against Yale and Columbia in the two races to be rowed, they will be allowed to remain out of the Summer cruise and race in the Hudson regatta.

Yachts and Yachtsmen.

E. J. Steiner's new cruising motor boat Wanderlust, which was launched early in the week at Morris Heights, will be ready for delivery in two weeks and will be a notable addition to the fleet of the Motor Boat Club of America. She is 68 feet over all in length, with 12 feet beam and 3½ feet draught. The owner's stateroom forward is commodious and fitted in white mahogany. The motor is a 60 horse power four-cylinder gasoline engine.

The committee of the Yacht Racing Association of Gravesend Bay having in charge the development of the dory class during the coming season have had a design prepared by C. D. Mabrey for a boat to cost complete $225. The boat is a non-capsizable type, with 260 feet sail area, rigged to be readily handled from the tiller and is expected to be speedy. The price includes spars, sails, oars, anchors, cables, and all other fittings. Two boats from the design are already ordered, and it is expected that with the boats building from other designs there will be at least a dozen new dories on the Lower Bay.

George Higgin's 30-foot yawl, building from Small Brothers' design, will probably be entered in the 400-mile race of the Harlem Yacht Club over the course from City Island around Montauk Point and the Northeast Lightship off Cape May and back to Gravesend Bay for the Brooklyn Yacht Club Challenge Cup.

The dates for the races for the Quincy Challenge Cup have been fixed for Aug. 12, 13, and 14, and will be confined to sonderklasse boats that remain on this side after the trial races for the selection of the American team to go to Kiel.

Morgan Barney has an order for a 91-foot gasoline cruiser for W. H. Briggs to be named the Elarsy. It will be built at Baylee's Fort Jefferson yard.

MEADOW BROOK'S SWIFT RUN.

Mrs. Ladenburg and Misses Mills and Bryce Finish with Hounds.

A goodly number of hunters started yesterday afternoon in the Meadow Brook Hunt Club's run over the fields and hills of Eastern Naesau and Western Suffolk Counties. But only eleven of the starters finished, the horses of the others having become winded because of the swift pace. Notwithstanding the fast pace, however, all three of the women entrants finished well in the front. These were Miss Gladys Mills, Miss Cornelia Bryce, and Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg.

The hounds were released on the Terrahan farm, in Woodbury. They took the scent of the drag at once and followed it at a pace that sent the blood swiftly through the veins of the eager hunters. The ground was firmer, the air was cooler, and conditions better than during the last hunt.

Every one entered with zest into the difficult task of following the hounds over a rough country full of fences. But the forty-odd jumps were taken without a single cropper, and, while the winding of their hunters compelled some of the riders to abandon the chase at the first check, which occurred at Dix Hills, the run was considered a successful one.

Those who finished were the women riders named and W. C. Hayes, J. P. Grace, W. Scott Cameron, Singleton Van Schaick, H. A. Drier, Samuel Willets, M. F. H., and the two whips, William Davy and William Hayden.

The programme for this week includes the following meets: Tuesday, 3:30 P. M., Horsefields Pons, Herricks, near Hyde Park; Thursday, 3:30 P. M., Plain Edge Church, Jerusalem; Saturday, 3:15 P. M., depot at Roslyn.

Efforts are being made to have two live fox hunts Wednesday and Friday of this week.

CRESCENT WINS AT LACROSSE

Columbia University Players Easily Defeated by Amateur Champions.

The Crescent Athletic Club lacrosse team had no trouble in winning from the representatives of Columbia University yesterday, at Bay Ridge, the score being 7 to 1. It was the first game that the amateur champions of the United States had appeared in this season, and the contest was also the maiden effort of the Morningside students in an actual conflict. Both teams showed a lack of practice, the Crescents, with their patched-up aggregation, performing far below their usual ability. The Varsity boys were energetic, but in checking and throwing were weak. The Crescents took advantage of all the errors of their opponents and wound up the game with a substantial victory. In the first half they scored three goals to nothing. The line-up:

Crescent A. C., 7.	Position.	Columbia, 1.
Rose	Goal	Bangs, Trott
Allan	Point	Trott, Sellen
Doyle	Cover point	Turpin
Dobby	First defense	Baum
Kelley	Second defense	Lisman
Liffiton	Third defense	Friedman
V. Kennedy	Centre	Meltzer
Dr. Madden	Third attack	Highman
Gladner	Second attack	Golden
D. Kennedy	First attack	Renner
O'Rourke	Outside home	McKinlay
Simpson	Inside home	McOil

Goals—Simpson, (2,) Gladner, (1,) O'Rourke (1,) V. Kennedy, (1,) D. Kennedy, (1,) Renner, (1.) Referee—Robert J. Wall. Time of halves—Twenty minutes.

Stevens Scores at Lacrosse.

In a fast game of lacrosse Stevens Institute defeated the New York Lacrosse Club yesterday at Hoboken by the score of 4 to 1, which would have been much larger but for the fine work of Briner.

All of Stevens's scoring was done in the first half, Starzenski making the first goal directly after the face off. After several futile attempts to shoot past Briner, Wiley finally made the second goal. At the end of the half two more goals were added by Spencer and Drinkwater.

In the second half the New York Lacrosse Club men took a brace and Stevens was unable to score, while Hughes made the only tally for the New York Lacrosse Club. The line-up:

N. Y. L. C.	Position.	Stevens.
Briner	Goal	Sturken
Steinert	Point	Van Bueren
Rugge	Cover point	Demereat
Gutsgell	First defense	Youmans
Hughes	Second defense	Helms
Jacobi	Third defense	Correa
Foran	Centre	McGarrey
Collins	Third attack	Spencer
Hickok	Second attack	Roberts
Sauqui	First defense	Starzenski
Moran	Outside home	Wiley
Berry	Inside home	Drinkwater

Goals—Starzenski, Wiley, Spencer, Drinkwater, Hughes. Referee—Mr. Davis, Stevens. Goal umpires—Mr. Norris, Stevens; Mr. Rosenkrantz, New York Lacrosse Club. Timekeepers—Mr. Shuck, Stevens; Mr. Innies, New York Lacrosse Club. Time of game—Twenty-five and twenty minute halves. Forty-five minutes.

C. C. N. Y. Lacrosse Team Shut Out.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 6.—The Mount Washington lacrosse team defeated the College of the City of New York this afternoon, 9 to 0. The victory was a great one for the mountaineers, as it was the first game of the season, while the visitors have been playing for some time with the best clubs in the East. Mount Washington excelled in speed, stick, and team work, but especially in agility in dodging, passing, and shooting. The first half was played very well by the New Yorkers, but they could not keep up to the pace set by the local team. The most spectacular feature was a run by Hudgins.

WOOD TAKES GOLF MEDAL.

Defeats Herreshoff in Final by Three Strokes at Medal Play.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 6.—Warren K. Wood of Homewood won the gold medal to-day in the annual united North and South amateur golf championship tournament, defeating Fred Herreshoff of Garden City in the final 36-hole medal play by three strokes. The professional tournament resulted in a victory of Alexander Ross after he had tied with Donald J. Ross at 152 for the 36 holes. Wood's winning score was 157 and Herreshoff's 160. The cards of the two amateurs follow:

Warren K. Wood—Morning:

FENCERS QUALIFY FOR CHAMPIONSHIP

New York Club Scores Greatest Number of Preliminary Bouts.

THREE EVENTS DECIDED

Turn Verein and N. Y. A. C. Get Representatives on Teams for Foils and Dueling Swords.

Some sharply contested bouts were witnessed last night at the Fencers' Club in Windsor Arcade, when the contestants for the National fencing championships competed in the preliminary bouts to pick the eligibles for the National tournament, to be held in this city on April 26 and 27 at the New York Athletic Club. Ten men fenced for the honor of being selected on the team for foils, while the dueling sword event brought out eight swordsmen, the entries being exceptionally large, as only the best fencers in the respective districts try for championship positions.

The Fencers' Club came out of the contests with the chief honors. L. Lage, who is also the leading Columbia fencer, and G. H. Breed won positions on both the foils and dueling swords teams, Lage leading the contestants in foils, winning four bouts, while Breed got three. The New York Athletic Club got one representative on the foils team, V. Curti, and the New York Turn Verein also got one, Paul Bainbridge. These four men were all who qualified in foils, and but three qualified in dueling swords, Paul Benzenberg of the Turn Verein being the third man. The contestants for the different teams and the results of the bouts are:

Foils.—F. Lage, G. H. Breed, H. A. Hirsch, L. C. Curran, Fencers' Club; V. Curti, New York A. C.; Paul Bainbridge, G. Reinherr, Paul Benzenberg, New York Turn Verein; G. T. Conti, Internestimal Fencers' Club; Emil Glaser, unattached.

Dueling Swords.—G. H. Breed, Dr. G. A. Lawrence, F. Lage, J. De Costa, Fencers' Club; Paul Benzenberg, New York Turn Verein; Dr. S. N. McCullagh, V. Conti, New York A. C.; Emil Glaser, unattached.

Sabre.—Dr. G. A. Lawrence, Fencers' Club, Emil Glaser, unattached.

Foils.—Lage defeated Curti, Reinherr defeated Hirsch, Lage defeated Curran, Curti defeated Hirsch, Benzenberg defeated Glaser, Reinherr defeated Curran, Breed defeated Conti, Lage defeated Hirsch, Bainbridge defeated Glaser, Benzenberg defeated Breed, Curti defeated Curran, Bainbridge defeated Conti, Lage defeated Reinherr, Bread defeated Glaser, Curran defeated Hirsch, Curti defeated Reinherr, Benzenberg defeated Bainbridge, Curti defeated Glaser, Breed defeated Bainbridge, Conti defeated Banzenberg.

Total—Lage, 4; Curti, 3; Breed, 3; Bainbridge, 3; Reinherr, 2; Benzenberg, 2; Conti, 2; Curran, 1.

Dueling Swords.—Renzenberg beat Breed, Lawrence, McCullagh, Corti, Glaser, and de Costa; Lage defeated Benzenberg, McCullegh, Curti, Glaser, and de Costa; Breed defeated Lawrence, Glaser, Corti, de Costa; Lawrence defeated Lage, McCullagh, Glaser, and de Costa; McCullagh defeated Breed, Glaser, and de Costa; Glaser defeated de Costa.

Total—Benzenberg, 6; Lage, 5; Breed, 5; Lawrence, 4; McCullagh, 3; Curti, 3; Glaser, 1.

Sabres.—Dr. Lawrence defeated Glaser. Those who qualified in the different events were:

Foils.—Lage, Curti, Breed, Bainbridge, W. D. Lyon eligible without competition.

Dueling Swords.—Breed, Benzenberg, Lage, Sabres.—Dr. Lawrence, H. Johnson, A. J. Anderson, and T. J. Byrne, New York Athletic Club, eligible without competition.

WOMEN'S TEAM FOR ENGLAND.

Miss Sutton Will Play in Indoor Tennis Tournament Here.

Miss May Sutton, the California girl who in 1905 won the English lawn tennis championship, is to again play in this city. She is scheduled for the most important contests of the series of indoor tournaments at the St. Nicholas Rink. The meeting will begin next Thursday, April 11, and continue until Thursday, May 2.

But sharing the importance of the appearance of Miss Sutton comes the revealing of plans for international matches with Englishwomen. The American champion is again to make a conquest of the foremost titular meetings of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

It now appears likely that a team of American women may invade the English courts, captained by Miss Sutton. All of the women whose names are coupled with this project will be competitors in the indoor matches about to begin. The list includes Miss Helen Homans, the National champion; Miss Elizabeth H. Moore, four times winner of the National honors; Mrs. Barger-Wallach, the runner-up of last year, and Miss Marion Fenno. The St. Nicholas tournaments are being conducted by Mrs. Barger-Wallach, and according to those who are conversant with the proposed plans the final of this indoor series will virtually be a singles tournament to decide upon the make-up of an American woman's lawn tennis team.

It has been rumored for some time that there was a probability of two or three of this group of players accompanying Miss May Sutton abroad this year, since the plans for the international cup matches between the English and American women had apparently fallen through for the season of 1907. The intention of such an American invasion was to more firmly cement the cordial relations existing between the players of the two countries, and to make certain of English women coming over either the latter part of the season at hand, or at least to accompany the famous Doherty brothers, who are scheduled to play upon American courts during the season of 1908.

Champion Tennis Player Weds.

LONDON, April 6.—Miss D. K. Douglass, champion lawn tennis (singles) player, was married at Ealing this afternoon to R. L. Chambers. It is expected that the champion will not defend the title this year, which will deprive May Sutton of California of the chance of playing a rubber match with the English expert, who was beaten by Miss Sutton in 1905, but who wrested the championship from the American in 1906.

Brooklyn's New Tennis Tourney.

The first big tennis championship tournament of the season will be played on the courts of the Kings County Tennis Club in Brooklyn on May 20 and the following days. The event, which is a new one, will be for the championship of Long Island. The Eagle cup, which will be held by the winner of the tournament, must be won three times before becoming the property of any player. Among the entrants are Frederick G. Alexander, Frederick B. Alexander, T. R. Pell, Raymond Little, A. B. Westfall, Wylie C. Grant, and Charles Bull, Jr. It is the initial tourney of the season, and will be followed by the metropolitan championship series, and every effort will be made to secure a record-breaking list of entries.

SCHOOLBOYS RACE IN TANK.

Elementary Lads Hold First Meet In the Interior Baths.

The boys of the elementary schools of Greater New York participated in their first swimming meet yesterday morning, and showed a proficiency that surprised quite a large number of spectators, especially the experts who watched the youngsters closely. The races were decided at the Interior Baths, 232 West Sixtieth Street, the pool being 60 feet long and 30 feet wide. The events were divided into classes according to weight, and the finishes generally were very exciting. Two victories were carried off by School No. 6 of Manhattan, while No. 128 of Bath Beach was the runner-up upon two occasions. The young swimmers fairly reveled in the sport, and when it was all over were anxious for more. Summaries:

80-Pound Class.—Twenty Yards—Won by Bourgognon, No. 77; Marcia, No. 87, Bronx, second; Shapiro, No. 109, Manattan, third; Pierce, No. 166, Manhattan, fourth. Time—0:15 2-5.

95-Pound Class.—Forty Yards—Won by McAuliffe, No. 6, Manhattan; Webb, No. 129, Brooklyn, second; Barretto, No. 27, Manhattan, third. Diechna, No. 6, Manhattan, fourth. Time—0:30.

115-Pound Class.—Sixty Yards—Won by McDonough, No. 6, Manhattan; Ruth, No. 128, Brooklyn second; Lurch, No. 70, Manhattan, third. Barberie, No. 128, Brooklyn, fourth. Time—0:48 2-5.

Unlimited Class.—Won by McLaughlin, No. 87, Manhattan, Vandusen, No. 128, Brooklyn, second; Behring, No. 24, Manhattan, third; Kelley, No. 128, Brooklyn, fourth. Time—0:57.

Relay Race, teams of four, each boy to swim forty yards.—Won by No. 77, Manhattan; No. 3, Brooklyn second; No. 44, Manhattan, third; No. 87, Bronx, fourth. Time—2:07 4-5. Referee—Mr. Wilson of physical department of Stuyvesant High School.

NEW YORK A. C. LADIES' DAY.

Brilliant Throng Entertained at Home of the "Mercury Foot."

Athletically inclined young women and those whose interest takes the form of mere applauding thronged the clubhouse of the New York Athletic Club yesterday afternoon. The occasion of their visit was the fifty-ninth ladies' day of the "Mercury Foot" organization, and the big house was turned into a veritable bower. The women vied with the decorations in the colors of their elaborate gowns, and they wandered from the aquatic sports in the swimming tank in the basement, through the musical entertainment provided on the café floor to the vaudeville show that held the stage in the gymnasium. By those who had witnessed many ladies' days it was declared that in every respect the assemblage was the most brilliant that had ever filled the house at Central Park South and Sixth Avenue.

The only real athletic features were those of the swimmers in the tank. Here C. M. Daniels, the athlete who has the record-creating habit well developed, failed to accomplish his usual trick to the disappointment of the attending spectators. Daniels endeavored to create a new record for the 100 yards. He now holds the record of 58 seconds, but his time yesterday was 59 4-5 seconds. The one thing which the women could not understand was how Daniels was enabled to swim at all with his head under water all the time, the peculiar feature of the crawl stroke. Actually this is not so, but it appeared to be to the wonderment of the fair spectators. Daniels also competed in the relay race, but fouled, so that the opposing team won.

Tilting contests, sack races, and exhibitions in fancy swimming by Gus Sundstrom filled out the programme with novel and amusing features. There was an abundance of dash and vivacity about it from start to finish that evoked a full measure of applause. The summary:

100-Yard Dash, Handicap.—First Heat—Won by John Lawrence, (9 seconds;) N. C. Manley, (13 seconds,) second. Time—1:06 4-5. Second Heat—Won by E. H. Trubenbach, (23 seconds;) John Ruddy, (17 seconds,) second. Time—1:00 3-5. Final Heat.—Won by E. H. Trubenbach, (23 seconds;) John Lawrence, (9 seconds,) second. Time—1:18 4-5.

100-Yard Dash, Contest C. M. Daniels for new record.—Won by C. D. Trubenhach, (8 seconds;) C. M. Daniels, (scratch,) second. Time—0:59 4-5.

50-Yard Dash, for Members' Sons.—First Heat—Won by H. C. Jones, (10 seconds;) A. De Lacey, (scratch,) second. Time—0:43 4-5. Second Heat—Won by J. J. Couchois, (7 seconds;) F. McAuliffe, (4 seconds,) second. Time—0:42 4-5. Final Heat—Won by J. J. Couchois, (7 seconds;) H. C. Jones, (10 seconds,) second; F. McAuliffe, (4 seconds,) third. Time—0:39.

50-Yard Dash, Back Stroke Against Time.—Otto Wahle swam the distance. Time—0:42.

50-Yard Dash, Challenge Race for Members' Sons.—Won by C. Le Roy, (6 seconds;) H. A. Aldrich, (scratch,) second. Time—0:33 2-5.

25-Yard Sack Race.—Won by Joseph Ruddy, W. B. Gnodwin second. Time—0:45 2-5.

Tilting Contest.—Final Heat—Won by C. D. Trubenbach, (black horse,) defeating Joseph Spencer, (white horse.) Time—6:07 2-5.

250-Yard Relay Race.—Won by second team, E. H. Trubenbach, David Hesser, E. H. Wenck, Jr., W. B. Goodwin, and C. D. Trubenbach; first team, H. Winship, L. Manley, N. C. Manley, Joseph Spencer, and C. M. Daniels, second. Time not taken.

Fancy Diving Contest.—Walter Lee and Joseph Ruddy. No decision.

Wales Takes "Soccer" Championship.

NEWCASTLE, England, April 6.—The final game in the International Association football series was played here to-day between England and Scotland, and resulted in a draw, the score standing 1 to 1. Wales thus takes the championship for the first time in the history of these matches. An enormous crowd of people witnessed the game, it being calculated that 30,000 persons came here from Scotland alone.

Taylor to Try for World's Record.

J. B. Taylor, the famous University of Pennsylvania runner, expects to run in the world's Olympic championships to be held in England. Two years ago, while a freshman in Pennsylvania, Taylor toured England, but the climatic conditions did not agree with him because he competed two days after landing from a stormy trip on the ocean. This upset the Red and Blue runner, and while he recovered just before he left and did some remarkable running, he failed to show his real form. Taylor now holds the intercollegiate record for a quarter of a mile, and in his next race with Harry Hillman of the New York Athletic Club he expects to create a new mark for 600 yards, but his desiree most of all to break the quarter-mile record, held by M. W. Long, of 0:47, made on Oct. 7, 1900. After the intercollegiate meeting the race with Hillman and the tour to the Olympic championships he expects to try for Long's record. He will have the pick of the Pennsylvania team to work with, and will attempt to beat the world's record for a quarter of a mile.

The employes of the Hecla Iron Works have organized a fishing club, and will have their first trip on Sunday, April 28, on the motor yacht Viola from the New Hotel Canarsie landing.

Blackfish begin to bite about the middle of April. The early fish are usually small, especially in the bays. In May the big ones begin to put in an appearance. Among the best blackfish locations are Seabright, Iberia Wreck, Black Marrion, Wreck, and the Stona Pile.

The Gee Whiz Club of Canarsie has organized for the season, and a committee has been appointed to arrange sailing dates.

The Newark Belt Club has been permanently organized with George A. Endersby, President; Charlee K. Kenyon, Vice President, and S. T. Mapes, Secretary and Treasurer.

Eels are coming from the mud, and a good season is to prospect. Catching eels is an important industry.

Surf-casting for striped Rockaway Beach has been fairly good. Codfish have been caught in numbers. John Suthgardt and James McMahon caught five codfish, some conger eels, and flounders in three hours last week.

The Charles Bronni Fishing Club has chartered the motor yacht Sophia Harms for another season and has arranged the following schedule:—April 28, May 26, June 30, July 28, Aug. 25, Sept. 29, Oct. 27, and Nov. 24.

Thirty-six shad were caught in a net at Lawrence Harbor, N. J. There is no law governing shad fishing in that bay.

J. F. Forrester, Ed Johnson, E. D. Burch, and L. Whidman caught eighty-three flounders in Broad Channel last week. The cold weather drove them back to New York.

The bill to change the trout season in Litchfield County Conn., from April 1 and July 1 to April 15 and July 15 is likely to pass the Connecticut Legislature. The bill is designed to improve fishing by giving the fish two weeks extra to mature.

The Acme Fishing Club has elected the following officers: President—John Anderson; Treasurer—G. G. Goepfert; Secretary—John Neu; Captain—John Andres; Mate—H. Erath, and Sergeant at Arms—Henry Schell. The club has chartered the Rosabelle for fifte

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Edward H. Harriman's purchase of the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-second Street was the only event of the week in the real estate market which afforded much relief from the generally routine character of current trading. As to the outlook for the immediate future, one hears in brokers and operators' offices two widely divergent sets of opinions. On the one hand are those who say that for all property to be classed in any way as desirable owners are still stiff in their prices to a degree not calculated to promote any great activity. The general complaint of brokers just at present is that they are compelled to spend too much time in trying to get $300,000 for $200,000 properties. As against this, the President of one of the largest operating companies said last week in the course of conversation that he had submitted to him within a few days more properties with reasonable prices attached to them than at any time in several months. There is, of course, nothing to indicate any general recession in value or to support the belief expressed in some quarters that "real estate has got to come down," but the fact that some owners for one reason or another are showing a disposition to modify their expectations a little may lead to some increase in business during the next few weeks.

Recent developments on Fifth Avenue having made it practically certain that business will soon reach Fifty-first Street, Mr. Harriman's purchase of the northeast corner at Fifty-second Street came as a genuine surprise, while those who recalled that this property had been bought successively by the late James Henry Smith and Commodore Bourne as the site for a fine residence were somewhat skeptical as to the announcement that Mr. Harriman will build there. This plot, however, thanks to the Vanderbilt holdings, is reasonably sure to be free from any very close encroachment by business—at least beyond the time when this topic will be a matter of any very deep concern to Mr. Harriman—and another handsome mansion will probably be erected in the near future to complete the imposing group on the four corners at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-second Street.

The sale of the northeast corner of Park Avenue and Seventy-fourth Street for improvement with a twelve-story co-operative apartment house was only another indication of the rapidly increasing popularity of structures of that type. Having had its earliest trials in the studio apartment houses, the success of this idea seems now to have been fully demonstrated with regard to high-class apartments for general use and without special features. Its application to the middle and possibly the cheaper grades of multiple housings promises to be one of the interesting real estate problems of the next few years.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

The list of auction sales for this week, although somewhat longer than the average, contains no individual items of great importance with the possible exception of 411 Sixth Avenue, northwest corner of Twenty-fifth Street, which is one of several parcels to be sold on Wednesday by Joseph P. Day by order of the owners and executors.

Other properties included in this offering are the ten-story building, 40 by 100, at 201 and 203 Seventh Avenue, near Twenty-seventh Street; 62 and 64 Centre Street, near Worth Street; 472 Ninth Avenue, near Thirty-sixth Street, and 310 to 314 West 118th Street, near Manhattan Avenue. Mr. Day will also sell at the same time several plots on Steinway Avenue and Albert Street, Long Island City.

Another executors' sale, also scheduled for Wednesday, at the stand of Bryan La Kennelly, covers the five-story dwelling 312 West Seventy-third Street, near Riverside Drive, and opposite the Schwab mansion. Other voluntary sales listed by Mr. Kennelly for the same day are the six-story loft building at 129 to 133 West 133d Street, a plot at the northeast corner of Wadsworth Avenue and 175th Street, and the two flats 1,472 and 1,474 Washington Avenue.

On Tuesday the tenement 218 Monroe Street, adjoining the southwest corner of Scammel Street, will be put up by Richard V. Harnett & Co. at executors' sale.

Partition offerings scheduled for Wednesday involve properties of more or less speculative possibilities, among them being 267 West Twenty-third Street, near Eighth Avenue, and the vacant block front on the south side of 161st Street, between Gerard and Walton Avenues, together with an adjoining plot.

Upper east side properties are prominent among the week's foreclosures. Tomorrow Hugh D. Smyth will sell the block front on the east side of Second Avenue, between 100th and 101st Streets, as well as a parcel, 148 by 100.11, on the north side of Ninety-ninth Street, between First and Second Avenues. The northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Ninety-seventh Street, 100.11 by 95, is also to be sold to-morrow by Auctioneer Day, while on Tuesday James L. Wells will conduct the foreclosure sale of the southwest corner of Madison Avenue and 119th Street, 80.11 by 75.

ACREAGE DEAL AT BAYSIDE.

Tract of Ninety-three Acres Bought by Syndicate for Development.

The McKnight Realty Company reports the sale of the Richard Bell property, at Bayside, Queens, to a syndicate. The property consists of ninety-three acres, extending from Bayside to Auburndale, parallel with Broadway, the main highway of the North Shore, which is soon to be widened from Flushing to the city line. The McKnight Company sold this property for Mr. Bell a year ago to Stuart Hirschman, who is the seller in the present deal. The syndicate has been incorporated under the name of the Bayside-Flushing Company, and has announced its intention of developing and improving the tract at an expense of $200,000. Congressman George J. Smith, formerly Treasurer of the American Cigar Company and now Vice President of the Acker, Merrall & Condit Company, is the President of the Bayside-Flushing Company.

The Rickert-Finlay Realty Company has sold in Broadway-Flushing, to David T. Lawlor the plot, 60 by 100, on the west side of Eighteenth Street, 320 feet north of State Street; to Frederick Schoenebnum the plot, 40 by 100, on the west side of Eighteenth Street, 100 feet north of Cypress Avenue, and to James McGonigle the plot, 60 by 100, on the east side of Nineteenth Street, 75 feet south of Mitchell Avenue.

In Douglas Manor the company has sold to Dr. Victor Neesen the plot, 130 by 100, on the west side of the West Drive, 177 feet north of Bayview Avenue; to Caroline M. Dithridge the plot, 60 by 100, on the south side of Manor Road, 62 feet west of Douglas Road, and to L. H. Semper the plot, 80 by 100, on the south side of Kenmore Road, 100 feet east of the Shore Road.

The company has also sold, in Westmoreland, to Henry D. Pattison the plot, 60 by 100, on the west side of Bayview Avenue, 200 feet north of Cutter Avenue, and to Bertha Bennett the plot, 40 by 100, on the west side of Bayview Avenue, 45 feet south of Summit Avenue.

At Hollis, directly opposite the station of the Long Island Railroad's steam and electric lines, the McLaughlin Real Estate Company has begun work on the improvement of its property a sixty-eight-acre trace. The property lies between Hollis, Farmers, and Atlantic Avenues and South Street. The McLaughlin Company has also planned to develop Hollis Manor along modern lines. The first contracts for the developing, involving $50,000, was awarded last week to the H. T. McLaughlin Company, and work will be begun at once on the laying of sidewalks and curbs, macadam and gravel streets.

Frank S. Whalen has sold for H. A. D. Holiman to Edward J. Brady two plots containing fifteen lots at Belle Harbor, L. I.

Stokes & Knowles report that sales for the week at Jamaica Park South have amounted to over $50,000. They have disposed of the first section of the property and are now opening up the second section bounded by Rockaway Turnpike, Locust and New York Avenues. The entire holdings of the Jamaica Park South Realty Corporation comprises an area equivalent to 250 city blocks.

The development of Beechhurst, at Whitestone Landing, at an expense of $250,000, is practically finished. Preliminary plans for a yacht clubhouse have been prepared and seventy members have joined the organization. The Shore Acres Realty Company has agreed to give a large parcel of property to the club and will aid the organization in financing its building operations.

TORRENS SYSTEM IN OTHER STATES

Figures Indicating That It Is Not Always a Complete Success.

LONG TRIAL IN CHICAGO

Declared Unconstitutional in Ohio—Minneapolis Said to Have Found It Very Costly.

In the current agitation for the introduction of the Torrens system of title registration in this State, the general features of the plan have been outlined and have apparently made a very strong and very favorable impression in real estate circles in this city. Many observers, however, while heartily in favor of any change which would bring about a reduction in the charges for title insurance and simplify its incidental processes, have felt that there must be something to be said on the other side of the Torrens question, but have found its supporters either unable or unwilling to supply any detailed information as to the operation of the system in other localities.

The following information of this character, covering the workings of State title registration in Illinois, Ohio, Oregon, Minnesota, and in the Canadian Province of Ottawa, has been compiled by an officer of one of the title insurance companies.

"In Chicago the law went into operation in 1899. In eight years 2,000 pieces of property have been registered, representing a total valuation of $10,000,000. It takes fro thirty to thirty-five days to get a title through, provided the applicant promptly and cheerfully renders his assistance in curing any defects that may be discovered.

"The system was used so little in Chicago that finally a law was passed requiring estates to register their real estate. This has been opposed as inviting attacks on titles when they pass to widows and orphans and cannot be defended. The system has received little if any indorsement, and buyers generally have refused to accept Torrens titles. Those who register their properties are obliged to go to the additional expense of guaranteeing their titles.

"The Chicago law providing for compulsory registration by estates also authorizes the probate court to excuse estates in its discretion, with the result that so many were excused that this portion of the law became practically a dead letter. In April, 1903, the Supreme Court declared invalid the amendment making registration by estates compulsory.

"The report of the Recorder, in Chicago, for 1903, referred to a large increase in the business under the Torrens act, but also stated that the number of instruments filed under the old method was 147,908, while the number of applications under the Torrens law was 410. In 1905 there were 170 transfers involving stated considerations of $1,855,000, and in 1906 672 transfers, with considerations amounting to $1,761,000.

"Ohio passed its law in 1896. It was declared unconstitutional by

"Cabbage Patch" Investments Depreciate Your Savings and Depress Your Wife

THINK before you isolate your wife in some Lonesomehurst and invest the family savings in foolish "Cabbage Patch" country "lots." Read this letter, and we will tell you about the man:

From His Letter:

"I have decided to move into New York, and if you are wise you will do as I have done. Go and buy a lot on favorable terms in the new subway district. I have bought at Morris Park, which is to have six of the fastest routes—just think of six fast roads from our Jersey home to New York—and half the distance! I tell you these subways are going to change living conditions, and you will be sorry if you don't fix yourself in the Bronx before these roads open.

"Three subways for Express Trains—after the Theatre—always in town. I bought two lots, as I believe in a few years this wonderful Rapid Transit service will advance present prices, so that the profit on the extra lot will pay for my home and leave it free and clear."

This man bought at first in a "new suburb," where he got lots "cheap." But how expensive this "cheapness" proved itself! The RAILROAD COMPANY, the ONE railroad company that he had to depend on, took 20 TRAINS OFF and he felt foolish ALL winter getting from that "cheap lot" to work. NO LAST trains to Morris Park—NO being tied to ONE TRAIN, with SIX fast transportation lines to revised and improved. This booklet, the subtitle of which is, "Real Estate Facts," is something every one who wants to get ahead on sound principles should read and study. Do not write for it if you are one of those that think to plant to-day and reap to-morrow; if you want to get rich as rapidly as that you can generally find a kindly pool-room to take your money and place it on a sure thing, or you can go to the tracks yourself shortly. But if you want to take advantage of a sound principle, a principle as sound as the growth of crops, I mean the increase of real estate values in Greater New York, send your name and address and let us show you what you can do for as little as $60 or $70 down and $12 or $15 monthly.

AN IDEAL TRACT
To develop or to hold as an investment.

49 ACRES AT SPRINGFIELD, L. I.,

with a frontage of over a thousand feet on the famous Merrick Road and also a frontage on the Springfield Road.
Convenient to the Springfield and Laurelton stations and the trolley line; directly opposite the Laurelton property and in the heart of Springfield.
As the land is nearly level, but little if any expense for grading will be necessary.
To be sold for $2,500 per acre, and at this price is an excellent opportunity, as nearly all the land in the vicinity is in process of development and is being rapidly taken up by home builders.
With the excellent train service by way of Jamaica, only a short distance to Brooklyn or Long Island City and New York, Springfield forms an ideal location.

GUESS WHAT THIS MEANS:

L-E-O-N-I-A!

It Means Much If You are Looking for a Beautiful Home Site.

It Means Still More If You Seek a Wonderful Investment.

LEONIA is the name of the most picturesque suburb round about New York—a haven of rest; healthfulness and refinement, where rent money is paid from one pocket into the other; where rapidly increasing land values net one a handsome dividend on one's savings; where the shrieking of city whistles gives way to the song of birds; where one may live—as one should live—quietly, peacefully, joyously, economically and profitably; where houses and lots are sold on the easy monthly payment plan, and, in brief,

JUST WHERE YOU AND YOUR FAMILY SHOULD LIVE.
JUST WHERE YOUR INVESTMENT WILL GROW FASTEST.
JUST 15 MINUTES FROM 130TH STREET FERRY.

Come to LEONIA, where life is worth the living; where beautiful homes, churches, schools, clubs, and all sorts of healthful amusement places abound; where fishing, boating, and bathing are at their best—a place we invite you to visit at OUR expense.

THE COZIEST OF HOMES.

It does not follow that a cozy home must be a small cramped affair. The fact that it may be plenty large, amid attractive surroundings and yet cozy, is proven by a visit to any one of the many houses ready for

IMMEDIATE OCCUPATION at MORSEMERE.

They have all been designed for maximum comfort and elegance, with reasonableness in price.

One of the most perfectly appointed, charmingly located, artistically arranged and withal comparatively inexpensive homes is but partly described as follows:

Nine rooms and bath, steam heated, double hardwood floors on first floor. Hardwood trim throughout—Oak, first floor; Red Hazel on second and third floors. Cemented cellars. Decorations, fixtures, mantels, etc., complete and selected to please the most critical.

All improvements in the street—Water, gas, sewer, cement sidewalks, curb and gutters; shade trees. One block to trolley, whence seven minutes to 130th Street Ferry. Price, $9,500, on terms to suit purchaser.

HIGHLIGHTFUL COMMUNITY, GOOD SCHOOLS AND MODERATE TAXES are but few of the attractive features of this most easily accessible suburb. Office on the property.

Marlborough-Blenheim
Atlantic City, N. J.
April

The ending of Lent this year coincides with the beginning of April, the gayest and most distinguished month in Atlantic City's famous Spring season. During this month more eminent visitors and "nice people" are to be found in the great hotels than in any other month of the year, and the absence of the Easter Sunday "INTERRUPTION" enables guests to complete enjoyment of all the attractions of climate and artificial entertainment of this festive season with entire satisfaction.

The hotel claims distinction for its location, its ample public space devoted to its guests, its high-class music every night throughout the year, but particularly attractive with roof singers at the weekends during the Spring season and its ownership management.

All the four dining rooms (two American plan, with the excellent cooking heretofore so popular, and two a la carte, with separate kitchens and French chef) have white service throughout, and in one of the American rooms, called the "American Palm Room," and in the a la carte rooms smoking is permitted. These are particularly attractive. Ocean and suites with large rooms 34 by 20 feet and a private bath supplied with both sea water and fresh water and with running ice water) is with every alternate room in the Marlborough and with every room in the Blenheim, which in construction is reputed to be the most completely fireproof hotel in the world. Golf privileges.

COLER HAS JOINED A M'CARREN CLUB

But He Declares He Has Not Been Converted to McCarrenism.

POLITICIANS ASTONISHED

"He's Welcome," Says the Senator; "We Need Bright Young Men In the Party."

Brooklyn politicians were astonished yesterday to learn that Borough President Bird S. Coler, implacable political foe of Senator Patrick Henry McCarren, had become a full-fledged member of a McCarren district club.

All jumped to the conclusion that Mr. Coler, erstwhile the "white-haired boy" politically of the late "Boss" McLaughlin and later a worshipper at the political shrine of William Randolph Hearst, had become converted to McCarrenism and joined hands with the astute statesman from the sugar house region of Williamsburg. But the Borough President himself declared that this was placing a wrong construction upon his action. It was true that he had joined a McCarren club, but the fact was entirely without political significance.

Mr. Coler has become a member of the Madison Club, the organization of Deputy Controller John H. McCooey, the McCarren leader of the Eighteenth Assembly District. The Borough President lives in that district. One report which was afloat yesterday was that Mr. Coler had joined the McCooey organization as a result of a talk he had with a prominent McCarren man.

The Borough President had been "kicking" about the opposition from certain quarters to some of his pet schemes for borough improvements. It was intimated to him that he would be welcomed in the McCarren camp, and that if he was on more friendly terms with that organization his administration might find the sailing easier, with less opposition to his appropriation plans in the Board of Estimate. Mr. Coler himself asserts, however, that he was influenced only by personal friendship for Mr. McCooey in joining the latter's club.

"I was passing the house of the Madison Club, at 1,519 Pacific Street, on Thursday evening," he explained, "when I was greeted by Mr. McCooey and Bernard Gallagher, who were at the door. They invited me in, and Mr. McCooey said I ought to be a member of the Democratic Club in my district. They practically dared me to join, and I did so there and then. I did it purely out of friendship for Mr. McCooey, for whom I have always had the highest regard. I am no longer in politics."

"It is said you have joined hands with Senator McCarren," he was told.

"In the words of the President of the United States, the man who said that is a liar!" replied the Borough President. "The only political party I belong to at present is the Pure Judiciary Party, which I helped to organize, and the two candidates of which were walloped last Fall. We'll probably run 'em again."

When Senator McCarren was seen about Mr. Coler's move he smiled one of his famous smileless smiles.

"He's welcome," said he. "There's room for 'em all. I didn't know he had come in until I was told of it last night. We need bright young men in the party. Mr. Coler, however, is wrong about the Pure Judiciary Party. I organized the only Simon pure judiciary party hereabout, and Mr. Coler is stealing my thunder there. I am still a member of it."

Since Mr. oCler was elected Borough President on the Municipal Ownership League ticket in 1905, he has been something of a puzzle to the local politicians. He broke early with the league leaders and has shown no particular friendliness toward that organization in the making of his appointments. His most important appointments have been looked upon as showing strong hostility to the Democratic organization.

Mr. Coler has never been noticeably friendly with Senator McCarren since the latter deposed the late Hugh McLaughlin from the county leadership. The Borough President was a political protégé and close personal friend of the "old man," who was in the habit of referring to him fondly as "my boy."

LEGERDEMAIN BY TELEPHONE.

Bridge Party Mystified by Man Who Told Over a Wire a Card Selected.

A group of young folks, guests of a newly married couple in an apartment hotel in Central Park West, were sitting about after dinner. The hostess's maid was bustling around making preparations for a session at bridge. Seyer of the men were showing their prowess at card tricks.

After several of these had elicited praise, one youth announced that he had a friend in a nearby hotel who was able to perform a particularly marvelous and mystifying stunt.

"What is it?" everybody exclaimed.

"Oh, I can't do it myself and can't explain it," said the friend's spokesman, "but I think this friend of mine could show off over the telephone."

Taking a pack of cards he distributed the fifty-two equally among four persons. The cards were then taken away from each in rotation one at a time until a single card only remained in the hands of one guest. It was the ace of hearts.

"Now, you will not believe it, but my friend can tell you what card it is that we have hit upon by this process of eliminating the others in the deck," said the man who knew. "All you've got to do is to call him upon the telephone and answer a few personal questions.

"His name is Keller and his telephone is so and so Morningside. So that there can be no collusion on my part, one of you talk to him.

A young woman in the party got Mr. Keller on the line.

"Hello," she said, "is this Mr. Keller? A friend of your's says you can tell the card that has been selected from the deck by a lot of us here at the hotel.

"What? The color of my hair? Why, it's auburn. Red? Well, it's red, if you want to call it that. Married? No, I'm not. What's that got to do with it? You have to know, you say. O-o-h, I see." She hung up the receiver laughing.

"Well, what did he say?" was the general chorus.

"Oh, he called the turn all right. After I told him I had red hair and was single he said the card was the ace of hearts. Isn't it astonishing how he did it?"

The party was completely mystified—all except the young man who suggested the legerdemain by telephone. He had a little list of names in his pocket corresponding to a similar list held by his friend. Each name represented a card in the deck. The friend's name would not have been "Mr. Keller" had it been any other card than the ace of hearts.

But the young couple's guests don't know yet how the trick was done.

GEORGE M. SMART INDICTED.

Dayton Gas Co.'s ex-Secretary Accused of Embezzling $331,348.

DAYTON, Ohio, April 6.—The Grand Jury, which has been investigating the shortage in accounts of the Dayton Gas Company, in a final report last evening, returned eighteen indictments against George M. Smart, ex-Secretary of the company, charging him with embezzling $331,848. Smart and his wife are in the South.

It is alleged that part of this money was used to buy out rival concerns, and that large sums were given to politicians and others, who were influential in having passed certain ordinances beneficial to the company.

A ROMANTIC CITY PAINTER.

Remarkable Oils and Water Colors by Charles A. Needham.

There was a chance last week to enjoy the pictures of a man who possesses two rare traits, imagination mixed with sentiment, and an unusual color sense. He is an artist whose works are never conspicuous at the regular exhibitions because they do not call aloud to the passer-by; on the contrary, they bear the stamp of pictures made for the pleasure of the painter rather than with the object of hitting the popular fancy.

If you see one of his dark-toned pictures in which dim woods and clouds and a single figure in the shade suggest some tender or some exciting mystery, Charles Austin Needham is placed at once among the painters who sacrifice the real to the ideal, those who would not paint literally if they could. But when one sees nitogether in one gallery more than half a hundred oil paintings and nearly as many water colors by him, at the Salmagundi Club in West Twelfth Street, then it is borne in on one that a romantic painter can also be a realist.

A club exhibit is a personal exhibit, showing all the different exercises of the painter's brush, but one saw a great many canvases here that would have looked distinguished in any gathering.

Brilliant from afar is such a broadly brushed landscape as "The Hush of Autumn," with its grove of oaks turned to the red leaf on one side, its patches of deep green sky, and its solitary, suggestive figure to the right. "Flags of October" repents the red and green notes, with clouds turned rosy on their edges and a greater finish throughout. The tragic mood reigns in "Coronet of Evening." Among the water colors "Hymn of a Nightingale" is a charming color song, and "Nocturne" includes the figure of a woman with a lute. "The Nightingale," "Silence of Sleeping Trees," "Land of Dreams," and "Voice in the Twilight" are poetic ideas carried out in water colors, where the vague, the mysterious is expressed by a suitable handling quite the opposite of realism. They are pictures which those artists dislike very keenly who are too prosaic or too self-conscious to enter the perilous paths of sentiment.

Realists will enjoy, however, the New York park and street views of Mr. Needham. "Park Snows" took a bronze medal at the Universal Exposition of Paris, 1900. "A Street in New York" is remarkable for the excellent quality of the snow on the ground, the red fence and barn, the crystal-clear air. "Willows in Central Park" has careful drawing and good perspective. "A City's Eden" gives delightfully the sunlit spaces under shade trees, with groups of idlers and children at play. "Union Square at Early Candlelight" and "Winter," a view in Madison Square before the Flatiron was built; "Pier at East Twenty-third Street," and "Winter in Madison Square" prove that he can observe what is about him and paint it with great fidelity—too great fidelity, perhaps, in "Interior of Ruined Forge," "Mott Haven Canal," and "Old Harlem Bridge"; for in those pictures he tells too many things of equal ugliness and worthlessness at once. They lack an envelope of shadow, remoteness, mystery, to make them art.

Even in the country he sometimes fails to prose, though not so commonplace as the above. "Road to the Mill" is a view in the Sawmill Valley, back of Ardsley. The nearer pasture sloping to the hidden river is studded with cedars extremely well painted. The distance is well managed and there are excellent atmospheric effects. Nevertheless one feels the limitations of a picture which is only a transcript of a scene without further suggestiveness.

Better far is the nocturne called "Moonlit Hudson," with its greens like old Flemish tapestry, the smoke of a tug in the shadows, the wreath of a sail to the right. A landscape that suggests width and repose is "Valley of the St. Regis." A dull green pasture land leads by winding river and copses back to a tinge of lilac hills and a calm sky. "Summer Days" is far sketchier; it is marred by an acid green patch near the horizon. The composition is finely bold.

Such exhibitions as these, where we get a man's output without the intervention of a jury composed of a dozen artists, each nursing his own predilections and prejudices, is a great treat. The good and the indifferent are mingled together, but one can separate what is sympathetic from what is unattractive or even dull. No attempt was made to improve the pictures by coats of varnish or smart frames. It was just a thoughtful and uncommon artist's studio turned inside out and hung without much scenic craft on the walls.

KILLS WIFE, HANGS HIMSELF.

Paterson Blacksmith Goes Violently Insane—Pluck of His Little Son.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 6.—Anton Biswell, a blacksmith, became violently insane this morning and chopped his wife's head with a small hatchet, inflicting mortal wounds. He afterward went to the garret of his home on the Goffle Road, North Paterson, and hanged himself. Mrs. Biswell was brought to Paterson in a wagon and taken to the General Hospital. She will die.

August Biswell, a ten-year-old son, was the only witness of the tragedy. He was in the yard feeding chickens when he heard his mother scream. He ran to the house, but found the door barred. He looked through the window and saw his mother on the floor, his father holding her by the throat and hitting her on the head with the hatchet.

The lad tried to get into the house, but could not. He shouted to his father, but the man did not stop in his attack on his wife until she became unconscious.

Then he ran to a window, smashed the glass, and threw the hatchet into the yard. After that he took his own life in the garret.

Young Biswell showed grit by getting a large stone and breaking in the door. He then dragged his mother to a bed and bandaged her head roughly. After this he ran to get help. Several neighbors responded, but for a time all feared to go into the house.

Dr. Mack of North Paterson had been summoned and, accompanied by Recorder J. Keefe of Hawthorne Borough, he went inside and found Mrs. Biswell still alive.

Keefe found Biswell hanging in the garret. His feet were drawn up from the floor, the garret ceiling being low. There was still life in the body when it was cut down, but Dr. Mack was unable to restore consciousness.

Young Biswell says his father had been despondent for several weeks, having lost his place in New York City.

ROSS BOY'S BODY FOUND.

Child Supposed to Have Been Kidnapped Was Drowned.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., April 6.—The mystery of the disappearance of George Ross, the nine-year-old boy who has been missing from his home in this city since Feb. 20, was solved to-night, when his body was found at East Providence, near the mouth of a stream running from Pawtucket to the Providence River.

It is supposed that the boy fell through the ice and was drowned in the river at a point near his home. At one time the kidnapping theory was suggested, but was not entertained by the police.

William Ross, the boy's father, is a prominent resident of this city, and the principal owner in the Citizen Ice Company.

FAILED FIRM CAN'T RESUME.

Efforts to Revive Arnold Leo & Co. End with Sale of Exchange Seat.

Arnold Leo & Co., the Stock Exchange house which failed last November, will not resume business, efforts in that direction having been abandoned following the transfer of the seat of Edgar F. Leo, who had been the floor member of the firm.

At the time of the assignment a number of Mr. Leo's friends on the Exchange came forward with assistance, which saved his seat from sale. The firm had offered its creditors 50 cents on the dollar with satisfactory assurances as to the balance, and it was announced that it hoped to be able to resume business in a short time.

Gordon Gordon, attorney for Assignee Clifford V. Hubbard, said yesterday, in explanation of the sale of Edgar F. Leo's seat, that the house had given up its intention of resuming, and that inasmuch as Mr. Leo had paid out much of his own money in settling up his firm's affairs, he had sold his seat in order to raise funds to get back into business. Mr. Gordon said he believed Mr. Leo would become a member of a new firm.

LEASED BY MAINE CENTRAL.

Portland and Rumford Road Has Important Building Rights.

PORTLAND, Me., April 6.—Announcement was made to-day that the Directors of the Maine Central Railroad had voted to lease the Portland & Rumford Falls Railroad. A meeting of the stockholders has been called for April 20 to ratify the lease.

The road extends from Rumford Junction to Rangeley Lakes and holds rights granted by the last Legislature for extensions to Portland and to the Canadian boundary line at a point near Megantic, connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 6.—United Railways were a feature. The general mortgage 4s were up ¼ and the income bonds ⅜. The stock was firm around 13¾. Houston Oil common at 8⅝ was up ⅝, while the preferred at 47 was up 2 points. Consolidated Cotton Duck issues were stronger and in better demand. Mount Vernon-Woodberry 5s gained another half. Fidelity & Deposit Trust advanced 2 points and Seaboard 4s gained ⅝.

The underwriting syndicate formed two years ago to take over the $10,000,000 of Washington Terminal Companies first mortgage 3½ per cent. bonds was dissolved to-day. It was formed by Alexander Brown & Sons of this city. The syndicate did not dispose of all the bonds, but there seemed to be a desire on the part of some members to dissolve it, and the profits to date, together with the unsold bonds, were distributed among the syndicate participants.

The market closed strong and active. Shares, 2,762; bonds, $37,100.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

GEORGE F. SHAVER, inventor and promoter, residing at 124 Morningside Avenue, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities $51,774 and actual assets $10,000, consisting of a lot of mining and other stocks, the par value of which is $100,800. He also has a certificate for 1,000 gallons of whisky. Among the creditors is Job E. Hedges, as assignee of H. H. Warner, on a $29,174 judgment obtained in 1893 on a note given for stocks.

BERTHA COHN.—Bertha Cohn, a florist of 17 East Fifty-ninth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $4,180 and assets of $20.

ARMSTRONG, WALLS & CO.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Thomas D. Walls, Charles Hoyt, Herman H. Schnepel, and Ivan Spangenberg, individually and as surviving partners of the firm of Armstrong, Walls & Co., jobbers in hardware at 82 Centre Street, by Henry W. Sykes for these creditors: P. & F. Corbin, $1,000; Union Drawn Steel Company, $1,000 and T. Hunnerford Brasse and Copper Company, $397. It was alleged that while insolvent they transferred $4,100 to the Redwood Manufacturing Company on March 15. Mr. Sykes said that the liabilities are $65,000, and assets $40,000.

THOMAS ELIJAH.—Judge Holt of the District Court has appointed Lawrence H. Cohen receiver for Thomas Elijah, doing business as T. Elijah & Co., wholesale dry goods, at 60 Washington Street.

Out of Town.

BOSTON, April 6.—Eugene K. Dunbar, a broker, to-day filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. His liabilities aggregate $74,495, with nominal assets at $54,658. Of these liabilities $56,316 is secured, principally on bonds of Bennington Gas Company of Vermont, which went into the hands of a receiver last Fall. The assets consist chiefly of open accounts, $24,000, in stock of the Bennington Gas Company, and stock of other industrial corporations.

The failure of Webster F. Putnam & Co., bankers and brokers of 50 Congress Street, this city, was announced to-day on the Boston Stock Exchange. The firm has been a member of the Boston Stock Exchange since 1880, but has not ranked as one of the large brokerage houses of the city. The failure is regarded as a small one.

Paving the Way.

Whilst we are still in the experimental stage as regards establishing trade relations with South America, it is worth noting how other countries pave the way for comercial intercourse. At present French influence is paramount in Peru, and the Peruvian army has just been reorganized on the French pattern. The Peruvian navy is now in process of formation, and five Peruvian midshipmen, just graduated from Peruvian Naval School, have been admitted to embark next October on the French training ship "Duguay Trouln," upon which French midshipman make their first deep-sea cruise. Per contra the doors of the United States Naval Academy have recently been closed to all foreigners.—Shipping Illustrated.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER JOHN B. MERRILL

Ex-District Attorney of Queens Cut Down in the Dark Near His Home.

HIS THROAT BADLY SLASHED

Condition Serious — Assailant, Who May Be a Convict He Had Prosecuted, Escapes.

An attsinpt to murder John B. Merrill, former District Attorney of Queens County, was made last night near his home, in Broadway, Ozone Park, Queens, and early this morning it was not certain that he would recover.

Mr. Merrill, was on his way home about 8:30 o'clock, after a call on friends, when in Broadway, near Union Place, a young man leaped from behind a tree and slashed the lawyer's throat with a razor or a knife.

Mr. Msrrill fell, unable to utter a sound, and his assailant escaped. A passing neighbor saw his prostrate form later and assisted him to his home near by. Dr. Samuel P. Nutt, one of the Queens County Coroners, whose home adjoins that of Mr. Merrill, was called in and was still with Mr. Merrill early this morning. Dr. Nutt sent out word to reporters that Mr. Merrill's condition was very serious.

While in the doctor's hands Mr. Msrrill, despite his wound and weakened condition from loss of blood, was able to give a fairly good description of his assailant. He says the man was an Italian, about 5 feet 4 inches tall, and clean shaven. He wore a light overcoat, with cap to match, and dark trousers. Mr. Merrill said he did not remember ever having seen the man before, and knew of no reason why the fellow should have wanted to attack him.

The police of the Richmond Hill Station were promptly notified and Capt. Darcy and his entire force went out to search for the ex-District Attorney's assailant. No trace of him had been discovered at 2 o'clock this morning.

When he was in office, Mr. Merrill could hardly say he was without enemies, for he did more to break up gambling in Queens than any of his predecessors. But he retired as District Attorney five years ago, and the feud he had with the gamblers then was supposed to have been forgotten long ago.

One theory of the police, formed when the news of the attack first reached them, was that some criminal whom Mr. Merrill had convicted and sent to jail when in office had seized the first chance he had after release from jail to revenge himself upon his prosecutor.

This, however, was merely a theory, without facts to sustain it. It will, however, be followed up to-day.

John B. Merrill is now one of the best-known Democratic politicians in Queens County. He is a lawyer with a large practice. He was District Attorney for six years, and is now about 60 years old. He was succeeded by the present incumbent of the office, District Attorney Gregg.

Mr. Merrill was born in Plainfield, Conn., and was graduated from the University of West Virginia. When 18 years old he enlisted as a private in the army, and served until the end of his term, receiving an honorable discharge at Governors Island.

In the course of his enlistment he was detailed as special instructor of military signaling, telegraphy, and tactics at his old university. In 1881, under orders of the Secretary of War, he was sent to the Western States to investigate the causes and effects of the cyclones which had been so disastrous there.

He was put in charge of the Weather Bureau in New York City in 1882 and a year later he took a post with the Monarch Steamship Company, where he stayed until 1887. He then took up the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1890, and was elected a School Commissioner the next year.

His work in that office received high praise from the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. He was at one time Vice President of the Queens County Bar Association, President of the Seneca Democratic Association of Woodhaven, and a member of several other Democratic clubs in Queens.

Before his election as District Attorney he had successfully defended many criminal cases before the courts in Queens. As District Attorney he was often said to be the best official Queens County ever had in that office.

BRYAN ON NEXT CAMPAIGN.

Says Eastern Conservative Democrats Will Not Manage It.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, April 7.—"If there is a conservative wing in the Democratic Party when the next National campaign is here, it will not manage the campaign."

Thus spoke William J. Bryan in the presence of 500 Iowa Democrats last evening, and the audience cheered. The occasion was a banquet in honor of Thomas Jefferson.

The opening note of Mr. Bryan's speech was a warning to the Eastern conservatives that they must kee hands off, as only those who are De ocrats all the time would be trusted in the management of what he says will he a victorious fight next year.

Mr. Bryan spent considerable time in discussing real and sham reformers. He pictured Senator La Follette as a real reformer. He took pains to include the name of President Roosevelt in his catalogue of sham reformers, although he said Roosevelt had some good acts to his credit. The only substantial work Roosevelt had done as a reformer was in working for railway rate regulation, and in that respect he had followed a doctrine which the Democrats had been hroaching for years.

Congressman Champ Clark said that President Roosevelt was the "maddest man he ever saw" the night of the Gridiron Club affair when he clashed with Forsker.

Referring to the New York situation, he declared that "if the metropolis had a trict Attorney worth the powder to blow him to hell, Sing Sing would be so full of Repuhlican thieves that their arms would he sticking out the windows."

BOSS COX ROBBED HERE.

Wife Says Jewelry Worth $35,000 Was Taken in the Knickerbocker.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, April 7.—Mrs. George B. Cox, wife of the deposed Republican boss in this city, says she was robbed of $35,000 worth of jewelry in the Hotel Knickerbocker, New York, two weeks ago. In telling of her loss she said to-day:

"Mr. Cox and I retired between 10 and 11 o'clock. I gave him three rings, one sst with a large diamond, another with an opal, a ruhy, and two diamonds, and a third with a valuable pearl. Hs placed them in a chamois skin bag and put them in his trousers pocket.

"While we were asleep some one entered the room and rifled Mr. Cox'e clothing, which was hanging on a rack a short distance from the bed.

"We heard nothing during the night, but when we awoke in the morning we discovsred our loss. Ths rings were very handsome ones and I valued them highly, even above their intrinsic worth. Mr. Cox had something like $800 in his pockets, and the money was also stolen.

"One thing I am particularly thankful for, and that is that the pearl necklace that I took to New York with me was not found. The necklace is a handsoms piece, costing over $4,000. When I went to bed I placsd it on the centre table in the room and threw a handkerchief over it. The thief or thieves missed it.

At the Hotel Knickerbocker last night the manager denied that Mrs. Cox's jewelry had been lost there. He said that Mr. and Mrs. Cox arrived at the hotel on March 20 and on the following day Mr. Cox declared that he had lost his wife's rings, valued at $7,000, saying they had been taken from a chamois bag which he carried.

Detective Armstrong, who investigated the cass, the manager said, became satisfied that the jewelry was not lost nt the hotel, but that it was lost or stolen outside ths hotel. The manager added:

"The jewelry could not have been taksn from the Cox apartments hy a sneak thief, for nobody who is not a guest is permitted to go above the ground floor."

AUTO KILLS CHURCHGOER.

Machine Going 35 Miles an Hour Hits Mrs. Entwistle and Smashes a Rig.

Mrs. Eliza Entwistle, 52 years old, was killed yesterday while on her way from church to her home, by an automohile, which ran her down at Mott and Central Avenues, Far Rockaway, Queens. The automobile was driven by William Young of Pier Avenue, Rockaway Beach, chauffeur for David Samuels of 34 Plaza Street, Brooklyn, who has a cottage at Bayswater. The automobile's license is 27,573 New York. Young was the only occupant of the machine.

Mrs. Entwistle was in company with F. W. Tolman, Bessie Patterson, and Edna Hicks. As the four started to cross Central Avenue from the east to the west side Young came flying down Mott Avenue and swung around the corner into Central Avenue.

Young saw the party just as he started to turn, and he shut off power and applied his brakes, but because of the car's high speed could not stop. The party became confused and dodged about, and Mrs. Entwistle ran directly into the path of the machine. She was knocked down and went under it.

The car skidded across the street, hit a carriage, smashed the rear wheels of that vehicle, and then smashed into the curh so hard that the front running gear was smashed. Mrs. Entwistle was dragged under the machine across the street. The automobile was lifted up, and she was found to be unconscious. An ambulance was called from St. Joseph's Hospital, Far Rockaway. She died half an hour after tho hospital was reached.

Paul Sussman, who was in the carriage, was thrown out to the pavement, but not seriously injured. His wife escaped injury. Patrolman William Newins arrested Young, and took him before Magistrate Healy later in the day. Alderman Jacob C. Winn of 327 East Thirtieth Street, Manhattan, provided $5,000 bail for Young, who was charged with homicide.

Coroner Ambler was told that the machine as it swung around the corner was speeding at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour.

James H. Entwistle, the husband of the victim, was prostrated by the death of his wife.

IF THE CAP FITS, SAYS ODELL,

Let the President Wear It—Comment on His Paranola Speech.

The speech of ex-Gov. Benjamin B. Odell about political grasshoppers, paranoi, and dishonest seekers after political power at the dinner of the Grillers' Club on Saturday night aroused a great deal of comment yesterday, and there were anxious inquiries by those who desired to get from the lips of the former Chairman of the Republican State Committee a verification or denial of the statement that his address was mean as a condemnation of President Roosevelt.

Mr. Odell left town early yesterday morning and could not he seen by those who most anxiously sought him here, but before leaving he had a brief conversation with a friend, in which he made a statement supporting the helief that his remarks were directed at the President.

"I did not use the President's name," said Mr. Odell to his friend, "hut if he believes that the cap fits him he is at liberty to wear it. If his friends are ready to draw any such conclusion from what I said they are at liberty to have that in mind, too."

A leading Democratic politician offered the comment on Mr. Odell's speech that no matter what Mr. Odell helieved, he did not think an ex-Governor of the State should deliberately attack the President of the United States, and especially a President wbo had hsen nominated hy his own party.

MADE GOOD HAUL IN SILVER.

Burglars Rob the Van Rensselaer Kennedy Place at Hempstead.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., April 7.—Two men and a hoy who were seen driving about this town and vicinity late last night are believed to be responsible for three burglaries near here during the night.

At the country home of Pierre M. Brown, near the Van Rensselaer-Kennedy place, the burglars got four new fur automobile coats, valued at about $600, two shotguns, and two silver services. The stiver is worth about $900. Other silverware in the dining room was not touched, and it is believed that the robhers were frightened while at work.

The homes of William J. Collins, a New York iron manufaoturer, and A. V. Brown, an attorney, were broken into, but nothing was taken.

Forest Fire Threatens Amagansett.

AMAGANSETT, L. I., April 7.—A thousand acres of forest are afire here tonight threatening the villages of Springs and Amagansett. To-night men, women, and children are backfiring to save their houses.

HUNT FOR WRECKERS, $10,500 REWARD

Pennsylvania Officials and Employes Panic-stricken by Repeated Outrages.

FIVE FLIERS DERAILED

Engine Men Ask to be Transferred—Armed Patrols to Guard Lines West of Pittsburg.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 7.—Pennsylvania Railroad employes, from executive officers down are panic stricken in consequence of the derailing of the Cleveland flier by wreckers at Hudson, Ohio, last night. This is the fifth fast train thus attacked. In an effort to capture the men who are jeopardizing the lives of hundreds of passengers and thousands of dollars worth of rolling stock, scores of railroad and Pinkerton detectives were rushed into Hudson last night and to-night. With the local authorities they have formed posses and are scouring the surrounding country in an effort to get a clus to the wreckers.

The railroad officials to-day authorized a reward of $2,500 for the apprehension of the guilty persons, and an additional reward of $2,500 for their capture within forty-eight hours. Rewards totaling $5,500 are also offered for the capture of the men who wrecked the trains on the lines east, making a total of $10,500.

The employes of the lines both east and west of Pittsburg are completely demoralized. Veteran engineers, who bave piloted the fastest passenger trains for many years, are asking to bs transferred to slower runs. One old engineman kneels in the cab of his engine each evening and prays before starting on his night race against time to New York.

For the past week the railroad officials had felt fairly safe. Following the wreck of the eighteen-hour flier at Mineral Point, the Manhattan Limited at Wilmerding, the Keystone Express at East Pittsburg, and the Chicago Express at Turtle Creek, hundreds of special guards were employed. These guards, heavily armed, are to-night patrolling every foot of the track between here and Altoona. These precautions only served to cause the wreckers to shift their operations. That the wreck last night was caused by the same persons is the positive helief of the railroad officials. Every detail of the work is exactly similar to that by which the wrecking of trains on the lines east was causod.

A nsrrow cut one and one-half miles west of Hudson was selected by the wreckors. They removed the spikes from one rail and also the fishplates from one rail joint. The end of the loosened rail was bent in just enough to catch the flange of the wheels and derail the train. The fishplates were wedged in between the ends of the rails so that the electric rail current would not be disconnected. If this current is broken, danger signals are displayed.

When the train, dasbing along at a fifty-mile-an-hour gait, struck tbe obtruding end of the rail, tho engine, tender, and baggage coach left the tracks and plowed along the side of the cut for fully 100 yards. The three Pullman sleepers and one day coach remained on the rails, and the soft side of the cut furnished a buffer which no doubt prevented great loss of life.

Tho officials say that a track walker passed the scene of the wreck ten minutes before it occurred, and that anothsr track walker was stepping out of the way of the train at the moment it was derailed.

Thns afternoon a section hand was ordered to loosen and bend a rail in a manner similiar to the work of the wreckers. With ordinary tools the man succeeded in finishing the task in less than five minutes.

An armed patrol will be immediately detailed to guard the lines west of Pittsburg. A local employment agency representing the railroad company is advertising for guards, offering them $75 a month. Other measures will also be taken to protect the lives of passengers. President McCrea has called a conference of all Division Superintendents for to-morrow.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.—All that human ingenuity can conceive is being done to catch the men who since March 22 have made five successful attempts to wreck the fastest and hest trains in the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The road's secret service force feel confident that the same band of men is responsible for all the wrecks. They suspect many persons, but it was said at Broad Street Station to-day that so far no evidence against any of the suspected men had been gathered to an extent that would warrant an arrest.

It is believed that the wreckers live within a short distance of Penn Station, because the previous attempts were made very near this place.

Every one of the thousands of the employes of the company has been turned into a detective and the force of track walkers has been doubled and tripled.

James McCrea, President of the Pennsylvania, has given orders that no effort, no matter how slight, and no expense, must .be spared in running the wreckers to earth.

Many of the railroad detectives are of the opinion that foreigners employed as section hands by the railroad are the wreckers. These laborers are openly hostile to the railroad on the ground that they should have participated in the recent wage increase granted to the trainmen.

PREDICTED DEATH HOUR.

J. B. Chamberlain, Magazine Illustrator, Succumbs to Heart Disease.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 7.—"I have only three days more to live, Sister Josephine, so it is useless to nold out hope to me. But nevertheless I am very grateful for your words of encouragement."

Just three days to the hour from the time he made this statement to his nurse at St. James's Hospital here Jack B. Chamberlain, a magazine illustrator, died. The funeral took place here yesterday, and his body was taken to Brooklyn for burial. He was 26 years old.

Chamberlain died of valvular disease of the heart. When he consulted a physician about his ailment the doctor told him that he had but a year to live, or fourteen months at the most. The day that Chamberlain foretold his demise with such accuracy he recalled the doctor's prediction.

"My time is up. The doctor said I'd live fourteen months. He struck it right."

VINTAGE CHAMPAGNES.
Non-vintage champagnes are blends of various vintages of no special merit. Vintage Champagne is produced entirely from grape grown in an exceptionally good year, which year is invariably indicated on the label. The Vintage of 1898 was one of the best in recent years; hence Monopole 1898 and Dry Monopole 1898 are sold at a premium in all other markets of the world. In the United States this excellent vintage: Monopole Red Top 1898, "moderately dry." Dry Monopole Brut 1898, "very dry," is now sold at non-vintage prices for the purpose of making this brand of wine a favorite.—Adv.

SUNK OFF MANHATTAN BEACH.

Crew of the Schooner Crocker Rescued by Life Savers.

Dragging her anchor in the strong wind, the 70-foot schooner Henry Crocker yesterday went on the rocks off the bulkhead at Manhattan Beach, and within two hours pounded a hole in her hottom and sank. Capt. James and the crew of two men jumped overboard and were rescued. The vessel, which was carrying a cargo of crushed stone from Tompkins Cove, Staten Island, to Inwood, Far Rockaway, will probably be a total loss.

About 11 o'clock the Crocker was off the Orisntal Hotel, Manhattan Beach. She was laboring in the heavy sea which was running, and apparently making but little headway. Soon after she anchored about 1,000 feet off shore. Her anchor dragged, and in spite of the efforts of the men she mads straight for the rocks which are piled up outside the bulkhead. As she began to pound John Tappin and Henry Elimers got their boat ready to go to her aid. They stood hy, and about 1 o'clock the boat suddenly sank. Tbe skipper and his crew of two jumped into the water. At the same time Tappin and Elimers put off in their boat. They succeeded in reaching the men, who were all strong swimmers. They were hauled aboard the small boat and landed on the beach.

10 SAVED IN BREECHES BUOY.

Two Women and Eight Men Taken from the Schooner Louis Bossart.

NORFOLK, Va., April 7.—Ten persons, two of whom are women, were rescued from death hy means of a breeches huoy by Capt. Etberidge and his crew of lifesavers at Nags Head (N. C.) station early to-day when the four-masted schooner Louis Bossart was blown asbore by the heavy northeast gale that has prevailed along the Virginia-Carolina coast for the past 48 hours.

The schooner was bound from New York to Wiggins, S. C., for a cargo, and was swept out of her course by the storm. She is owned by Louis Bossart & Brother of New York. She is of 610 gross tonnage and was built at Bath, Maine, in 1904.

GUESTS POSED AS SERVANTS.

Private Car Party Given in Violation of Law May Cost Dear.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Out in the City of St. Paul, Minn., there is a company of estimable young persons who are sitting up nights wondering whether they are going to get into the clutches of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. They have violated the Rate law, and stand to ho fined from $100 to $2,000 apiece if they should have the bad luck to he convicted. It is a case of accepting free transportation, and under circumstances which were delightful when the breach of the law was committed, but have lost something of their glamour since it has been discovered that it was a misdemeanor.

As the Inter-State Commerce Commission has heard it, a prominent official of the St. Paul got up a private car party for some of his friends among the younger set of St. Paul society. The law exempts from the prohibition of free transportation railroad men and their families. This railroad man, not caring to go so far as to represent that his guests were members of his family, "living under his own roof," which is the official interpretation of that requirement, took them along as maids and valets for the members of his family who were of the party. That was a joke which the young folks enjoyed, and added zest to the fun.

It happens, however, that the Commerce Commission has been receiving information of such violations of the law rather frequently of late, but has never had it in detail sufficient to enable it to undertake a prosecution until this case occurred. Now the commission is considering whether it ought not to reduce this private car party to the example state, with a view to checking such occurrences in the future. The owner of the car is guilty of one violation of the law, and each of his guests of another.

FOUNDLING TO BE A DOCTOR.

His Name Is Richard J. Hood Wright—Hospital Surgeons to Educate Him.

Richard J. Hood Wright is the latest recruit to the army of foundlings that is cared for by the city. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital yesterday from the J. Hood Wright Hospital, where he had been baptized properly and named before being sent out into the world. The Directors of the hospital are going to look after the youngster, and if he lives and is not claimed he will be educated by them and cared for until he is turned out into the world a qualified physician.

Edward Hahan, the janitor of the house at 2,272 Eighth Avenue, found an infant, then only two hours old, in the back hallway of the house, wrapped in a white blanket. An ambulance was called from the J. Hood Wright Hospital. The surgeons discovered that the child was all but dead from neglect and exposure.

After hard work Supt. Richard Townley gave a verdict that the baby would live. The boy weighs about eight pounds and has fine blue eyes.

The Rev. Father Penny of the Church of the Annunciation was summoned to baptize it. Miss M. L. Muldoon acted as godmother, and Dr. Sharpe, house surgeon, as godfather. Everyhody about the hospital wanted the baby to stay. A pledge was made to care for little Richard J. Hood Wright until he grew up.

ROUNDSMAN SAVES A LIFE.

Man Who Staggered Off a Pier Rescued with the Aid of a Rope.

A drunken man staggered out on the pier at the foot of Baltic Street, Brooklyn, early yesterday morning and tumhled headfirst into the East River. Roundsman Patrick Ahern of the Amity Street Station heard the splash and the man's shouts for help.

Calling to Policemen Lloyd and Gannon to aid him, Ahern got two pieces of rope from a near-by shanty. One piece he tied about his body as he hurried back to the end of the pier, with the other rope in his hands he was lowered over the end of the bulkhead hy Lloyd and Gannon.

Ahern found the man clinging to a pile a few feet away and struggling to keep his head above water. The Roundsman swam over to the man's side and succeeded in getting the other rope about the stranger's body, and the two were hauled up.

The man was unconscious, and there was an ugly scar on his head, caused, it is supposed, by his hitting a pile when he went overboard. The man, who was about five feet six inches tall and apparently about 30 years old, was taken to the Long Island College Hospital. He had not regained his senses last night.

Alfonso Goes to Meet King Edward.

MADRID, April 7.—King Alfonso, the Dowager Queen Maria Christina, Premier Maura, Capt. Nino, Minister of Marine; Minister of Foreign Affairs Salazar, Sir Maurice De Bunsen, the British Ambassador to Spain, and Señor De Villa de Urrutia, the Spanish Ambassador to Great Britain, left here to-day for Cartagena, where King Alfonso is to meet King Edward.

POWER HOUSE BURNS; FIRE CAPTAIN KILLED

Ryan of Engine 80 Caught Under a Falling Wall in Harlem.

OTHER FIREMEN INJURED

One Is in Washington Heights Hospital — Others Cut and Bruised.

At 2:30 o'clock this morning the big Metropolitan power house, covering the whole block hetwesn 145th and 146th Streets and Sixth and Lenox Avenues, was afire from top to bottom and there was small prospect that it could be saved.

Four alarms had been sent in and all the available fire apparatus in Harlem was fighting the fire, but the west wall of the four-story building had collapsed, burying a fire company under it, and the flames menaced the rear of the flat houses in Lenox Avenue hetween 146th and 147th Streets.

Their tenants had been ordsred out and the firemen, abandoning the blazing power house for a while, were devoting their efforts to save the houses. The houses were new and few flats were occupied. Later the houses took fire.

When the wall fell a call was sent for ambulances, and five were dispatched to the scene.

The company caught under the wall was No. 80. Its oommander Capt. Ryan was killed outright. Fireman Leopold was badly injured and sent to Washington Heights Hospital and half a dozen other firamen were badly cut and hruised.

Father Malloy and another priest administered the rites of the church to the injured firemen.

The fire started near the cornice over the fourth story of the huilding about 2 o'clock, and, fanned by a strong northeast wind from the river, spread rapidly.

By the time the first firemen arrived the whole huilding was ablaze and four alarms were sent in.

Tbe power house supplies power for most of the surface lines in Harlem. The dynamos are in the cellar, above that is a car barn, and in the upper stories the repair shops of the company. A force of men works there all night, but all of these got out safely.

At 3 o'clock the north wall had followed the west wall and lay in ruins in the Street, but the firemen had succeeded in keeping the flames to the northwest end of the building and seemed likely to save the rest. The fire in tbe flathouses in the rear had heen extinguished.

The dynamoes in the cellar in the southeast corner of the building, it was said, were safe. They had been protected from the flames by a four-foot hrick partition, so that it was prohable that the street cars would run as usual to-day.

At 8:30 o'clock this morning the fire was under control. It had hurned up 150 cars, stopped the Lenox and Eighth Avenue cars, and wrecked the building, except the corner in which were the dynsmoes.

PREACHED PEACE, FOUGHT.

Fight in a Philadelphia Church Over a Warden.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.—Fisticuffs in the vestry room followed a sermon on "Peace" this morning in the Emmanuel Episcopal Church, Marlborough Street, above Girard Avenue. The rector, the Rev. Edward G. Knight, who preached the sermon, clashed with George Shegog, who had been Accounting Warden of the church for seven years.

Clad in his priestly vestments, the rector dragged Mr. Shsgog out of the vestry room. Through the Sunday school room they struggled, the rector apparently trying to force the Warden into the choir room, near by, while the Warden made ineffectual efforts to return to the vestry room.

Cries of "Let me go to my father! I'll stand hy him until I die!" came from Miss Alice Shcgog, the Warden's 18-year-old daughter, but she was restrained from active participation in the affair by a choir hoy, who kept her in a corner. Her brother Harry jumped into the thick of the fray and received a hlow fn the face that left a mark.

Other persons concerned were J. H. Watkins, recently appointed Accounting Warden by the rector's faction, and representatives of the two warring faotions of the congregation, the majority of them women. These raised their voices in protest against the disorder. On the fringe of the crowd stood tho choir boys in surplices. They had just finished singing the "Recessional" when they heard an exchange of blows and saw Mr. Shegog and one of the Vestrymen rolling on the floor, and the rector standing over the combatants.

It is difficult to say how the fight started, as each side blames the other. It was the result of an old trouhle which has threatened to disrupt the congregation, arising out of control of the Sunday collections. Disagreement on this point had already caused the arrest of the rector, and he is now under $1,000 hail. Two sets of vestrymen have been elected, one under the leadership of the rector, the other led hy Mr. Shegog, who instituted the criminal proceedings against the minister.

PITTSBURG'S PERIL.

United States Engineer Says Flood May Destroy City.

PITTSBURG, April 7.—J. W. Arras of the United States Engineer Corps, who has charge of building the dams in the Ohio and Allegheny Rivers in this vicinity, has submitted a report to the Government which was made public to-night, in connection with the recent flood here. He says that Pittshurg, like Johnstown, is in danger of devastation some day by a flood causing the loss of thousands of lives and millions of dollars worth of property.

Mr. Arras reports that when the catastrophe occurs it will come with just as little warning as did the one in the Conemaugh Valley.

GEN. BARILLAS MURDERED.

Ex-President of Guatemala Slain by a Youth in a Street Car.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 7.—Gen. Manual Lizandro Barrillas, ex-President of Guatemala, was assassinated this evening in Calle Seminaigo as he sat in a Guadelope Street car. He was on the way to supper. The car stopped and a young man about 17 years old climbed ahoard, and, rushing to the General, stahbed him twice, the first hlow severing the jugular vein, the second cutting his face. He died instantly.

The assassin was captured. He gave his name as Jose Estrada and his homa as Ocos, Guatemala.

The members of the Guatemala colony, many of whom formerly lived in Ocos, know of no such name and do not recognize the youth, who is doubtless a paid assassin. Tbe body of the ex-President, along with the assassin, was taken to Police Headquarters.

Barillas was generally regarded as strongly opposed to the present Government of Guatemala. He was 62 years old and was a strong possibility for the next Presidency.

SON TO SENATOR GUGGENHEIM

Born Last Night at the St. Regis Hotel.

A son was born to United States Senator and Mrs. Simon Guggenheim in their apartments at the St. Regis Hotel yesterday. Mrs. Guggenheim was Miss Olga Hirsch. They have one other son, John Simon. When their elder son was born Mr. Guggenheim gave to the State of Colorado, which he now represents in the Senate, the Golden School of Mines, a benefaction which cost him $80,000.

WOODRUFF'S NARROW ESCAPE

Carriage of Connecticut's Governor Is Smashed by a Car.

NEW HAVEN, April 7.—Gov. Rollin S. Woodruff had a narrow escape from serious injury late to-day while out driving on Chapel Street. His horse, frightened it is thought by a trolley car, ran away and finally got in front of an approaching electric car.

Before the car could be stopped one side of the carriage had been smashed. The Governor escaped without injury.

CHURCH ALTAR SET AFIRE.

Priest Put Out the Flames—Congregation in a Panic.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 7.—The upsetting of a candle set fire to the altar decorations in St. Francis's Church here today at a service attended by many women and children. Father Rathner, the pastor, rushed from the sacristy and carried the burning decorations to the door.

Then he seized some overcoats from a pew and beat out the flames on the altar. Several women fainted, but a panic was prevented by the singing of the children's choir.

BURNS CROSS ON FOREHEAD.

Dr. Bettix of Iowa Wants 144,000 Other Crusaders to Do Likewise.

Special to The New York Times.

OSKALOOSA, Iowa, April 7.—After burning into his forehead with acid a cross one and one-half inches long, Dr. Paul Bettix, Professor of Greek in the Central Holiness University here, has declared himself at the head of "Christ's own volunteers" for the crusade of the twentieth century.

Because of his act and declaration he has been dismissed from the university, one of whose chief supporters in the State is Mrs. Scott M. Ladd, wife of a Justice of the State Supreme Court.

Bettix intends to go to Kansas to organize his work. He asks for 144,000 followers, each to have the cross burned into his forehead and to go and preach without scrip or purse.

FEARED TO BE A BURDEN.

Aged Mother with a Devoted Son Tries Suicide—Will Recover.

Fearing that she was a burden to her devoted son, Mrs. Christina Wriedt, 70 years old, attempted suicide yesterday morning by inhaling illuminating gas in her son's home, at 4,261 Third Avenue.

Her son Arthur found his mother on the kitchen floor with the tube from the gas range in her mouth. He ran around to the Tremont Station and got Policeman Gordon, who revived the woman. She will recover.

On the kitchen table was found the following note, dated at 4 o'clock yesterday morning:

My Dear Arthur: I am too great a burden. I feel I am going out of my mind. I think it best to end it alone at once. Good-by. Love to all. You have been a good son to me.

YOUR AFFECTIONATE MOTHER.

Her son, in great grief, said that there was no reason for his mother's act. He said she was very far from being a burden to him.

GEORGE GOULD QUITS POLO.

Too Busy with His Railroads, He Is Selling His Polo Ponies.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, April 7.—George J. Gould is disposing of his stahle of polo ponies at private sale, and is withdrawing from the game temporarily. For a year at least there will he no polo games at Georgian Court.

Mr. Gould is every bit as enthusiastic over polo now as he was when he organized the Lakewood Polo Club and promoted several championship tournaments here. The polo fields here represent an outlay of about $75,000, and are said to be the finest playing courses in this country.

Mr. Gould's vast railroad enterprises have, however, kept him so husy that he has spent but very little time at Georgian Court this Winter. His sons, Kingdon and Jay, have been too busy with their studies to give much time to polo. Kingdon is a junior at Columbia, and Jay will enter Columbia next September to take the course in science. Jay, who recently sustained his title as American amateur court tennis champion, is now in London preparing for the British championship contest. Mr. and Mrs. Gould and Kingdon are to join him on the other side early in June.

SHERMAN SILENCED BY WIRELESS HINT

"Avoid All Political Interviews," Warned "J. O.," Who May Be Jesse Overstreet.

NO WORD ABOUT HARRIMAN

Speaker Cannon Won't Talk of Him, Either, but Hurries to Washington on Arrival from Panama.

Thanks to wireless telsgraphy, tbe witness cited hy hoth sides on the issue of veracity raised between President Roosevelt and E. H. Harriman as to the financing of the New York State campaign of 1904 was silenced yesterday. That witness was Representative James S. Sherman of this State, who as Chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee is supposed to know whether or not the President personally appealed to the railroad man for the two-hundred-thousand-dollar subscription which is said to have been so potent a factor in determining the political destiny of New York in the year of the National campaign.

Mr. Sherman arrived in port yesterday on the Bluecher with Speaker Cannon's party, which for the last month has been cruising the Spanish Main. He had in his pocket a wireless message addressed to him, which the Bluecher had plucked out of the air on Saturday night. It read:

Avoid all political interviews. J. O.

Mr. Sherman didn't seem to know who "J. O." was, but the message was as effective as if it had been signed "T. R." He shut up, and stayed shut up. "J. O." was conjectured to be Congressman Jesse Overstreet of Indiana, who was Secretary of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee.

Nevertheless, Mr. Sherman was puzzled. At Nassau, the last port at which the party had touched last Thursday, the American papers they could buy were a week old, and ten days ago there was nothing more exciting in sight than the slump in the stock market, the Thaw trial, and the fight between Taft and Foraker. The marconigram did not explain enough.

About 9 o'clock yesterday morning the pilot was picked up and brought with him newspapers of last Friday. They were eagerly scanned by the Congressional party, and it was gathered that something really big had broken loose. But the first chapters of the story were missing, and there was no time to piece the information together. The Congressman had too many good-hyes to say to worry about the matter, and was satisfied after a glance at the headlines to await the arrival at Quarantine for further enlightenment.

Delegation of Quietness.

Meanwhile, on the revenue cutter there had gone down to meet the Bluecher, a party of Congressmen sworn to seal Mr. Sherman's lips before ever a reporter could get near him. Congressman William S. Bennet, Congressman George E. Waldo, Congressman William M. Calder, Congressman Lucius N. Littauer, Shipping Commissioner Harry Hanhury, Francis Curtis of the Literary Bureau of the Republican National Committee, and Naval Officer F. J. H. Kracke, formed the self-appointed band of guardians who lost their sleep to start at 6:30 o'clock in the morning to prevent Mr. Sherman saying anything at all about the situation.

The revenue cutter ran alongside the Bluecher about 11 o'clock, and the Congressmen were the first to board her. The reportsrs were obliged to wait till all the customs officials had got aboard and meantime Mr. Sherman had been put on his guard. He had been found in Speaker's Cannon's cabin and into his hand was hastily thrust a file of newspapers containing the story of all the President says he ascribed to Mr. Harriman. From headquarters, it was said, urgent directions were given to him to refrain from even good words. Mr. Sherman, apprised at length of the outlines of the crisis, issued from his cabin and faced the reporters.

Nothing to Say Abont Anything.

"Gentlemen," he began st once. "I can give you nothing on any point whatever. I'll be delighted to present to you photographs of myself and my granddaughter, however. We only received news of the political crisis a couple of hours ago, and I do not know the details."

"Here is a complete account," said one of the reporters, producing a bundle of newspapers.

"I don't wish to read them," said the Congressman.

"They're excellent Sunday reading—statements by the President," was suggested.

"I don't care," said the Congressman, recklessly. "I can't answer your questions upon any point whatever."

"The President stated that you told him Mr. Harriman had declared that he could buy the judiciary," a reporter began.

"I have nothing to say," protested the Congressman. "Now, gentlemen, don't ho discourteous. I can tell you nothing. I have been having a good time for thirty days, and I intend to go on having it, at least for to-day."

Won't Affirm or Deny.

"Why did you go to Harriman and ask him for large contributions to the campaign fund after the President had declared that he would accept only dollar subscriptions?" persisted another questioner.

"I have nothing to say."

"Will you affirm or deny it?"

"I have nothing to say."

"Well, will you say anything when you reach New York and have had time to find out exactly what has happened?"

"I will not. I intend to leave New York by the first train I can catch for Utica. You see I'm giving you a very good imitation of a sphinx."

The reporters admitted that that was so and Mr. Sherman went off to consult again with his friends. He had an hour to talk things over before the vessel docked, but he declared at the end of that time that he was still in executive session and could not say a word. As soon as his baggage had been passed through the customs he hurried away and caught the first train to Utica without even visiting the Republican Club.

Cannon Talks of Stock Slump.

Speaker Cannon was equally uncommunicative. He based his refusal to talk on the steamer on the same grounds that Mr. Sherman did. He did not know what all the pother was about, he said, and until he could find out exactly, he would confine his remarks to the pleasure he had got out of his trip. However, he promised that as soon as he reached the Waldorf he would get bold of the newspapers and "read up."

Cheered by the fact that one politician thought the epistles of the President good reading for Sunday the reporters gathered later at the Waldorf. The Spenker would not see them, but sent down the following statement by his Secretary, L. White Busbey:

"I have been absent from the United States since the adjournment of Congress on March 4. I have been literally without news of the events that have occurred since that time.

"I am informed that there have been great fluctuations in the price of securities, but I am gratified to know that the situation is changing for the better, and I hope and believe that nothing will intervene to interfere with production and commerce in the broadest sense.

"I feel assured that when the time arrives to decide on the continuance or change of our fiscal, commercial, and industrial policy the people of this country will in the future, as in the past, successfully and justly solve the problems that may be presented."

No Personal Knowledge of the Row.

There the statement ended. It was pointed out to the Speaker that so far it was like the play of "Hamlet" without the Prince of Denmark. He was told that people wanted to know what he thought of the Roosevelt-Harriman charges. Then he added this:

"I have only had time to glance at the newspapers, and as far as I have read I have no personal knowledge on any single point in the controversy."

A good deal of speculation arose as to exactly how far the Speaker had had time to read the newspapers between his arrival and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

It was said that the Speaker did not communicate at all with Washington on his arrival here. A sudden change of plans last night, however, was thought to betoken a possible summons to the seat of Government.

Mr. Cannon had intended to stay over here to-day and go to Washington some time this evening for a week. Late yesterday he suddenly made up his mind to get away at once by the midnight train. He explained his change of resolution by the fact that he had some plans to approve as Chairman of the Congressional Building Committee and was wanted in Washington immediately. It was surmised, however, that possibly it was the White House rather than the Capitol which demanded his attendance.

He will be in Washington a week and will then go to Danville, his home town, for the municipal election there.

WHO GAGGED SHERMAN?

"J. O." Might Be Jesse Overstreet, but No One Knows.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—In Washington the initials "J. O." connected with politics, stand for Jesse Overstreet, the Indiana Congressman who was Secretary of the Republican Congressional Committee, but threw up the job after he had had a difference with the President over an Indiana appointment which Senator Beveridge got away from him.

What motive Overstreet may have had for warning Sherman against talking politics is a matter of speculation here. While Sherman is Chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee, and as such in close touch with the President on political matters, he is regarded as not hostile to the railroad interests, especially of New York, where his intimate political association has been with Odell, the man of whom Harriman said on the stand:

"He derived his political influence from me."

FOR TUBERCULOSIS SERUM.

Physicians Here Watching Experiments by Dr. Calmette.

The announcement by Dr. A. Calmette, Director of the Pasteur Institute at Lille, France, that he had discovered a process of vaccination that may prove efficient in stopping the spread of tuberculosis, as described in THE TIMES's special cablegram from Paris, was widely discussed yesterday.

A prominent physician told a TIMES reporter that practitioners watched closely the developments in the experiments made by Dr. Calmette in every field, because his researches had always been thorough and his findings important. His latest report, made to the medical congress sitting at Cannes, in which he told of a method of injecting tuberculous bacilli in animals, and in that way making them immune, appeared to New York physicians who have followed Dr. Calmette's work to be a certain development of experiments which the Frenchman is known to have been pursuing for many years.

When the full report, which will be published in a medical journal, reaches here it will be studied with much interest by Americans who are working at the great problem of wiping out the "white plague."

THE SPEAKER HOME; LIFE OF HIS PARTY

Taught the Young Folks How to Dance and Drove Away Dull Care.

ALL POLITICS WERE BARRED

Congressmen Much Impressed with the Work at Panama—Courteously Received by Swettenham.

Speaker Cannon summed up the trip he has just taken to the Isthmus of Panama, Venezuela, and the West Indies with a Congressional party as the guest of Congressman William B. McKinley of Illinois, in the Bluecher, in a speech he made to his fellow-passengers on Saturday night. He said:

"We have had all kinds of excitement, we have rescued a shipwrecked crew, we missed an earthquake at Kingston by an hour. We have been in quarantine. We had no declaration of war, but we have had one of love. I don't know what the end of the voyage will be like, but I have my hopes."

He did not add that he had been the life of the whole party from the day he showed the younger members how to dance. It came about in this way. A solemn reception was tendered to him on one of the first days out, and the junior passengers determined to turn it into a dance. Then the women began to beg the Speaker to lead them out.

Cannon Led the Dance.

"No," said he, "you young people do not know how to dance. I need a partner of maturer years to show you how a dance should really be performed."

So he invited an old friend of his, Mrs. Watkins of Chicago, to honor him for the next number, and led her through a measure which was officially declared to be a quadrille, if not a minuet. Other less authentic sources of information, however, defined it as a Virginia reel, and said that its execution destroyed all doubt as to the voyage being a complete success.

Only one disadvantage the passengers suffered from having the Speaker on board. The health authorities at Colon decided that the quarantine law must be strictly enforced when a semi-official party was in port. The Hamburg-American steamer, which had come from Venezuela the month before had been allowed to land her passengers, although they had been only two days out, and the law demanded six days' quarantine before any one could be put off the Isthmus. The Bluecher had altered her route so that she might be five days away from the fever-stricken ports of Venezuela before she touched at Colon, but the passengers were told they could not disembark for 24 hours.

Col. Gorgas, the sanitary officer of the Isthmus, offered to permit Speaker Cannon and his party to land, but the Speaker refused, unless all the other passengers were given the same right. The port authorities were obdurate, and it was only when it was learned, by accident, how slackly the law had been enforced with a non-official party and the Bluecher was making preparations to sail away, that the regulations were relaxed.

Across the Isthmus, the Congressional party traveled in a special train. The Speaker was much impressed with the admirable organization of the canal work and remarked; "This is not a canal problem, but a railway problem. It is just cutting away mountains to make way for railroads. Why we have been doing it for years in the West."

He was also much struck with the sanitary measures, and said: "I don't know whether it's sanitation or civilization. But I know we've introduced here the white man's civilization. We're just as comfortable here as in Illinois."

Talking of the outlook at Panama, the Speaker said yesterday:

"We were all agreeably surprised with the amount of work done. I believe it's a mere question of work. It is being carried on with splendid organization. I'm not a civil engineer, but if I had to pay for the job myself, I'd say 'Hustle along, boss, get the dirt out of the cuts and put it on the dams.'

Congressman James A. Tawney of Minnesota, another member of the party, was equally pleased, and declared that it was merely a question of handling dirt and protecting the health of the workers. He understood that the military engineers now in charge of the canal would not in any way alter the excellent organization which Chief Engineer Stevens had built up.

Courtesies in Foreign Ports.

Wherever the party touched they were entertained by the Government officials. In Venezuela, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in the West Indian Islands, the British and French Governors called upon them and put carriages at their disposal. At Kingston, Jamaica, they were a little doubtful of their reception by Sir Alexander Swettenham, although they realized that in the unsettled condition of affairs he could not entertain them with the dinners which they had received at Port of Spain and Trinidad.

Speaker Cannon's secretary, L. White Busbey, however, went off to pay the respects of the party to Government House. He found that the Governor was away, making a ceremonial call upon some other American legislators. Secretary Metcalf, Senator Hale, and Senator Penrose had arrived at Jamaica at the same time as Speaker Cannon, and were staying at the Constance Hotel, two miles away from Kingston. Sir Alexander Swettenham had found time to leave his official duties to visit them.

The Bluecher party found the Governor a man quite different from what they expected, and had a very pleasant interchange of courtesies with him. They were quite ready to believe the Jamaican who explained to them that at the time of the unpleasant incident with Admiral Davis Sir Alexander, with the responsibility of the disaster on his shoulders, was almost beside himself with worry.

The Speaker would not express any opinion about the Cuban question, but others on the ship drew wide conclusions from their one day's stay in the island. Senator Charles Curtis said that as far as he could see it was the jealousy and conflicts among the leading men of Cuba which caused all the trouble.

"If they would get together, they could manage the Government all right," he said.

Andrew D. White, ex-Ambassador to Germany and Russia, was on the Bluecher, but not of the Speaker's party. He was very outspoken in his comments on the trip.

"For many years," he declared, "I have thought the Cuban question more serious than the Philippine problem. No one dreams of making the Philippines a Territory or State. But if we were to annex Cuba and give it Statehood it would be the equivalent of adding a great negro State to the Republic.

"The Cubans are incapable of self-government, but they would have two Senators and a proportional number of Representatives at Washington. Everything I saw in Cuba strengthened my conviction that Cuba as a State would be a curse to us. It would be simply a rotten borough, with a small number of wealthy capitalists in the midst of an extensive negro population. They are utterly incapable of governing themselves, to say nothing of aiding in the government of the United States."

At Nassau the Congressmen were much edified by the visit they paid to the Legislature in session. All the members wore evening clothes, and after watching the solemnity and dignity with which everything was done, Speaker Cannon remarked:

"It may be all right, but Gaines could raise more hell in fifteen minutes than they could in fifteen years."

Marooned at Nassau.

At Nassau the party had the unpleasant experience of being marooned for three days with nothing but the clothes they stood up in. The Blücher had to lie in an open roadstead, and when the tender with 200 of the passengers tried to regain the ship the waves were running so high that the manila ropes with which they made fast to the steamer were broken and the steel cables tore the bitts out of the smaller boat.

There was nothing for it but to make for the shore. The women on board were tossed from side to side of the deck. A sailor was thrown overboard. He was rescued, however, and every passenger stayed calm and collected. One woman was thrown across the upper deck. The Speaker ran out of the pilot house, where he was sitting with the Captain, and picked her up. All the party bought sweaters to protect themselves from the cold, and cared nothing for appearance where their comfort was concerned.

Politics as such were debarred upon the trip. As Speaker Cannon said yesterday:

"Nobody has thought, or even thought that he thought. I know I have not, and it's been the most enjoyable holiday of the sort, and I haven't had many, that I have ever had."

As soon as he arrived in the harbor, however, he was obliged to come to earth again. One of the first of his visitors asked the Speaker what he had to say with reference to the suggestion lately made by Senator McCall of Massachusetts that in the course of his travels he might suffer a change of heart and see a great light with regard to the tariff. He replied:

Still a "Standpatter."

"I am not a revisionist. There was nothing in my trip to change my attitude on the tariff question. I'm as much a standpatter as ever. I've not changed a particle."

In accordance with his reverence for customs duties he and his party prepared to submit themselves to whatever ducs the officials found it in their hearts to exact.

"I've not much fear for my party," said Uncle Joe, as the dreaded declaration sheets were spread before him. "They're not such fools as to pay double price for United States goods which they can buy in the United States for one price. But whatever the law requires we'll pay."

Then he thought a moment and spoke of his own case:

"I will tell them that in my own baggage is a shell necklace for my granddaughter, price 25 cents. Rare! There is also another necklace of coral, price 50 cents. Excellent! I don't know if I shall have trouble about these. But whatever the law requires we'll pay."

But as later the Speaker was seen departing from the Custom House with his secretary, bearing in his hand a curious coral growth a yard wide, which had once grown upon the cable at St. Thomas, and neither seemed depressed, it was concluded that he had been able to satisfy the law's demands.

To Congressman McKinley the members of his party presented a loving cup as a memento of the trip. Besides the Speaker there were Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas, Congressmen James S. Sherman, New York; James A. Tawney, Minnesota; Henry C. Loudenslager, New Jersey; J. Van Vechten Olcott, New York; J. Hampton Moore, and L. White Busbey, secretary to the Speaker; Dr. C. F. Hough, Champaign, Ill., and John C. Eversman, secretary to Mr. McKinley.

CANNON SEES RESCUE AT SEA.

Bluecher Saves the Crew from a Sinking Bark.

The Hamburg-American liner Bluecher, when she arrived yesterday from a cruise of thirty-three days in the West Indies, brought in Capt. Larsen and the crew of the Norwegian bark Gulfport. They were rescued from their water-logged craft on April 5, about 250 miles east of St. Augustine, Fla. After taking off the men the derelict was set on fire, and as the Bluecher got under way the flames were sweeping the Gulfport from bow to stern.

The Bluecher left Nassau on April 5, and encountered strong northeast winds and a heavy sea. They were plowing through a strong sea on April 5, when the bark was sighted making signals of distress. The Bluecher at once changed her course and bore down to the sailing vessel. They made her out to be the Gulfport, bound from Mobile to Bergen, Norway, laden with staves. She was almost awash, rolling heavily, and from her foremast was flying the signal, "We are sinking." As soon as her condition was made out a boat was lowered, in charge of First Officer Carl H. Heyes. Though there was a fair sea running, the rescue was made without much difficulty, and within an hour Capt. Larsen and his twelve men were on board the liner. The Gulfport was then set on fire.

The skipper and his men stood at the rail and silently watched their burning craft for a time, and then Capt. Larsen told the story of the wreck. He said that his ship sailed from Mobile on March 5 and that nothing unusual occurred until she was off Capt Hatteras on March 27. Caught in a heavy northeast gale lasting forty-eight hours, the vessel began to labor heavily. She weathered this blow, and the men repaired the damage done in the moderate spell which followed. Hardly had things been put shipshape when on April 5 the northeast wind increased in force, and by night the vessel was rolling and pitching in a heavy sea, waves breaking over her continually, while the terrific gale whipped what little canvas she was under to ribbons. In the height of the storm the vessel sprang a leak, and as soon as Capt. Larsen found that she was taking in water he ordered the men to the pumps. The vessel drifted before the storm.

On the morning of April 5 the storm abated, but a heavy sea constantly broke inboard. Then the sand which she carried for ballast choked the pumps, and the water gained on the exhausted men until there were three feet in her hold. Signals of distress were hoisted, and soon the Bluecher came along.

The Gulfport was built in Italy in 1877. She registered 748 tons, and was owned in Bergen.

CARNEGIE FUND LIMITED.

President Pritchett Opposes Pensions to State University Professors.

Henry S. Pritchett, President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, in an official paper issued yesterday, gives reasons why in his opinion the pensions for professors, provided by the Foundation, should not be made available for the Faculties of State-supported universities.

He admits that their work is of the same order and of the same devotion as that done in private universities, but he points out that the State institution has a mission apart from its mere teaching function. It stands for the vital connection between education and practical democratic government.

Dr. Pritchett thought that if pensions were offered to the professors employed in State universities the sense of responsibility for education would be materially weakened among the Legislatures.

Finally he stated that if the State universities were admitted to the benefits of the foundation at once they would immediately absorb all the available funds, and the foundation would no longer be able to exercise a healthful influence upon the development of education in America.

ART MUSEUM MUST PAY.

$10,000 in Assessments Against Rogers Land.

PATERSON, April 7.—The Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York City will probably have to pay $10,000 for sewer assessments levied against property formerly owned by the late Jacob S. Rogers. These assessments are a first lien on all property affected. The owners of the property have warranty deeds from the Rogers Land Company; the latter has a warranty deed from the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which was the chief beneficiary under the will of the late Jacob S. Rogers.

The museum managers apparently were not cognizant of the situation when they sold the property under warranty deed. When the Rogers Land Company obtained possession the first step was the opening of streets. By so doing the company made the sewer assessments due and payable at once, but did not realize that fact, and sold lots under warranty deeds.

Dying Because He Cut a Corn.

TRENTON, N. J., April 7.—Charles F. Smith, a hotel proprietor in this vicinity, is dying at his home in this city from blood poisoning which he contracted a month ago while paring a corn on his left foot with a razor. He made a deep incision and the wound became infected.

POLICY HOLDERS OUT OF INSURANCE COUNT

Withdraw Watchers on the Ground That the Canvass Has Become a Farce.

ALL PROTESTS IGNORED

International Committee Makes Public Affidavits to Show That False Ballots Have Been Counted.

Asserting that the canvass of the ballots cast in the elections of the New York and Mutual Life Insurance Companies has become a farce under the systems adopted by the boards of $35-a-day canvassers appointed by Insurance Supt. Kelsey, and that thousands of forged ballots are being counted in each company for the administration ticket in place of bona fide ballots voted for the policy holders' tickets, the International Policy Holders' Committee withdrew its watchers and challengers at the close of the day Saturday, and will have no further part in conducting the election machinery.

This became known yesterday when George R. Scrugham, Manager of the committee, gave out a detailed statement explaining the position of the committee and containing a summary of the hundreds of affidavits that have been collected by the committee in the matter of the forged ballots.

Mr. Scrugham said:

Mr. Scrugham's Statement.

"The manner in which the Insurance law has been violated by the companies in the recent election, and the inefficient way in which the Department of Insurance, which is charged with its enforcement, has conducted the supervision, (not alone of the election but of the canvass of the votes cast,) has made this election the most stupendous of the many frauds perpetrated upon policy holders.

"From the beginning the companies, with the assistance of the Department of Insurance, have evaded and nullified in every way possible the law as enacted. The companies filed lists of policy holders at Albany which contained thousands of incorrect names with false and misleading addresses, while they gave to agents and canvassers, not alone the correct names and addresses, but the policy numbers of the insured, which enabled them to forge, with impunity, ballots for the administration tickets, send them in, and with the assistance of the Election Inspectors have them counted as valid votes.

"That this was done on a wholesale scale is conclusively proved by affidavits in our possession obtained from every section of the country where duplicate votes were found during the canvass. How many of these forged ballots were cast will probably never be known, for the Inspectors of Election, acting under the Department of Insurance, are making no effort to ascertain the validity of the votes cast or the qualifications of voters, as specifically required by the statutes, beyond such information as is furnished them by the companies.

Policy Holders' Proofs Refused.

"We presented affidavits to the Mutual Life Board of Inspectors and offered to produce the witnesses to prove these forgeries, but they refused to accept the affidavits or hear any testimony we wished to present, and the result is that forged ballots are classed as 'good' votes for the administration ticket and the lawful ballots cast by the policy holders are thrown out.

"Some idea may be gained of the chicanery in these by these illustrations:

"David Kerbs, a policy holder of the Mutual Life, came to the office of the committee on Dec. 14, 1906, and made out a ballot, which ballot was formally cast on Dec. 18 (the day of election). During the canvass a forged 'Peabody ballot, bearing his name, policy number and home address was found and the Inspectors promptly threw out his ballot cast for the United Committees' ticket and counted the forged one.'

"Mr. Scrugham gave out this summary of a few of the affidavits in the possession of the committee bearing on the forgery question:

Elfan L. Reynolds, Delton, Wis., owner of Policy No. 1,133,440, voted for the United Committees' ticket on Oct. 30, 1906, ballot being witnessed by L. O. Bass. This ballot was counted as void by the Inspectors, and a "Peabody" ballot was counted as good which purports to bear the same name, address, and policy number, dated Dec. 15, 1906, and witnessed by H. G. Clizbe.

Alex. Rida, 152 Commerce St., New Haven, Conn., voted a ballot for the United Committees' ticket on Nov. 21, 1906, which was witnessed by his wife Mrs. Alex. Rida, Policy No. 1,307,580. This ballot was counted as void, and the Inspectors counted as good a "Peabody" ballot purporting to bear the same name, address, and policy number, which was dated Oct. 15 1906, and witnessed by George E. Nettleton.

John E. Schmidt, Rochester, Penn., voted a ballot for the United Committees' ticket on Dec. 10, 1906, on his Policy No. 720,917. This ballot was witnessed by John Mitchell and was counted as void. A "Peabody" ballot was counted as good purporting to bear the same name, address, and policy number, dated Oct. 27, 1906, and witnessed by F. L. Parker.

Will A. Rothwell, Moberly, Mo., voted a ballot for the United Committees' ticket on Oct. 30, 1906 on his Policy Number 520,445, which was witnessed by M. A. Huertgen, (a Notary Public.) This ballot was counted as void by the Inspectors and a "Peabody" ballot was counted as good purporting to bear the same name, address, and policy number of Mr. Rothwell, dated Oct. 18, 1906, witnessed by John Arnold.

James Edgar Wall, Carthage, Texas, owner of policy No. 1,185,618, voted for the United Committees' ticket on Oct. 24, 1906, ballot being witnessed by Mabel Wall and Tompis A. Wall. This ballot was counted as void by the Inspectors, and a "Peabody" ballot was counted as good, purporting to bear the same name, address, and policy number dated Dec. 15, 1906, and witnessed by "U. S. Grant," voting for the administration ticket.

John J. O'Leary, 24 Broad Street, New York City, voted a ballot for the United Committees' ticket on his policy, No. 1,483,037, dated Oct. 19, 1906, and witnessed by Sydney D. Rarig. A "Peabody" ballot was cast bearing his name and address, 74 East Ninety-third Street, (this was a former residence; policy holder moved from this address about two years ago,) dated Dec. 3, 1906, bearing policy No. 1,483,037, witnessed by T. Lacey, voting for the administration ticket.

W. O. Stephens's Protest.

The affidavits submitted by Mr. Scrugham yesterday included one from W. O. Stephens, cashier of the Bank of Melvern at Melvern, Kan. Mr. Stephens declared that his vote had been solicited by J. N. Engle, a Mutual agent at Emporia, Kan., and he inclosed the letter written by Engle, which declared that "Thomas Ryan, owner of the Equitable, and others, are spending a million dollars to elect the International Directors in order to get control of the Mutual and New York Life, too."

Mr. Stephens sent the following reply:

Melvern, Kan., Nov. 20, 1906.

Your letter received this morning. For your information, Mr. Engle, will say that I carry a $5,000 policy in the Mutual Life. I have never had the pleasure of meeting you, nor was it through your efforts that I am now a policy holder in your company. I have never lived in Arvonia, nor none of my relatives.

Possibly the policy holders may vote the administration ticket in this State, but hardly thought it possible, after reading the newspapers of the past year, that they would vote to continue in office the same men who have robbed and plundered in the past. If I thought the business men of Emporia had really furnished the money for the stamp which you inclosed me, would return it to you, but have heard recently of the Mutual trying to explain away a $12,000 purchase of stamps in trying to re-elect themselves, will not, as it is probably my own money, as a policy holder, which bought the stamps. I notice that President Peabody has "fired" several competent general agents of the company, who are not now supporting the "administration ticket," and which probably accounts for your activity in the matter. As my "job" does not depend on the re-election of the present Board of Trustees, will not have to vote as the company dictates in order to hold my job.

W. O. STEPHENS.

His ballot for the United Committee ticket was voted, according to his affidavit, on Oct. 22. However, a Peabody ballot voted by "Willie O. Stephens, Melvern, Kansas," dated Nov. 15 and witnessed by J. N. Engle, was counted by the Inspectors, the United Committee ballot being thrown out.

In regard to the New York Life ballots, Mr. Scrugham said yesterday:

"In the canvass of the votes of the New York Life the most astounding instances of forgery came to light, the ballots of whole families of insured being forged and cast, an illustrative case being five ballots bearing the names of Charles, William, Sophie, Maria, and Louise Haussler, the address (required by law) being given as West Forty-fifth Street and Eleventh Avenue, New York City. An investigation showed that not a member of the family voted in the recent election, and that they had not resided at that address in over two years, while one of them, Mrs. Louise Haussler-Blenzle, in making her affidavit, stated that she has been married for over two years and notified the New York Life of her change of name and address more than a year ago.

"Erhard Gelhardt, a merchant at 319 East Ninetieth Street, stated in his affidavit that he voted a ballot for the International Committee ticket which was witnessed by his son, yet a forged ballot was cast for the administration ticket bearing his name, policy number, and his former home address, 414 East Eighty-ninth Street. This forged ballot was witnessed by an agent of the New York Life Insurance Company, who Mr. Gelhardt says he has not seen in over two years.

False Addresses on Ballots.

"Such ballots were cast as William Grissler, 418 East Twelfth Street, the ground lying between 410 and 440 East Twelfth Street being a cemetery.

"Hundreds of ballots were voted and addresses given which upon investigation proved that no such persons ever lived in that vicinity. Numerous instances also developed where agents had sent in proxies and ballots bearing the names of policy holders who had been dead for years, while many ballots were cast bearing the names of former policy holders who had allowed their policies to lapse."

BRIEF BY MR. CLEVELAND.

Opposes Bills Aimed to Limit Pay of Insurance Presidents.

Ex-President Grover Cleveland has prepared a brief, directed against the laws that have been introduced in the Legislatures of several States providing that the salaries of Presidents of life insurance companies shall not exceed in some instances $50,000 a year and in others $25,000 a year. The majority of these laws, adopted in accordance with the report of the Committee of Fifteen appointed by a conference of Insurance Commissioners and Attorney Generals of thirty or forty States, adopts the $50,000 limitation. Mr. Cleveland attacks it as Chairman and General Counsel of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents.

In the "Big Three" insurance companies, the salary of President Paul Morton of the Equitable Life, of which Mr. Cleveland is a Trustee, is the only one in excess of the $50,000 limit fixed by the law which Mr. Cleveland opposes. Other salaries in excess of $50,000 as disclosed by the Armstrong Committee's investigation are those of President Hegeman of the Metropolitan, who was paid $100,000 in 1905; Vice President Haley Fisk of that company, at $75,000; President John F. Dryden of the Prudential, who has received $85,000 a year, and Vice President Leslie D. Ward, whose remuneration has been $60,000 a year. It has not been announced since the investigation closed that any of these salaries have been reduced.

Legislation Not Conservative.

Mr. Cleveland in his brief declares that "legislation of this character is so new and startling as to indicate a disposition to depart from all conservative and steady sentiment touching State supervision and regulation of life insurance companies." He then takes up the salaries paid Presidents and First Vice Presidents in twenty-nine leading companies in the United States, including the five in which the President gets $50,000 or more, and says:

"From this examination it appears that the total premium receipts of the twenty-nine companies amounted to $440,905,908; that the percentage of these receipts paid to Presidents and Vice Presidents by all the companies was 29-100 of 1 per cent.; that the percentage of their premium receipts so expended by the twenty-four companies paying salaries of less than $50,000 was 31-100 of 1 per cent., but that the percentage of premium receipts so expended by the five companies paying to their Presidents and Vice Presidents $50,000 per annum or upward amounted to only 13-100 of 1 per cent. In view of the universally conceded solvency and soundness of all companies paying these larger salaries, no one can have the hardihood to claim that the small percentage of their premium receipts thus expended could by any possibility impair the absolute security of their policy holders' contracts which phase of the subject might properly be considered a legitimate subject of State solicitude, and these considerations of solvency and absolute security gain conclusive force from the fact that the admitted assets of these five companies amount to more than $1,500,000,000.

"It seems quite plain, therefore, from a statement of actual conditions not only that the payment of the salaries condemned by this threatened State legislation does not in the least impair or put in jeopardy the security of the insured, but that its effect on their right to premium dividends or participation in accumulated assets may well be regarded in individual cases a negligible factor.

"It is within the knowledge of everybody that the assumption of grave responsibilities and the possession of necessary equipment legitimately command large remuneration. This is recognized in the laws of our States in the compensation they allow for the administration of estates or trusts. It may be surprisingly suggestive if the compensation thus allowed be compared with the salaries of insurance officers, which it is now proposed to prohibit by State legislation. As has been already stated, the assets of the companies paying $50,000 or upward to their chief executive officers amount to more than $1,500,000,000. The aggregate percentage of such assets paid by these companies to their Presidents and Vice Presidents annually is 37-1000 of 1 per cent.

"It is hardly possible that any State in the Union limits the fees and allowance paid for the administration of a trust or estate to as low a rate as 1 per cent. of the amount to be administered or cared for, but even on this small percentage the compensation for the care or administration of funds or an estate as large as the assets of the companies mentioned would amount to $15,000,000.

"It must be admitted that in view of all the conditions surrounding these larger companies, they cannot be arbitrarily charged with hurtful extravagance in paying such large salaries to their responsible executive officers as their qualifications demand. With the light of publicity constantly turned on their actions, and admonished by recent investigations and the passage of drastic laws in their home States, is it fair to presume that their Directors will sanction salary expenditures greater than circumstances and the requirements of good management will justify?"

You can't dig up an old suit among all our Spring mixtures—neither an old pattern, nor an old cut.

We did think of keeping over a few hundred desirable suits of last Spring's cut, but finally threw them all into a clearance sale so as to have an absolutely clear deck for new things.

Spring suits, $18 to $40.

The very same thing is true among our boys' Spring mixture suits—every single one of them was made for this Spring.

Same thing again with our "Star" neglige shirts—an absolutely fresh stock.

Some Disposition Among Business Men and Politicians to Doubt Him.

REGRET VERACITY ISSUES

Democrats and Republicans, However, Reported to Desire a Third Term for the President.

Republican editors continue replying to THE NEW YORK TIMES inquiry as to whether President Roosevelt is as popular as he was when elected, and their testimony adds to the evidence that the President's strength in the country at this moment is greater than at any other point of his career.

The replies received up to yesterday were unanimous in their reflection of the sentiment of Republicans as being more enthusiastic than ever in their support of his policies and admiration of his personality. Some volunteered the report of a general demand that Mr. Roosevelt, whatever his personal desires and notwithstanding his declaration against another nomination, be required again to be the standard-bearer. This sentiment reappears to-day.

Among the replies published to-day one alone remarks a disposition to criticise the President, and believes that he is not so strong to-day as when elected. Five editors estimate that he is "fully as strong." Twenty-five agree that he is "stronger than ever," "far stronger than ever," or "tremendously stronger than ever." The basis of Mr. Roosevelt's popularity is still declared to be his "square deal" spirit, his enmity to "the interests," and his championship of the cause of "the people."

While the enthusiasm and confidence in the President's increased popularity are practically as strong as they were in the first lot of letters received by THE NEW YORK TIMES, the replies published this morning in several cases note the existence of a disposition among business men to temper the praises they have hitherto bestowed upon him, and the lessening of regard for him among the practical politicians.

The few references made to the Harriman episode regard it as likely to help the President. One editor, however, notices a slight regret on the part of some that the President deems it necessary to reply to his critics so frequently, and another remarks upon it as unfortunate that the issue of veracity should so frequently be raised in the President's controversies.

Many of the editors who have written THE NEW YORK TIMES comment on the extreme popularity of the President among Democrats. To-day one declares that the people of his section are for Roosevelt regardless of party, while another affirms it to be a notorious saying of Democrats in his State that it is immaterial whether next year the Republicans nominate and the Democrats help elect, or the Democrats nominate and the Republicans help elect, the popular idol of "the masses."

The letters, which now number one hundred, in which the Republican editors of the country report the immense enthusiasm with which Republican and many Democratic voters support President Roosevelt and the strength of the sentiment in favor of his nomination for a third term, constitute a reasonable commentary on the political situation as it exists at this hour.

The letters received yesterday follow:

Stamford, Conn., April 5.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While I hold no commission to declare and interpret the political opinions of my fellow-citizens here or elsewhere, I see no impropriety in stating, as my best judgment of the situation, that President Roosevelt is quite as popular—and I believe more popular—with the voters of this section than he was at the time of his election to the Presidency.

Editor, The Daily Advocate.

Dixon, Ill., April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Roosevelt is now more popular than he was when elected.

B. F. SHAW,
The Telegraph.

Pana, Ill., April 5.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my opinion President Roosevelt's popularity has not ceased to grow. He is more popular than ever by reason of his firm and unflinching stand for the right as he sees it on all questions.

JOSIAH P. HODGE,
Editor The News.

Anderson, Ind., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is stronger to-day in Indiana than ever before. If nominated by the Republicans for another term he would sweep the State by the largest majority ever given him or any other candidate.

EDWARD C. TONER,
Editor Herald.

Marion, Ill., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I should say unhesitatingly that President Roosevelt is stronger and more popular than ever. This is due to his righteous and fearless efforts to control powerful and dangerous interests. He should be renominated and re-elected in the interest of the people.

O. J. PAGE,
Publisher Leader.

Mason City, Iowa, April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a feeling often expressed that the Republican Party has no other man who can be nominated that will continue the Roosevelt policies. A recent canvass of the Iowa General Assembly, now in session, as to preference for the Presidential succession developed that fully three-fourths of the membership favored Roosevelt.

EMORY H. ENGLISH,
Editor Times-Herald.

Marshalltown, Iowa, April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There appears no decadence of the popularity of Roosevelt and the Roosevelt policies in Iowa. It is my opinion that in event of his renomination for the Presidency Roosevelt would poll about the same vote that Iowa gave him at the last general election.

F. A. MOSCRIP,
Associate Editor Times-Republican.

Logansport, Ind., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is every indication that Theodore Roosevelt to-day is stronger with the voters of Indiana than at any time in his political career.

A. R. KIESLING,
Editor Journal

Terre Haute, Ind., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is as strong to-day with the voters in this section as he was at the time of his election—indeed, he is more popular, and would to-day poll more votes from all parties than he did in 1904.

R. S. CARVER,
Editor Tribune.

Wabash, Ind., April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the rural districts of this part of Indiana and among the working people President Roosevelt's popularity appears to be undiminished. His course in relation to corporations is generally approved, but I find among business men a marked disposition to temper the praise they have hitherto showered upon him, with the suggestion that the work of wholesale reformation should cease for a while, until the public adjusts itself to new conditions. Too much radicalism, they feel, is a menace to prosperity.

CHARLES S. HAAS,
Editor Plain Dealer.

Wellington, Kan., April 3.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my judgment President Roosevelt is even stronger and more popular with the voters generally, Republicans and others, in this section of the country than he was when elected.

A. A. RICHARDS,
Editor The Mail and The Star.

Lexington, Ky., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My observation is that President Roosevelt is very much stronger with the masses of ths people in this section than he was in the campaign of 1904.

SAMUEL J. ROBERTS,
Editor Lexington Leader.

Columbus, Ohio, April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So far as I am able to judge, President Roosevelt is stronger with the voters of Ohio now than he was in 1904, when he carried the State by a plurality of about 255,000.

ROBERT O. RYDER,
Editor Ohio State Journal.

Gallipolis, Ohio, April 5.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So far as my observation goes President Roosevelt was never stronger in the minds of the people than he is to-day.

W. G. SIBLEY,
Editor Tribune.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The popularity of President Roosevelt and confidence of the people in his wisdom and integrity have grown stronger since the announcement of his policy of the "square deal" and his subsequent efforts to enforce it. The people here are in accord with that policy and will insist upon the next President being in sympathy with it.

C. A. ROBERTS,
The Messenger.

Lansing, Mich., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If anything, President Roosevelt is even more popular in this vicinity than he was at the time of his election. Democrats as well as Republicans feel that he has been tried and not found wanting, and are outspoken in their admiration for his candor, honesty, and aggressiveness.

R. G. JONES,
Editor The State Republican.

Burlington, N. J., April 5.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is just as strong among the general people as ever, but there is a noticeable falling away from him among the active politicians, due to the numerous occasions on which the question of veracity has been raised between him and other prominent men.

At the polls, however, in face of the issue just raised between him and Harriman there is no question of strength—backbones are stiffening fast.

GEORGE C. GUNN,
Editor Daily Enterprise.

Carrollton, Mo., April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt's policies are as popular and as strong with the people hers as they were two years ago; but many of his admirers are of the opinion that it is a mistake for the President to condescend to reply to every enemy that attacks him, and by so doing allow himself to be made a party to innumerable newspaper controversies.

S. A. CLARK,
Editor Republican Record.

Sedalia, Mo., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is no doubt in my mind but that President Roosevelt is stronger and more popular in this section at present than he was at the time of his election in 1904.

J. S. BRENNEMAN,
Publisher, Capital.

St. Louis, April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is as popular and strong with the "masses," if not stronger, than when elected. He has lost ground, however, with conservative men in the West.

E. C. BROKMEYER,
Editor Missouri State Republican.

Jefferson City, Mo., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is a popular and notorious saying in this section among the Democrats that they will either nominate Roosevelt and let the Republicans help elect him again, or that the Republicans may nominate him and let the Democrats help elect him.

VERNON L. SMITH,
Editor and Manager Review.

Minneapolis, April 8.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Sentiment in this locality toward President Roosevelt is very much like that prevailing prior to his nomination in 1904. There were here at that time, as in other parts of the country, those who criticised and condemned his policies and would have been glad to have seen him defeated in the convention, but they were so far in the minority as not to affect general sentiment perceptibly. At the time of the election they were so thoroughly silenced that sentiment favorable to him here appeared to be well-nigh unanimous, and that, too, regardless of party lines. There is some revival of the old hostility in a limited section of the business community, but it is not more important than it was in 1904. On the other hand, such incidents as the recent Harriman letter strengthen sentiment favorable to his nomination in 1908.

J. S. McLAIN,
Editor Minneapolis Journal.

Red Wing, Minn., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Replying to your inquiry of April 1st, would say that President Roosevelt is tremendously more popular in this locality than when first elected president. The people here are unanimous for him, regardless of party affiliations.

RED WING DAILY REPUBLICAN,
Per J. K. G.

Meadville, Penn., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt was never stronger or more popular than at present with the mass of the voters. While recent industrial and railroad agitation has estranged some of the moneyed interests, his personality, as well as his policies, has endeared him more than ever to the general public, and it is my opinion that with the voters of this section he is more popular than ever before.

WALTER IRVING BATES,
Editor Tribune-Republican.

Auburn, N. Y., April 6.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this locality President Roosevelt is more popular to-day than he was at the time of his election. This is true when considered from a general standpoint. He has lost some support among a class dependent upon corporations for their revenues and their living, but many of those who draw a share of their incomes from dividends quietly admire his attitude, and secretly express the belief that in the long run the situation is to be improved by his work, for they confess that some check to certain methods of procedure in the corporation world has been due for some time. Nearly the majority of Democrats profess confidence in and respect for the President, and Republicans with few exceptions are free in their expression of satisfaction at his policy. He is more popular and stronger with the voters in this section than ever before.

GEORGE R. PECK,
Editor Advertiser.

Yonkers, N. Y., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my opinion President Roosevelt is as popular and as strong generally with the voters in this section as he was at the time of his election.

J. W. OLIVER,
Editor The Statesman.

Charleston, West Va., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Replying to your question as to "Whether President Roosevelt is as popular and as strong generally with the voters in your section as he was at the time of his election," will say that, in my opinion, he is not. While in the main he has seemed to satisfy the nervous desire of a great many people who are resentful of the large measure of prosperity that has come to the people in recent years, yet there is a growing disposition to be critical of him. This disposition, I think, exists largely, if not altogether, among a class of people who hold to the notion that the Chief Executive of the Nation should devote all of his attention to the function of his office. In my opinion, the people are beginning to take a sober second thought and are not proud of the spirit of restlessness and hysteria that has for some time so thoroughly occupied them.

G. C. McINTOSH,
Editor News.

Huntington, West Va., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Roosevelt is perhaps stronger to-day with our people than ever before. These sentiments are more or less those of Republicans and Democrats alike.

C. E. HAWORTH,
Manager Herald.

Morgantown, W. Va., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I glance at a big pile of State exchanges every day, edit a good deal of "country correspondence" for a country paper, and frequently talk with "the man on the street." In my opinion there has been no loss of general popularity on the part of President Roosevelt among the voters of West Virginia. I think he is even stronger now than when he was elected.

ROBERT R. GREEN,
Editor Daily Post.

Sheboygan, Wis., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is the opinion of this paper that Mr. Roosevelt is stronger here and in the country than he has ever been before.

F. A. ZUFELT,
The Sheboygan Telegram.

Madison, Wis., April 4.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So far as can be judged without making a canvass, would say that Roosevelt is the most popular man in public life so far as this section of the State is concerned. He has gained in popularity.

STATE JOURNAL PRINTING COMPANY
AUGUST RODEN, Secretary.

EVEN ROOSEVELT TIRED?

Lieut. Gov. Draper Suggests That He Take a Rest.

BOSTON, Mass., April 7.—At the dinner of the Massachusetts Bar Association last evening President Roosevelt was discussed by Lieut. Gov. Draper and Bishop Lawrence.

In the course of his address the Lieutenant Governor said:

"We are suffering not from bad conditions, but from too much prosperity. We ought to let our tired brains and disordered imaginations, which magnify everything seen, take a rest. We are tired, even from the President to the bellboys. We ought to stop a month and take a rest."

Bishop Lawrence said:

"I expected a great deal from this dinner, but I never looked for that perfection of counsel given by the Lieutenant Governor here this evening. Neither from the pulpit nor from a chair of philosophy have I ever heard such advice so unthinkable, so improbable, that the President of the United States should take a rest."

NO THIRD TERM, SAYS RIIS.

Scouts the Idea That Roosevelt Will Accept a Nomination.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Jacob A. Riis, friend and biographer of the President, came to Washington to-day to see Mr. Roosevelt, with whom he dined this evening at the White House. Afterward he scouted the idea that the President would accept another nomination, no matter what public clamor for him there might be.

"I have just returned from a trip through the West, and I know pretty well the pulse of the people," said Mr. Riis. "There is only one feeling in that section of the United States regarding Roosevelt, and only one sentiment regarding Harriman. The President has the people behind him; they believe he is striving for a purpose that is right, while they have evidence all around them of Harriman's work. If the railroads are proceeding on the line that 'whom the gods would destroy they first make mad' they have picked out the wrong person in Theodore Roosevelt."

Mr. Riis was asked what he thought of the third-term talk.

"The President never made a statement in his life that he did not mean," was the reply. "He was in thorough earnest when he said that he would not accept another nomination."

WEST POINT GUESTS DEPRIVED OF COATS

Col. Howze Compels Visitors to Surrender Cadets' Wraps at Parade.

SHIVER IN COLD BREEZE

Cadets Face an Angry Throng Afterward—Declare the Custom Has Existed for Years.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, April 7.—Discipline at the United States Military Academy had a severe strain put upon it at to-night's dress parade. Hundreds of cadets were forced to stand in line and see their sweethearts and relatives deprived of coats that had been given to them to protect them from the cold wind that swept over the parade ground. This action was taken on the order of Lieut. Col. Robert L. Howse, Commandant of Cadets, and all West Point is thoroughly wrought up about the incident.

The cadets had their Easter ball last night, and scores of relatives and young women friends came up for the occasion. Many of them remained overnight as guests at the homes of officers, at country houses about, and at Garrisons. Others came for dress parade to-night, and there was a throng on the parade ground when the cadets were marched out for this function.

The weather turned very cold during the day, and most of the women visitors had not provided themselves with Winter wraps that were needed. The cadets resorted to a custom that has obtained here for many years without being questioned and loaned them extra overcoats, which provided sufficient protection against the icy wind which swept over the parade grounds. When the cadet corps marched out in their gray uniforms they came between stands that were all gray.

Col. Howze, when he saw this display, stopped the corps and ordered the men detailed as police to go down the line of the stands and demand the surrender of the coats. The policemen went about the work with reluctance, but obeyed the order, and the cadets were compelled to go through their evolutions while they saw one woman after another deprived of a coat. Discipline held, although the youths were bitterly angry, and a better drill has seldom been given.

The women, however, did not conceal their vexation, and officers who were in the throng had their ears set to tingling with the comments on the order of Col. Howze. Many of the visitors immediately left the ground, but most of the young women refused to give in to the cold and stayed until the parade was over. Their teeth chattered, but they kept arms and feet going and kept up circulation.

When the battalion broke ranks and the cadets were permitted to see their friends they faced a crowd of very angry girls. Discipline no longer held, and grounds for scores of courts-martial were given in the comments that were made on Col. Howze's action. Not even the measures taken to stop hazing stirred up such rebellious feelings among the boys as were stirred by the sight of their shivering sweethearts.

On behalf of the cadets it is said that nobody ever before has thought of forbidding them from protecting women from cold at parades. It has frequently happened that visitors have come here unprepared for bad weather, and always extra coats have been loaned to them, without objection from the officers. They argue that Col. Howze had a right to change this custom if he chose, but declare that it should have been done by an order that would have warned them in time to guard against the humiliation of their visitors.

On behalf of Col. Howze and the officers no explanation of the incident could be obtained to-night.

CALLS ROOSEVELT SCHEME UTOPIAN

English Observer Discusses the President's Plan in Regard to the Railways.

NEED OF WATERED CAPITAL

Mr. Fleming Says If Stock Could Not Have Been Issued Except for Par In Cash Roads Would Not Exist.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 7.—Robert H. Fleming, who is just back from America, in an interview in The Statist, discusses the affairs of American railways, with many of which he has had important relations. He regards President Roosevelt's scheme for the valuation of railways in order to see whether they are not making excessive returns on their real values as unpractical and Utopian. It seems to him that in condemning watered capital the American public is led by theorists.

If, says Mr. Fleming, a law prohibiting the issue of stock except for par in cash had existed in America in the past many of the big railway systems would never have been built, and if in the future the capital of a railway is to represent no more than the money spent it follows that no new railways will be built unless by dividend-paying existing systems.

"The railway system of the United States," says Mr. Fleming, "has been above all other things the cause of the rapid growth of the country, and a way will certainly be found to prevent the stoppage of that development which is threatened at present."

The vague fear of the destruction of values by legislation, Mr. Fleming thinks, has largely spent itself. Concerning the future of the stock market he speaks with reserve. The public is frightened, he says, and the anti-railway crusade is likely to remain for some time a factor against higher values. Trade may contract, and, with a Presidential election ahead, the contraction may be prolonged, particularly with the tariff as an issue.

The future of America as an investment field does not disturb Mr. Fleming, but it sometimes happens, he says, that after a slump in the market comes a sag, which lasts for a long time with only temporary interruptions.

EDDIE KRIEGER WITH FATHER.

Says He Wants to Stay with Him—Boy's Mother to Return to Chicago.

BERLIN, April 7.—Dr. George F. Krieger, formerly of Chicago, and his son Eddie, who was reported to have been kidnapped in Hamburg some time ago, are in Berlin. Dr. Krieger intends to practice medicine here.

The boy says he desires to stay with his father. Dr. Krieger declares that the boy came with him willingly, and that he intends to defend possession of him by every legal means.

The boy's mother, who is now the wife of Dr. Henry E. MacDonald, a dentist of Chicago, said in response to an inquiry some days ago that she intended to return to Chicago immediately.

TRIBUTE TO J. F. STEVENS.

2,000 Persons Present at Cristobal at a Farewell Reception.

COLON, April 7.—John F. Stevens, retiring Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, received a splendid send-off last night previous to his departure to-day for the United States. The reception was held on Pier 11 at Cristobal, which was elaborately decorated. Among those present were W. G. Bierd, General Manager of the Panama Railroad, who acted as Chairman; the heads of departments of the Canal Commission and the Panama Railroad, Jackson Smith, who is in charge of the labor department of the canal, and 2,000 others.

Mr. Stevens in a speech modestly gave John F. Wallace, whom he superseded as chief engineer, the credit for the organization of the work, and this, Mr. Stevens declared, he had modified only when necessary. He said the preparations deemed necessary two years ago were found to have been underestimated, but now the machinery had been completed, homes had been provided for 250,000 persons, there were railroad facilities for handling over 1,000,000 cubic yards of earth monthly, and the organization was so advanced that it was possible to carry on the work in both the wet and dry seasons. He said he firmly believed the canal would be opened in January, 1910. He did not seek the position of Chief Engineer, and was leaving it of his own volition.

Mr. Stevens asked his loyal friends not to take their complaints to Washington, but to make them to Major Goethals, the new Chairman of the Canal Commission, for whom he solicited the same loyalty as had been given to himself.

A dance followed the speechmaking.

A two-volume testimonial signed by American and other employes of the canal, expressing their loyalty to Mr. Stevens, was presented to him just before he sailed to-day. The employes also subscribed for three gifts intended to be handed down by Mr. Stevens to his three sons.

COST OF CITY GOVERNMENT.

Citizens' Union to Issue a Statement Analyzing Local Expenditures.

The Bureau of City Betterment of the Citizens' Union has prepared a statement to be issued soon, showing what the City Government costs and what each department and officer of the departments is doing. This was announced last night, and it was declared that the object of the bureau in establishing the new branch is to promote the efficiency of the administration.

There is at present no means whereby either officials or the public may learn in detail how the city is being administered. The bureau now proposes to collect, analyze, and publish significant facts relating to the Government of the city in the same way, as far as its funds will permit it to do so, as the Carnegie Institute is doing for science, the Rockefeller Institute for medicine, and the Phipps Institute for the prevention of tuberculosis.

Those in charge of the work will be Dr. William R. Patterson, ex-Register of the Tenement House Commission, and State Statistician for Iowa; George C. Sykes, ex-Secretary of the Committee on Local Transportation of the Chicago Council, and Henry Bruere, who has been in charge of the work from the beginning. Headquarters will be established at 32 East Twenty-third Street on May 1.

WOULD RESTRICT USE OF ROENTGEN RAYS

Physicians Here Say Colleges Do Not Give Sufficient Instruction in Their Use.

CAPABLE OF MUCH HARM

If Handled by Ignorant Persons—State Examiners to Pass Hereafter on Those Who Use Them.

The action of the German Roentgen Society in declaring that it was advisable to prevent unlicensed persons from making diagnoses by means of the X-ray, owing to the danger to life, reported in THE TIMES's special cable from Berlin yesterday, may bear fruit in New York. Physicians in this city expressed much interest in the statement, and several eminent members of the medical profession, in addition to approving the action of the German society, said that it would be wrong, almost criminal, to continue, the present condition, which often puts into the hands of uninformed and inexperienced men that which is described as "one of the most valuable agents mankind has ever acquired," but which becomes, in unqualified hands, "more like dynamite than any other thing in the world."

While emphasizing the high merit and efficiency of the Roentgen rays in diagnosing and treating certain diseases, the physicians interviewed deplored the fact that at present there was no law or regulation to keep the device in the hands of those fitted to use it, saying that patients who subject themselves to treatment under physicians or others who have inadequate knowledge or skill run the risk of losing their health, or even their lives. That such a condition prevails was credited not only to the lack of examination of those who use the rays, but also to the failure of many medical colleges to provide instruction that would enable students to gain proficiency in the use of this wonderful and powerful agent.

To Restrict Use of the Rays.

Attention being directed now to these needs, it is likely that a special effort will be made to supply them. It is probable that the proposed reorganization of the State Board of Medical Examiners will give an opportunity for the first step toward restricting the use of the rays to those qualified. The suggested change in the board calls for one general examining committee, which shall pass upon the candidates' general qualifications except for treatment, and special examiners representing the work of each school of treatment. The additional suggestion was made yesterday that within the province of the special examiners should fall the examination in the use of physical agents, including the X-rays.

Dr. A. C. Geyser, Professor of Electrotherapeutics in the Cornell University Medical College in this city, told a TIMES reporter yesterday that he was much interested in the report of the action of the German Society. He was unwilling to discuss the medical aspect of the question, but spoke generally upon the potency of the ray and the need of restricting its use. He declared that the statement as to the power of the ray to destroy life was true. There was danger, he said, not only to the patient, but also to the physician using the rays; so great a danger, indeed, that not a few physicians had abandoned the use of the device in their practice, while all had surrounded themselves with the greatest precautions. Those who had quit using the rays, however, he said, were in the main the inefficient experimenters.

The character of the injuries which the rays might do, even to a physician, was exemplified by the condition of Dr. Geyser's right hand, the skin of which was deeply scarred and the nails rough and corrugated, while on one knuckle there was an open ulcer which had been there for two years and which would not heal. Dr. Geyser said that two years ago all the nails on that hand were completely gone. While declaring that every physician who works in the field of the X-ray must be prepared to make a sacrifice of life or limb, Dr. Geyser said that modern appliances made even those who worked with the instruments continually practically safe from harm. And the better knowledge of the rays which had been obtained by years of study and experiment, positively removed the danger of serious consequences in diagnosing or treating diseases by proficient practitioners. Yet an inefficient physician, he said, might do irreparable injury to a patient by the use of the rays.

Need of Instruction in the Colleges.

Dr. Geyser declared that no student should leave college unless he had taken a course that would make him thoroughly familiar with the practice as well as the theory of the rays. He said that there was only one undergraduate college in New York which trains its students in the handling of "that most dangerous agent." Many physicians who had been licensed before the rays were discovered attempted to use them with what knowledge they had picked up from books, Dr. Geyser said. That was to be deplored, but could not be helped, since no ex post facto laws could be passed. The only way to protect the people, he said, was to make the new physicians proficient.

Dr. Morris W. Brinkmann, President of the American Electrotherapeutic Association, also spoke of the wonderful merit of the rays, which, he said, scarcely could be overestimated, but he added that the attempt of incompetent men to use this agent had gained for it much adverse criticism that was not deserved. It was he who suggested that the reorganized Board of Examiners should make provision for the determination of the qualification of candidates for physicians' licenses to use the X-ray.

"The colleges are really at fault," he said, "for allowing this state of affairs to exist, because they have ignored the development of wonderful new agents of great power, and students are sent out ignorant of the practical side of their use."

ITALIAN BANKER ACCUSED.

Trust Company Says He Got $3,600 Too Much on a Peculiarly Drawn Check.

For more than two months the officials of the Mt. Vernon Trust Company have been searching through their accounts for a shortage of about $3,000, and only recently located it. As a result of their search suit has been begun against Pasquale Lucchese, a Tuckahoe banker, to recover this amount which is alleged to have been paid to him in excess of his account. Lucchese was arrested yesterday on a warrant issued by Justice Keogh in connection with the suit, but was immediately released on giving a bond. William Rublee, President of the Village of Tuckahoe, and Peter A. Collins, a contractor, became sureties for Lucchese.

On November 20 last Lucchese went to the Trust Company and made a deposit taking a cashier's check for the same, as he had done many times previously.

In January Lucchese presented this check for the cash and received $4,000 together with $21.07 interest. When the shortage was discovered in the accounts, it was found that the check was filled in "four hundred dollars ($400)" the figures calling for four thousand dollars while the written amount was only four hundred. The Trust Company officials claim that only $400 was deposited, and that, therefore, Lucchese received $3600 too much. Lucchese on the other hand claims that he deposited $4,000. When arrested an Italian depositor of his stated that he had given Luchesse $2,000 on the day the money was deposited.

Studebaker

The Automobile that "Stood Pat"

Differing from the usual policy in automobile manufacture, the Studebaker model for 1907 is practically a duplication of that of 1906. The fact is that the 1906 model proved itself distinctly an advance over most other makes of automobiles. While others talk of radical changes and improvements in 1907 models, we stand by the high attainments and proved efficiency of the Studebaker car of last year.

The new features of the Studebaker 1907 Model H are in the nature of refinements—not in experimental changes.

ROBINSON INCIDENT STARTLES CAPITAL

President Believed to be Very Angry Over Latest Move on Behalf of Mgr. Ireland.

MAY DROP THE ARCHBISHOP

Mr. Roosevelt's Friendship for Him Was Not Affected by Storer Trouble, but Break May Come Now.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Official Washington was startled to read in THE NEW YORK TIMES of to-day that a second attempt had been made to embroil President Roosevelt in Vatican politics. The too zealous and indiscreet champions of Archbishop Ireland's candidacy for the red hat could not have hit upon a more successful means to exasperate the President than their effort to drag his sister, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, into their intrigue.

For President Roosevelt has been particularly insistent that his family should be let alone, as far as possible, in both politics and publicity. No attack upon himself, not even the now famous "conspiracy of rich men," has drawn from him the display of personal feeling which he showed two or three years ago over the publication of a story that his children had hazed a Thanksgiving turkey about the White House yard and pulled out its tail feathers. He barred the representatives of the offending newspaper from all executive departments by the most formal kind of an official order, while he greets attacks upon himself with more or less tolerance.

He was most exasperated at the ill-advised efforts of Mrs. Bellamy Storer on behalf of Archbishop Ireland because she had involved him in Vatican politics. The effort of Bishop O'Gorman of Sioux Falls to do a good turn for Archbishop Ireland not only repeated the offense of Mrs. Storer, in the light in which it placed the President, but dragged a member of his family into a situation distinctly unpleasant to her.

There is no comment forthcoming from the White House to-night, and it is unlikely that the undoubted displeasure of the President will take the form of another public protest. For one thing, he stated his position clearly in the Bellamy Storer controversy. Again, that case had an official side, involving an American Ambassador, while the latest Ireland intrigue was purely social in character.

There are few members of Congress still remaining here, and they take the ground that this is a social matter, and, anyway, public men are chary of discussing situations involving the President in these days. They are not willing candidates for admission either to the Ananias Club or the "rich man's conspiracy." Men connected with the Administration naturally have nothing to say. The strong Church colony here, which keeps in close touch with Baltimore, the headquarters of Cardinal Gibbons, is likewise silent, as far as comment for publication goes.

But gossip is fairly buzzing, none the less. The Church colony in Washington and Baltimore, in the shadow of the residence of Cardinal Gibbons, is not conspicuous for partisanship of Mgr. Ireland in his efforts to become colleague of the one Cardinal the American Church now has. And public men of this administration who are in touch with Catholic prelates at all have come more and more to go for advice and consultation to Cardinal Gibbons. Archbishop Ireland was the intimate of Senator Hanna and the McKinley Administration.

The St. Paul prelate, however, has remained a close personal friend of the President himself, who has never concealed his liking for the Archbishop. Indeed, the President has given Mgr. Ireland proof that the Storer incident made no change in his affection by naming him on the commission endowed with the money of the Nobel Peace Prize to help settle industrial problems. That was accepted as a notice to Ireland that the President did not hold him responsible for the Storer incident, but put the blame on Ireland's indiscreet friends.

The gossip aroused by to-day's cable from Rome in THE NEW YORK TIMES is speculative as to whether the President will pass over a second offense, more irritating than the first, in the same way. The question is, How long will he submit to efforts by Ireland's indiscreet friends to drag the White House into Vatican politics without cooling toward Ireland himself? Once or twice a politician is forgiven the indiscretions of his friends. But there comes a time when his associates begin to regard him as one carrying nitro-glycerine in his pockets.

There is no doubt that one of the strongest arguments advanced at the Vatican on behalf of Mgr. Ireland has been his ability to have intimate and influential relations with the men controlling American politics and two National Administrations. The blow to his chances that was given by the Storer incident was the natural impression it would give Vatican politicians that this would lose Ireland his hold. The selection of the Archbishop as a member of the President's pet commission was therefore of assistance to the St. Paul man, in that it would go far to relieve him of the consequences of the Storer incident. But another intrigue, of a sort calculated to exasperate the President still more, threatens the Archbishop with the loss of this ground regained. Meanwhile it is always possible for public men who wish to ascertain Catholic sentiment to consult with Cardinal Gibbons, who has neither indiscreet friends, a candidacy for office, nor other nitro-glycerine concealed about him.

Archbishop Ireland is not a necesslty to a public man desiring to keep in touch with the Catholic Church. At least this is the tone of the shrewd comment heard here to-day.

POPE SUMMONS PORCILE.

May Desire to Consult Brooklyn Priest About a New Cardinal.

The story cabled from Rome to THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday to the effect that an effort had been made to take advantage of the visit to Italy of Mrs. Douglas Robinson, sister of President Roosevelt, to further the candidacy of Archbishop Ireland for the Cardinalate was discussed with much interest by Catholics in New York yesterday.

It was said by well-informed Catholics that the Pope had informed those close to him that it was his intention to appoint another American Cardinal. It was stated in this connection that the Rev. Eugene Porcile, Associate General of the Order of the Fathers of Mercy, and pastor of the Church of St. Francis de Sales in Brooklyn, was now on his way to Rome on a special mission, having been sent for by the Pope.

Father Porcile has visited Rome on three occasions recently, each time carrying official messages from the recognized heads of the Church here. For a quarter of a century he has been in close touch with the authorities at te Vatican. He is an Italian by birth, and would have been made a Bishop many years ago if he had desired the honor. His great work among the poor, while quietly done, is well known in Church circles, although he has seldom figured in the newspapers. The nature of his present mission to Rome has been kept a secret, although it is known to be of considerable importance. He is greatly devoted to American institutions, and frequently delivers addresses calling upon his flock to uphold the flag on all occasions. The three thousand children attached to his church in Brooklyn are taught patriotism every day.

Father Porcile sailed for Europe last Thursday. While it is known that he is to visit France in connection with business concerning the Church, it is also known that he will remain in Rome for several weeks at the request of the Pope. He will reach Rome in time to be there when the Cardinals assemble in consistory.

DIVORCE FOR MRS. WORRALL.

Stock Broker and Clubman Must Pay His Wife $2,500 a Year Alimony.

After hearings before Assemblyman J. Mayhew Wainwright, and on the recommendation of the latter, an interlocutory decree of divorce has been granted to Mrs. Amelia R. Worrall from her husband, Richard P. Worrall, a well-known stock broker of this city. Mr. Worrall was served with the papers on the floor of the Stock Exchange a few days after he had threatened to whip a private detective for following him. This altercation took place in front of the Union League Club as Mr. Worrall was about to enter the building.

The case was sent to Assemblymnn Wainwright as referee, and on his recommendation a decree was granted. Mrs. Worrall will receive $2,500 a year alimony. For six months this year she will receive $400.

Mr. Worrall is well known on the Stock Exchange and in Wall Street. His income, according to Mrs. Worrall, is never less than $20,000 a year.

STEAD RECOMMENDS A PEACE PILGRIMAGE

And Plymouth Church Congregation Votes to Support a Labor Delegate.

TO VISIT WORLD CENTRES

London Editor Would Then Have the Body Urge Peace Measure Before The Hague Conference.

Addressing for nearly two hours an audience that crowded to its capacity the large auditorium of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, famous as the pulpit of Henry Ward Beecher, William T. Stead, the English peace advocate and the editor of The Review of Reviews, outlined a plan last night for forcing the adoption of four definite peace measures at the approaching Hague Conference. He called upon the United States as the one Nation of the world of a truly international complexion as regards its people to push this plan to its consummation.

Really only steps toward more momentous future international agreements, the four measures proposed by Mr. Stead are all the advocates of peace can hope to have passed at the coming conference, and they can only hope for these if world-wide pressure is focused upon the convention, according to Mr. Stead. Briefly stated, the measures demand that before nations let loose their wardogs, they shall agree to thirty days' mediation by a third and disinterested nation; all nations violating this measure being declared outlaws by the family of nations; that an appropriation be made equal to one cent on every $10 spent for armament by nations, which shall be devoted to the promulgation in international hospitality and world peace; that arbitration be made obligatory in certain secondary matters, and that no nation increase its armament for the next five years.

The fate of these measures Mr. Stead intrusted to the American people. He suggested that at the Peace Conference, fathered by Andrew Carnegie, to be held in Carnegie Hall, beginning one week from to-day, twelve representative Americans—nine men and three women—of international reputation should be selected as the defenders of the measures. Clothed with the authority of the conference, these twelve should then visit President Roosevelt and Secretary Root and enlist their indorsement.

Then they should inform Ambassador Bryce of their intention to visit England to solicit aid and should obtain letters of introduction, as it were to the English people. In London they should be joined by twelve representative Britains and twelve representative Scandinavians. These in turn, should visit the capitals of Europe, until their ranks were swollen to the number of 100. In a body they should finally move on The Hague Conference and demand the passage of the measures. The plan is a pilgrimage from New York to The Hague in the interest of peace.

After Mr. Stead had expounded his plan, which was received by the congregation with much applause, Gen. Horatio C. King moved that it was the sense of the congregation that the plan received their indorsement and that it should be presented to the Peace Conference here next week, with the suggestion that it be adopted as the programme of that assembly. The Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, the pastor, put the motion, and it was adopted with enthusiasm. Dr. Hillis then called upon his parishioners to be apostles of the movement and to disseminate its principles as widely as possible by word of mouth and by sending broadcast to prominent men newspaper clippings of Mr. Stead's address. Then at the suggestion of Dr. Hillis the congregation pledged itself to pay the expenses of the labor member of the American party.

In outlining his plan Mr. Stead said:

"Ask every nation to appropriate for the interest of peace one cent for every $10 it has decided to spend each year for powder and shot. One cent? It sounds small. Perhaps you think it is asking too little. In England $200,000 could be raised by this. Spend the money in the interests of peace, and in the extension of international hospitality. There is one reason why monarchies are better than republics. Monarchs and Kings believe in international hospitality, and they visit one another.

"The third measure to present to The Hague Conference is that arbitration should be made obligatory in certain matters. Arbitration could not settle all questions. No power would attempt this. For instance, suppose that Germany, and France, and England should make a demand on America for Louisiana or California, or even New York. Could you submit that to arbitration. No, you'd tell the nations you'd see them hanged first. But arbitration can be used with success in secondary matters—in money matters and in commerce matters. It should be used there.

"The fourth measure deals with armaments. I do not think at this coming conference any conclusion will be arrived at for the reduction of armamente. The only thing we can do is to ask the Powers to agree together for the next five years not to increase their armament. It sounds like a small thing. We asked for it in 1899 and didn't get it. The nations agreed that armaments are expensive and cumbersome. Since 1899 the taxpayer of the world is paying $600,000,000 a year for armament above the price he paid in 1899. At 4 per cent. interest this would be $1,500,000,000.

Several nations have already declared they will not listen to discussion of reduction of armament. If England and America, however, press the matter something will be accomplished. A foundation will be laid for the reduction of armament at the next conference.

PROPOSE NEW PEACE PLAN.

German-American Peace Union Would Restrict Nation in Making War.

The Central Federated Union received a circular letter yesterday signed by Ernest Richard, as President, and Theodore Meyer, as Secretary, of the German-American Peace Union, dated from Columbia University, which asked for the indorsement of a new plan of peace. According to the circular there was a tendency on the part of the powers not to make sufficient use of The Hague Tribunal. The circular proposed three questions, to which it wanted general answers from the people.

The first was whether the Constitution should be amended so as to forbid Congress to enter into war except in the case of failure of efforts to bring about arbitration or in case of an attack on the frontier by a hostile army or navy. The second was whether it should be obligatory that every treaty to which the United States is a contracting party should have a clause that all differences as to treaty interpretation and execution be submitted to The Hague tribunal for arbitration. A third was whether the Congress should forbid the solicitation of and subscription to war loans of foreign nations. The circular concluded with the resolution that hereafter the National Peace Conference should meet at least every second year.

The matter was referred to the Executive Committee of the central body, which will report next Sunday.

PEACE CONGRESS PLANS.

All Arrangements Complete for Sessions Opening Next Sunday.

Final arrangements for the sessions of the National Arbitration and Peace Congress in Carnegie Hall, which will assemble in this city next Sunday, were completed yesterday. Secretary Robert Erskine Ely announced that besides the ten regular sessions two great gatherings will be held, and that provision has been made for overflow meetings.

A conference of student delegates will be held on Tuesday morning, April 16, in Earl Hall, at Columbia University. The same afternoon President Butler and Mrs. Butler will give a general reception.

Tickets to the unreserved section of the auditorium will be given free of charge for all meetings except the Young People's meeting on Tuesday. First tier boxes for the regular session of the Congress in Carnegie Hall are on sale at $40. Second tier boxes at $35, and for single sessions at $12 and $10.

Tickets for the public dinner to be held at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday, April 17, can be obtained by mail from Chairman Lindsay Russell at the Hotel Astor for $4 each. Persons who are not delegates may obtain for $2 each tickets admitting them to all meetings except the Young People's Meeting.

Evening sessions of the Congress will begin at 8:30 o'clock, and afternoon sessions at 3 o'clock, except the Young People's Meeting, which will begin at 4 o'clock.

FAUNCE SPEAKS FOR PEACE.

Reason, Not War, He Says, Should Settle Disputes.—Praises Hughes.

President William H. P. Faunce of Brown University placed himself on record last night at the Sunday meeting of the People's Institute at Cooper Union as being another recruit to the army of universal peace.

His subject, "The Law of the Jungle," he said, was suggested by Bayet'a celebrated bronze of the same name, depicting the death struggle of a crocodile and tiger. The speaker said that for fifty years we had been taught to believe that the world was a battlefield. Darwin in his "Origin of Species" had encouraged that belief, and there were some doctors who believed that the philanthropy of the present day was keeping alive human wrecks who, in the theory of evolution, should have been allowed to die. But the world was changing, he thought.

Dr. Faunce made a strong plea for a fuller appreciation of the real meaning of the brotherhood of man. He called on the audience to support Gov. Hughes, saying that thirty years ago he had greeted Hughes when he entered college, and that the intimate relations they enjoyed there had been continued ever since. That he knew that the Governor was a man absolutely conscientious, and that as the eyes of the whole country were on this State, the opportunity for the practical lesson of righteous government, of a genuine republican government, backed by the people, was never so great or the results fraught with such possibilities as at present.

In conclusion he said that the world was getting better, and that men were coming to see that an appeal to reason was the only way to settle disputes between nations as well as individuals.

LA TOURAINE AT QUARANTINE

Brings Prominent French Delegates to the Peace Conference.

The French liner La Touraine, from Havre, got into Quarantine last night too late to come to her pier. Among those on board are Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, Jules Rais, his secretary, and M. and Mme. Camille Eulary, who came over to attend the opening of the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburg. Baron d'Estournelles is a leading authority on arbitration and a founder of the Association of International Conciliation which has branches in twenty-one countries and aims for the establishment of a system of law as a substitute for war in the international domain. According to present plans, he will be entertained at luncheon to-day at the University Club, the American branch of the association of which Nicholas Murray Butler is Chairman.

Later in the day the Baron will go to Washington at the invitation of the President and will spend the night at the White House. The Brazilian Ambassador, Senor Nabuco, gives a dinner in his honor on Tuesday. On April 10 he will be the guest of the French Ambassador and he will then go to Pittsburg.

The Baron will return to the Hotel Belmont on April 15 to participate in the Arbitration Congress. He will make an address at the opening session of "International Organization."

Why a Vogel Brothers' Suit?

For These Various And Good Reasons

1st Reason—QUALITY

The very finest fabrics and trimmings are employed in the making of these suits. The tailoring is executed by our own manufacturing department, assuring thoroughness in every detail. The result is Quality far beyond the usual.

2d Reason—ECONOMY

Maintaining our own manufacturing department and buying the fabrics direct from the mills, we save the profits other retailers pay the wholesale clothiers, employing this saving in the betterment of our product. Logical, therefore, that our suits are by far the lowest priced—quality for quality.

3d Reason—VARIETY

No clothing establishment enters into this subject so thoroughly. There are thousands of suits in hundreds of patterns in 15 distinctive models—radical and conservative—for men of normal proportions or unusually large or small, stout or slim. The prices are $12.50, $15, $17, $18, $20, $25, $30 and $35.

The Tel-Electric's Three Ways

There are three ways in which you can play the Tel-Electric Piano Player.

The First Way is to let the instrument do all the playing. When so played the Tel-Electric produces the music exactly as written, for unlike the paper rolls used in pneumatic players, the Tel-Electric rolls are so cut as to give the correct tempo, phrasing, shading and pedal effects called for in the printed text of the music.

The Second Way, which is perhaps the most satisfactory to the discriminating musician, is to govern the tempo by using the regulator and to allow the music roll to produce the other effects.

The Third Way is to use the release lever which disconnects all expression devices from the music roll and allows the operator to decide FORTE OR PIANO, LOUD OR SOFT PEDAL, fast or slow, according to his own desires.

The tiresome pumping which it is claimed by apologists for the old style player gives the performer the pleasure of personally producing the music---is entirely eliminated.

Come and play the Tel-Electric in all of the three ways. You can play this player. It produces "Better Music."

NEW AUTO TROPHY FOR RUNABOUTS

Special Event Likely to be Arranged for Small Cars in A. A. A. Tour.

FIGURING ON THE ROUTE

Over a Dozen Machines Already Entered for Glidden Cup—Rules Meeting with Favor.

Over a dozen entries were received during the last week for the annual tour of the American Automobile Association, it was reported yesterday by Chairman Frank B. Hower of the Touring Board. These are all regular touring cars, and eligible under the rules of club competition for the Glidden Cup contest. Several requests have also been made for the formation of a special class for runabouts, as under the original conditions runabouts are barred from the competitive features of the tour.

The owners of runabouts, however, are anxious to get in the tour, and Mr. Hower has stated that if be receives assurances at an early date that sufficient runabouts will be entered for a special cup contest the Executive Committee of the A. A. A. at its meeting in the last week of this month may offer a special trophy and establish a runabout competition. The high-powered runabouts have become so popular this season that the owners of these cars are esger to try them out in a long-distance tour, and there is little doubt that an opportunity will be opened for tho entrance of these machines.

The Executive Committee of the Touring Board, which besides the Chairman consists of Judge James B. Dill of Orange, Philip S. Flinn of Pittsburg, L. E. Lewis of Chicago, and D. H. Lewis of Buffalo, is now at work upon the exact route for the tour. While the general plan has been agreed upon, the arrangements that can be made for accommodating a large number of tourists at the overnight stops will determine to a large extent the cities through which the run will pass.

The tourtng will start from Cleveland on July 10, and will go west to Chicago, stopping at Toledo and Detroit and possibly at Lansing. A stop of two days will be made in Chicago. The tour will then run southward, going through Indiana and Ohio, stopping at Kokomo, Dayton, and Columbus, entering West Virginia with a stop at Wheeling, then into Pensylvania, stopping at Pittsburg, Bedford, ad Gettysburg, wnere a stop of two days may be made to give the tourists an opportunity of visiting the battlefield memorials. It has been suggested that on the final run to New York a night's stop be made at Atlantic City. The entire route will be about 1,400 miles, and it will occupy two weeks.

This route will lead the motorists through considerable mountainous country, furnishing an all-sround test of the reliability of the American car to withstand continuous runs of 100 miles and over for nearly fourteen days. While the Glidden Cup will be awarded according to the aggregate showing of the respective club teams, individual merit will be rewarded by the granting of a certificate to all cars that complete the tour with the least loss of points. The new rules, while stricter than last year, especially in requiring the cup contestants to carry all extra parts that may be needed, have met with general favor. An entry list of considerably over 100 touring cars is looked for, and provided an additional runabout trophy is offered it will mean that from 500 to 600 persons will compose this hig touring caravan over American roads.

TED'S BRUSHING HONORS.

Nathan Straus's Trotter Defeats Kingmond Two Heats on the Speedway.

Tbere was a big turnout of the light harness horses on the Speedway yesterday, and a number of brushes furnished good sport for nearly a thousand spectators who lined both sides of the drive near the finish. The racing was short and sharp, as few of the horses have done but little fast work. The track was fast, but the cold wind made driving anything but a pleasurable pastime. The racing contingent were careful with their favorites, as yesterday was the first day of fast work this Spring.

Nathan Straus was one of the first comers and spent more time in the wagon than any other driver. He drove both Ida Highwood and the old campaigner Ted. The former queen of the Speedway was sent for half a dozen warming-up spins, but Mr. Straus declined all invitations to brush. He then got up behind Ted and accepted the defi of Claus Bohling, who drove the former Speedway champion Kingmond, 2:09½, a consistent winner since his transfer from the Grand Circuit to amateur sport. The pair engaged in three brushes, Ted winning two.

Lewis Boynton, with Crimson Clover, engaged in two brushes with Joseph F. Gibbons, who drove his bay mare Bessie G., and won both by a close margin.

George H. Huber and the trim little trotter Gracie Pandit, 2:25½, figured among the contenders. The mare showed two fast half-mile workouts when on the lower stretch she overhauled Disturber, driven by his trainer, and after a short struggle showed two lengths in front, which she easily maintained to the finish.

Edward J. La Place drove his new brown pacer Frank Wilson, 2:06¾, a Western product that will prove an important factor in the matinées this Spring. William J. Clark came down from Yonkers and drove his bay trotter Banker. Thomas B. Leahy bandled the reins behind his new pacer Who Knows, 2:11¾. Dr. H. D. Gill, former President of the Road Drivers' Association, drove Sue Dix, 2:14¼. Hopeful, 2:21¼, driven by John Hallahan, made a good early showing, as did Norrie, which was driven by Andrew Phillips. W. E. Parsons, with La Belle Rosa, jogged slowly down the drive several times.

SCHOOLBOYS BEGIN ROWING.

Harlem River Club Will Aid Youngsters in Practice.

Rowing in the future will form an important part of the athletic education of the high school boys of the Public School Athletic League. The Board of Education has decided to advance the sport in all the eighteen high schools of Greater New York, and the question of further development in the other schools will depend upon the success of the first venture. Five crews have been selected to compete in the eight-oared race to be held at the Decoration Day regatta of the Harlem Regatta Association. This will be the first contest of its kind ever held in New York, and every effort will be made to insure success.

Capt. John E. Nagle of the Harlem Rowing Club has been appointed by the Board of Education to take charge of the coaching work in connection with the high school crews. He is also Chairman of the Special Committee appointed by the Harlem Regatta Association to take charge of the race. The other members of the committee are John O. Regan, Metropolitan Rowing Club; E. S. Connell, Union Boat Club; Al Maroschek, First Bohemian Boat Club, and E. Della Verne, Nassau Boat Club.

The Board of Education notified all schools that they would be permitted to enter crews for the race. From the list of applicants the committee decided to limit the entry list to five crews, so as to minimize the possibility of a mishap. The crews will represent: De Witt Clinton High School, Townsend-Harris Hall High School, St. Mary's School Ship, Morris High School, and High School of Commerce.

Beginning to-day the boys will practice every day on the machines, and it is expected that the crews will take the first row on the Harlem River on Wednesday. The schoolboys will make their headquarters at the following clubs: Harlem Rowing Club, Coach John E. Nagle, De Witt Clinton, and High School of Commerce; New York Athletic Club, Coach E. J. Gianinni, Morris High School, New Rochelle Boat Club, St. Mary's schoolship; Lone Star Boat Club, Edward H. Anderson, coach, Townsend-Harris Hall.

Coach Nagle yesterday denied the report that the high school boys would protest the St. Mary's schoolship crew on the ground that the schoolship is not a high school in the proper meaning of the term. He said the crew had been accented and would positively row. The sailor boys have secured the use of a shell for training purposes and will do their rowing on Long Island Sound.

GIANTS FINISH STRONG AND WIN

Three Pitchers Help New York to Beat Newark by Score of 8 to 5.

GAINED LEAD IN SEVENTH

Eastern League Players Score Four Runs in First Inning—Cold Handicaps Fielders.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., April 7.—Fully 4,000 persons witnessed the opening game between the Giants and the Newark Eastern League team at Wiedenmayer's Park this afternoon. It was a very cold day, and the players bad to keep moving to keep warm. The crowd shivered in the cold, however, but as Newark started out with four runs in tbe first inning and held the lead up to the sixth, the spectators did not seem to mind tbe weather. New York secured the lead in the seventh and finished the game by tbe score of 8 to 5.

Newark's defeat may be laid to Pitcher McCafferty, who gave four bases on balls in the seventh. These were responsible for the two runs that put the Giants in the lead. The New Yorks tried out three pitchers, who allowed thirteen bases on balls and struck out four batters. They were Ames, Ferguson, and Taylor, who each pitcbed three innings.

New York began in the third, when Shannon was brought home on Browne's double to centre. Two runs were gained in the fourth, McGann hit safe, and was brought home on Hannifen's home run to centre field "bleachers." Two more runs were added to the Giant's score in the seventh, when Shannon and Devlin crossed the plate. In the ninth Shannon and Browne singled and Devlin was hit by a pitched ball, filling the bases. Burke hit to centre field, scoring two runs, while thethird was made on Hannifen's long fly to centre. AMERICANS LEAVE ATLANTA.

Chase May Join Team at Washington—No Pay for Delehanty.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, April 7.—After a month's stay, marked with every success that could be expected, the Greater New Yorks left this afternoon for Lynchburg, Va., where they will join the touring squad which left on Wednesday. After playing in Lynchburg the team goes to Baltimore, where it will have two contests with the Eastern League Club of that city. April 11 will see them in Washington for the opening championship game of the season.

Manager Griffith does not expect Hal Chase to reach Washington in time for the initial contest, but thinks he will report before the team leaves tbere. Delehanty wants to report, and Griffith has wired him that he can do so under the condition that he receives no salary until he is considered in shape for work.

"I want to make an example of Delehanty," said Griffith. "As soon as I consider him in condition to work I will begin his pay, and not before."

New Baseball Captain at Annapolis.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 7.—Owing to illness, Benjamin R. Lombard, Captain of the Naval Academy baseball nine, bas resigned, and Frederick T. Van Auken of Plainfield, N. J., has been elected in his place. Van Auken is the most experienced pitcher in the squad and acted as Captain while Lombard was away on sick leave. Lombard, who played at third base, is troubled with a nervous affliction. His home is at Mill House, Miss.

NEW TENNIS CUPS OFFERED.

New York Athletic Club and Brooklyn Give Trophies for Championships.

Four new and valuable cups are to be offered for lawn tennis championships for players in this vicinity this season. The most important will be that of the New York Athletic Club, which will hold the New York State tournament on its courts at Travers Island, scheduled for the week of July 8. Chairman Rufus Davis of the Lawn Tennis Committee has arranged for the club to offer an unusually handsome trophy in addition to the challenge cup provided last season. This cup and title is now held by Frederick B. Alexander, who has declared that he will surely defend again this season.

The revival of the Long Island Championship by the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club of Brooklyn has been followed by the donation of a new cup. This tournament will open the season in the metropolitan district, as it is scheduled for the week of May 20.

Practice Field for Young Athletes.

Young athletes of Public School No. 26 are at last to have a place for training. Through the officials of the Public Schools Athletic League and the Board of Education the Park Department is expected to issue a permit for the athletes of 26 to make use of the finely equipped recreation field bounded by Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Streets and First and Second Avenues. This will afford the boys the desired opportunity for the development of a team, for the school boasts a wealth of splendid material.

CELTIC PARK'S BIG OPENING.

Over Five Thousand Persons See Irish Teams at Football and Hurling.

The opening of Celtic Park attracted one of the biggest Spring crowds that has gathered there in its history yesterday, in spite of the biting wind that made the bright day uncomfortable to the devotee of outdoor sports. More than 5,000 persons crowded through the big gatee to see the Gaelic football, hurling, and track athletic contests. The wind was too much for the track men, however, and the running part of the programme was dispensed with. The football players and hurlers, however, were in their element.

Two Gaelic football gamee were played, Monaghan and Cork winning. The latter defeated the Tipperary team after the hardest kind of battle, three points deciding the issue finally. Each team scored two goals, while Cork had five points to its credit as well to Tipperary's two. The game between Monaghan and Kildare was not so close nor marked by such free scoring. Monaghan secured the only goal made and two points, while Kildare secured three points. The game was scrappy, and at one time threatened to involve both teams in ficticuffs, but the difficulties were peacefully adjusted.

Tipperary got revenge for its football defeat in the hurling match, when an easy victory was scored over the men of Gelway by a score of 8 to 0. Darkness prevented the playing of the other hurling match and of the final contest between the two Gaelic football teams.

Nykerk Surprises Athletes in St. Bartholomew's Cross-Country Event.

E. A. Nykerk, a novice, won the handicap cross-country run of the St. Bartholomew's Athletic Club yesterday, and the novice prize as well, and came within two seconds of beating out the scratch man, H. Jenson, for the best actual time. He finished the 4½-mile course, in spite of the unfavorable weather conditions, in 27:25, and was strong enough at the finish to have covered a much longer distance. The race was run over the regular cross-country course on Jerome Avenue, with over twenty-five starters.

"CANADIAN CLUB" WHISKY GUARANTEE

With the object of injuring the sale of "CANADIAN CLUB" WHISKY, certain persons are stating that it is not guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act.

SUCH A STATEMENT IS ESSENTIALLY MISLEADING, BECAUSE THE GUARANTEE REFERRED TO IS IN NO SENSE WHATEVER A GUARANTEE TO THE PUBLIC THAT THE GOODS ARE ACCORDING TO LAW.

THE ACT provides simply that DEALERS shall not be prosecuted for selling Unlawful Goods, if such goods are guaranteed by Residents of the United States from whom purchased, but that the Guarantors shall then be "amenable to the prosecutions, fines and other penalties" under the ACT.

IF THE GUARANTEE WERE A PROOF THAT THE GOODS ARE ACCORDING TO LAW, NO PERSON COULD POSSIBLY BE LIABLE TO PROSECUTION, FINES AND PENALTIES.

Not being residents of the United States, it is clearly out of our power to give this particular guarantee to Dealers; but we have already undertaken, and we hereby again undertake, to hold every dealer absolutely harmless in the sale of "CANADIAN CLUB."

The object of the FOOD AND DRUGS ACT is to suppress impurity and misrepresentation.

Inasmuch as "CANADIAN CLUB" is a pure whisky, labelled with absolute truthfulness, bearing the Canadian Government guarantee as to age, there is nothing about it to suppress.

SPECIAL CAUTION.

Some Dealers are calling what is only a MANUFACTURER'S GUARANTEE a GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE, which is itself a very serious misrepresentation and a violation of the Law.

PERSONS MAKING MALICIOUS MISSTATEMENTS REGARDING OUR WHISKY WILL BE RIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED. FRIENDS OF OUR BRAND WILL OBLIGE US GREATLY BY REPORTING ANYTHING OF THE KIND WHICH COMES TO THEIR NOTICE.

FORAKER'S PLANS FOR WAR ON TAFT

Will Use the Sentence of a Labor Leader to Jail as the Big Card.

BROWNSVILLE IN IT, TOO

That Incident Is Relied On to Keep the Negroes with the Machine—Ohio Governor Silent.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 7.—When Senator Foraker gets to Ohio and begins his campaign against Secretary Taft, the Secretary's labor record, his Akron speech in 1905, and his action in the Brownsville matter will be used. Foraker's men are now engaged in looking up the injunction case decided by Judge Taft in 1894, and the plan is to publish it all over the State.

That was the year of the Pullman strike. The Cincinnati Southern Railway was in the hands of a receiver. Judge Taft issued a restraining order forbidding any one to interfere with the employes of the road or to try to get them to quit their occupation. Phelan, Debs's lieutenant, went to Cincinnati to take charge of the strike there, and Taft sent him to jail for six months for violating the order. The Judge said, in rendering his decision, that if it had been a strike for shorter hours or better pay he would not have interfered, but the contention was over something entirely foreign to the operation of the road.

This decision is counted on by the Foraker men as a great card, and they intend to make it their ammunition for the first broadside. The Brownsville business is relied on to hold the negroes in line, and that is a matter of importance, for negroes are numerous in Ohio. The Akron speech is relied on by the Foraker men to keep the machine men faithful, a task of much difficulty in view of the tendency they are showing to get on the band wagon. The machine men have never forgiven Taft, particularly in Cincinnati, where the speech smashed the Cox machine. Those of them that are coming out for him admit that the Akron speech is a sore point with them.

However, it is quite likely that the Foraker men overestimate the power of resentment to keep politicians off a band wagon. Ex-Gov. Herrick, whose defeat was believed to have been largely due to Taft, is for him now, though naturally he is not enthusiastic over the Akron speech part of his candidate's record. One difficulty which Foraker will experience in holding on to the machine is that the County Chairmen are afraid to be for him, even when they want to be. This is because of the dread of Roosevelt. To oppose the President in this strongly pro-Roosevelt State is to invite political death.

There is a secret organization in the State, which had its birth in Dick's home city and is reaching out all over the State. Its purpose is to pledge delegates and legislative candidates for Roosevelt and against Foraker. There is to be no mention of Taft, but whatever the organization succeeds in doing will redound to Taft's benefit, naturally. Neither will the candidates be pledged to any particular Senatorial candidate.

Gov. Harris's district, the Third, will be solid for Taft. The Governor is not saying a word. Both sides are committed to his candidacy for re-election, and there is a chance of his developing into a compromise Senatorial candidate if the fight for that office gets hotter.

Before Commissioner Vorys accepted the leadership of the Taft forces, however, he conferred about it with Harris, and they spent a whole night in thrashing it out from every standpoint. What Harris thought about it cannot be known, but immediately afterward his Insurance Commissioner accepted the Taft leadership. The Governor has played no favorites in making his official appointments. Every man he has appointed to office has been his own personal selection and not picked out by either faction.

MR. TAFT IS SILENT

Arrives in Havana and Refuses to Say a Word About Politics.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, April 7.—Secretary Taft and his party arrived on the Mayflower early this morning. Gov. Magoon, Gen. Barry, Gen. Rodriguez, commander of the Rurales, and other officials welcomed them. Later Alfredo Zayas and José Miguel Gomez greeted Mr. Taft, but naturally neither, in the presence of the rival candidate for the Presidency, said anything about Cuban politics.

Mr. Taft and his party are at the Palace. They will remain until Wednesday evening, and in the course of his stay Mr. Taft will receive a number of Cubans representing all interests. Mr. Taft still thinks the promise of the restoration of the republic must be fulfilled.

The Secretary to-day refused to say one word about American politics. He says he cannot yet state whether he will talk for publication about the situation in Cuba before he leaves the island for Porto Rico.

BEFRIENDS HOTEL BEAT.

English Actor Says Elphinstone Hurt His Head in a Race.

Charles Warner, an English actor, visited the West Forty-seventh Street Station late last night and inquired as to the case of Alexander Elphinstone, who said that he was a Captain in the British Army, who was arrested several days ago on the charge of defrauding a hotel. Mr. Warner said that his son had attended school with Elphinstone, and that in the last two or three days he had received several cablegrams requesting that he should obtain information pertaining to Elphinstone's case.

Sergt. Brady told the actor that Elphinstone was locked up and that practically nothing could be done until the case came to trial. In the West Side Court the prisoner was held in $1,500 bail on a charge of grand larceny made by Hugh Millar, manager of the Caledonia Hotel, at 28 West Twenty-sixth Street.

In speaking of Elphinstone, Mr. Warner said that he had at one time a large fortune, but had lost it, and that several years ago, in a cross-country chase, he had met with an accident which necessitated an operation to his head.

JACKSON TO FIGHT LAWS.

Will Take to Court Measures Aimed at Democratic Officers.

ALBANY, April 7.—Attorney General Jackson has served notice on the Republican legislators that attempts to take away power from the Democrats elected to State offices last year will be resisted in the courts. He made public to-night a letter written on Friday to C. Fred Boshart, Chairman of the Assembly Committee on Agriculture, in which he made some sharp observations on the plans of the Republicans.

Mr. Jackson was roused to protest by the discovery of an attempt to curtail his authority in the Merritt Pure Food bill. He found that two sections of this measure would establish a separate legal bureau for the Agricultural Department, and declares "The main object sought to be accomplished by this measure is to deprive the Attorney General of his right to represent the State, personally or by counsel, in the prosecution of violations of the agricultural laws."

TO the well dressed business man our new three-button sack suit will strongly appeal. It is built with a slightly shaped back, rides well over the hips, and has long, gracefully curved front. Its soft roll lapel is designed to be worn either open to the second button or buttoned close, in the usual style. Stylish in every feature, it is essentially a practical suit for daily wear.

CAN TAKE HARRIMAN PROFITS ON ALTON

Attorney General Stead Says Stockholders Can Sue the Syndicate.

$24,648,600 IS INVOLVED

Illinois Official, In Report to Gov. Deneen, Says Nothing About Probable Criminal Action.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 7.—That a remedy at civil law exists against E. H. Harriman, George J. Gould, James Stillman, Mortimer L. Schiff, and other financiers, who got millions of profit out of manipulations of the Chicago Alton Railroad, is the opinion expressed by Attorney General Stead in a report made to Gov. Deneen. He does not believe any action should be brought by the State, but believes the company, or some of its stockholders, can force restitution. Whether any criminal action is contemplated by him he does not say.

Gov. Deneen, on his recent return from Washington, whither he and Mr. Stead had been summoned by President Roosevelt to a conference, requested Mr. Stead to make a report on the testimony taken before the Inter-State Commerce Commission on the Alton deals. The report was made by the Attorney General yesterday, and was given out to-night.

The Attorney General gives the history of the incorporation of the Chicago & Alton Road, its management under President T. B. Blackstone, the purchase of control by a syndicate composed of E. H. Harriman, George J. Gould, James Stillman, and Mortimer F. Schiff, in 1899, and the subsequent exploitation of the road by this syndicate, by the voting of issues of bonds, the purchase of these bonds at low figures by the syndicate, and sale at higher figures, and various issues of stock. These transactions were covered in the testimony before the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

Mr. Stead says that the syndicate made $14,055,000 out of the sale of the $32,000,000 of bonds of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, and $9,655,600 out of the sale of the $22,000,000 of bonds, issued by the Chicago and Alton Railway Company, a total profit of $24,648,600. The indebterness created by the syndicate after it obtained control of the property was $80,046,218, he states, of which only $22,500,000 all told, according to the testimony of E. H. Harriman, was incurred for or on account of improvements, betterments or extensions of the properties of the system.

As to whether or not there is a legal remedy for this condition; the Attorney General says:

"That the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company can carry such a bonded indebtedness as this, ($119,046,218, including capital stock,) keep up the road, and pay dividends upon its stock, a considerable portion of which I understand from the testimony has been unloaded by the syndicate, is preposterous. The persons who will ultimately suffer will be the bondholders, the innocent stockholders, or the other creditors of the road.

"That there is a civil remedy against a syndicate whose manipulations, (charitably called financiering,) produced the conditions which now exist, I have not the least doubt. But that the State of Illinois is the party to inforce such a remedy, I have some question. Even if the charter of the company could be revoked upon proceedings instituted by the State, the innocent stock holders would suffer most.

"The bonds of the company are in the hands of innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration, and under the decisions of our Supreme Court and the Supreme Court of the United States cannot be attacked.

"I am inclined to the opinion that the remedy lies with the company itself, or in the event of its refusal to act, with some one or more of its stockholders. Should I become satisfied, however, upon further investigation, that an effective remedy can be enforced by the State I shall not hesitate to institute proceedings.

"Whether or not the members of this syndicate are criminally liable under the statute of Illinois, I express no opinion at this time."

TWO PATIENTS NEGLECTED.

Carried In Ambulance Almost Nude and with Only a Blanket Over Them.

Two patients were transferred from the Presbyterian Hospital to Bellevue last night, both in one ambulance. Both were almost nude, the only protection afforded from the chill night air being a blanket. The Bellevue doctors will report the matter to Supt. Armstrong to-day.

One case was that of Joseph Carhonneau, a drug clerk, of 218 East Seventy-fifth Street, who was suffering from acute alcoholism and epilepsy. The other was that of Aaron Fervy, a negro porter, of 17 Madison Avennue, who was suffering from dementia.

Dr. Le Roy Smith, who received the patients, expostulated with Dr. Goodwin of Presbyterian Hospital, but got no satisfaction.

C. B. CLEVELAND A SUICIDE.

New York Architect and Builder Ends His Life In Boston.

BOSTON, Mass., April 7.—Clarence B. Cleveland, an architect and builder, whose home is in New York City, but who has been in Boston since January, was found dead to-day in his room, having committed suicide, according to the Medical Examiner.

Mr. Cleveland was 45 years old. His wife and child went to New York last Friday, and he had planned to join them. The address of Mrs. Cleveland is given as 1,021 Fifth Avenue.

CITY BREVITIES.

The Happy Hour Club, of which Mrs. C. S. Robinson is President, will hold a bazaar for its recreation fund on April 9 at 230 Second Avenue.

A mass meeting is to be held this evening at Cooper Union under the auspices of the People's Institute to discuss the Public Utilities Bill. Seth Low, William M. Ivins, and Prof. Charles Sprague Smith are to speak.

Penny lunches and recreation centres for school children will be discussed at a conference of local charity workers in the United Charities Building on April 16. Mrs. Annie D. Farnum, who has been associated with the movement in Milwaukee, will talk of furnishing penny lunches to children in the schools.

Bishop Joscelyne of Jamaica, L. I., preached yesterday morning in Trinity Church and appealed for funds to rebuild the Episcopal churches in Kingston destroyed by the earthquake.

Forty of the alumni of Williston Seminary at Hampton, Mass., have organized an alumni club and will hold a smoker on April 26 at the Yale Club. Among the graduates are District Attorney Jerome, Major A. D. Andrew, John C. Coleman, Robert W. De Forest, James R. Sheffield, Gilbert Colgate, and the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst.

BURGLAR KNEW COURT ROPES.

Caught with Loot at Miss C. Tiffany Mitchell's Home, Insists on Rights.

John Dunn, alias George Bolan, according to police description, was held in $2,000 bail by Magistrate Sweetser in Yorkville Court yesterday morning for trial on a charge of burglary. Dunn was arrested early yesterday morning after a struggle by Patrolman Charles L. McGowan of the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station and Special Officer Richard Stafford just as he was leaving the home of Miss Tiffany Mitchell, 119 East Thirty-fifth Street, with a bag filled with valuable silverware.

At the station the prisoner was recognized as an old offender, whose picture is in the Rogues' Gallery, and who has served several terms for burglary.

"I want an examination," exclaimed Dunn when he was brought up on the bridge in court.

"What for?" asked Magistrate Sweetser. "You were caught with the goods."

"I know my rights," replied Dunn. "I am entitled to an examination."

"That's right, you are," admitted the Magistrate. "But you will only be making a lot of trouble for nothing."

Evidently realizing that he would be held anyway, the prisoner finally said that he would waive examination.

"I see you know the usual court procedure," said the Magistrate.

"I ought to," retorted Dunn; "I've been through it often enough."

ALEXANDER VIETOH, (Late Superintendent Arizona Copper Co.) Superintendent of Arizona Amalgamated Copper Co.'s Mines at Clifton.
WILLIAM B. DAVIS, M. E., Superintendent of Arizona Amalgamated Copper Co.'s Signal Mines.

The Arizona Amalgamated Copper Co. has been formed to carry out an amalgamation of various important copper properties aggregating approximately 4,000 acres, situated in the heart of the well-known Clifton-Morenci District of Arizona, viz.: The Leszynsky group, Bertrand Copper Co., Stevens Copper Co., The Copper Plate Co., Bonanza Group Copper Mines, Celtic Copper Mines, Keystone & Merritt group, and the Corona group, together with various other smaller holdings of known copper deposits.

The amalgamation further embraces the Signal Cooper Co., a well-developed mine in Yuma County, Arizona. Eminent mining engineers consider this property one of the most promising in all the Southwest.

The properties in the Clifton District comprised in the amalgamation of the present company are interspersed among and inter ocked with the properties of large producing companies, viz.: The Arizona Copper Co., The Detroit Copper Co., (Phelps, Dodge & Co.), The Shannon Copper Co., and others. The properties of the Arizona Amalgamated Copper Co. possess identical geological conditions and, wherever developed, the same underground showings as those of the other mines. In many cases they immediately adjoin, and the developed ore bodies extend into, the properties of our company.

The district is compact, limited in area and well defined by extensive developments. Over 100 distinct veins and dykes have been uncovered in the Clifton section of our property of a varying width from 25 to 300 feet. The four active producing companies of the district give a total of 55,000,000 to 70,000,000 pounds annually of refined copper from an area of less than 3,000 acres, and the estimated developed ore reserves exceed 200,000,000 tons. This district contains the largest developed bodies of copper ore known in the world.

As compared with the production from 3,000 acres, aggregating an annual average of over 60,000,000 pounds of copper, this company acquires an area of approximately 4,000 acres of similarly rich ore deposits.

The properties of this company are at present developed by approximately 20,000 feet of underground workings, the extension of which is being pressed forward. Many of the mines of this company are now producing ores which may be converted into immediate profits. The plans of the Company provide for the construction of extensive mills, smelters, ore handling facilities and local railroad connections, intended to be the most complete in the district. The branches of existing railroads now traverse the district, but it is the intention of the company to amplify these railroad facilities through its own construction work. It may be further noted that plans have been completed and the erection of a modern smelter on the Signal Copper Co. property will shortly begin.

With the mines brought to a productive capacity of 1,000 tons of ore per day, averaging only 3 per cent of copper, the following estimate is made of the profits of operation:

With copper at 20c. per pound (the market to-day is 26c.) $12,000
Total cost of mining and treatment (which in this district is definitely established at $4.00 per ton of ore produced, but which we conservatively figure at $6.00 per ton)..... $6,000

Profit per day..... $6,000
Equivalent to an annual profit of $1,980,000
With Copper at 26c Per lb. the Annual Profit
Would Be $2,574,000.

Equivalent to over 17 per cent. annual profit on the total capitalization of the company.

COUNSELS OF MODERATION.

The principle of "accountability to the people" dwelt upon by Gov. HUGHES in his Glens Falls speech may easily be carried too far. All elected officers are accountable to the people, but a Governor of the State of New York is accountable only at the end of his term, when the people may refuse him a re-election if they are displeased at his conduct. During his two years' term of office they cannot very well get at him save by impeachment, and a Governor bent on mischief can do a great deal of it without running much risk of incurring that extreme penalty.

Gov. HUGHES has a very deep sense of his responsibility and accountability to the people, and if his term of office were indefinitely to continue the enactment of the Public Commissions bill in its present form would be productive neither of alarm nor, probably, of injury. But the policy that bill embodies, its principles, and in the main its provisions are expected to be of continuing force. They will apply under the administrations of other Governors, some of whom will not use exclusively for the public interest, but very often more for private interest, the powers conferred by that measure. It seems to us unwise for the supporters of the bill to insist upon its enactment without change.

In two very important respects the Public Commissions bill commits us to ventures in a new field. The bill not only embodies existing law, but it takes over from Federal law and makes a part of our statutes new principle of Government control and vests in the Commissions powers of regulation more complete and far-reaching than have ever been exercised by any public agency over the corporations of the State. And these new and very large powers, it is to be observed, are not exercised by those public servants with whose ways of procedure the people are familiar. The service corporations are not to be regulated and controlled by the Governor, by the Attorney General, by the District Attorneys, or by any other already constituted agency of the people's will. We are to have two Commissions, entirely new bodies, created for this special purpose, and nobody is wise enough to foresee in what manner or to what extent they will make use of their authority to supplant by their own orders the business regulations, the methods, and the policies devised and put into force by the Directors and managers of the service corporations.

So radical a departure from the policies of the past ought, it seems to us, to be entered upon with some soberness of mind. Col. WATTERSON never made a wiser observation than that reported by our Paris correspondent yesterday: "Sensible people ought to see, and do see, that to hurt railway properties is to hurt not only the shareholders, but every man." What is true of railway properties is true of gas companies and electric-lighting companies. If we trusted altogether to the principle of "accountability to the people" we might fearlessly venture into all sorts of experiments in corporation control. We might also make fearful blunders, the consequences of which would inflict greater loss upon the people, all the people, than they would suffer from the uncorrected abuses of corporate privilege.

The Judges of our courts are just as much servants of the people as Governors or Railroad Commissioners. They are as a rule wise and prudent men. Why are the supporters of the Public Commissione bill so strangely afraid of permitting the courte to review the acts of the Commissions? Judicial accountability to the people is oftentimes a valuable, even an indispensable, check upon Executive or legislative unaccountability.

SENATORS AND PRESIDENT.

What do they care about a Senator in Ohio? Apparently little or nothing, though there is raging in that State a hot quarrel, directly involving the choice of a Senator and only indirectly influencing the nomination for the Presidency. Our dispatches show that in this dispute the people are dividing solely with reference to Mr. ROOSEVELT. To Mr. TAFT and to Mr. FORAKER they are indifferent save as the one is taken to represent and the other to oppose the President. This is not because either Mr. TAFT or even Mr. FORAKER is a negligible person in himself. On the contrary, each is an extremely capable man, each has a definite and substantial record, and they are fairly typical of the differing tendencies in the Republican Party.

We have heard a good deal about the peculiar power of the Senate lately. Magazine writers and professors of comparative politics have united to expose to the country the dangerous concentration of influence in that body and the peril of a conspiracy formed there to turn the Government over to the corporations. On the other hand, the Senate has been held up as the last retreat of the doctrine of State rights, from which the beneficent intentions of the Executive may be successfully resisted. The facts do not sustain these views. A strong man in the White House, who is also an astute politician apt at appeals to popular sentiment and cunning in the manipulation of large interests, can at once fill the popular imagination and handle partisan machinery in a manner to make himself the dominating figure in State contests, beside whom State leaders become insignificant. Mr. ROOSEVELT is doing pretty nearly that all over the United States, and particularly in Ohio. It is not altogether a wholesome or agreeable state of things, but it exists, and might as well be recognised.

WHERE THE GOLD GOES.

The scramble for gold is in singular contrast to the supply, which grows at an ever-increasing rate to totals beyond any demand which was imaginable only a few years ago. For example, so excellent an authority as Prof. LAUGHLIN said only about three years ago that the supply of gold was now so large that "no restrictions on legitimate bank discounts can be assigned to a scanty world's supply of gold for reserves." The supply is larger than when this opinion was given, and yet the paucity of gold is nowhere more marked than in the world's capital centre, which is not alone in its famine of primary money as a basis of credit. If the total is adequate, can there be any explanation found in the distribution of gold? Is there any explanation of the failure of gold to get into position to do its work effectively?

Of course it is only the gold in the banks that helps credit. A man's gold watch, a millionaire's gold table service, any bullion made into gold leaf or otherwise consumed in the arts, even a lucky eagle carried in a pocketbook, or less lucky eagles disbursed for necessities, might as well be unmined so far as banking is concerned. Of the total $10,000,000,000 of gold existing, it is usually reckoned that about one-half is used as money, or floating capital if uncoined. Going back ten years, we find these facts regarding bank and Government gold reserves:

	1896.	1906.
France	$378,559,000	$555,500,000
United Kingdom.	275,836,000	188,100,000
Russia	370,560,000	434,700,000
U. S. Nat. Banks and Treasury.	250,939,000	953,800,000
Germany	167,484,000	170,500,000
Total world	1,915,053,000	3,311,700,000

The deficiency from the estimated total gold in monetary use is attributed to unreporting institutions. The salient disclosures in the above table are the moderate gain by most nations, including as might not be expected by Russia, and the actual loss by England. We have already called attention to the fact that English commentators attribute to England's deficiency of banking reserve as well to adverse mercantile exchanges as to specific banking difficulties. The one fact which overshadows all others is the very large gain by the United States, and which has been enhanced since the dates assumed. Within the past ten years half of the world's increase of gold reserves have come to the United States. But even this only partially states the United States draughte upon the world's gold. For the period named the stock of money outside the Treasury and National banks rose from $1,005,125,260 to $2,207,977,986, so great was the demand for hand to hand money.

It was only a few days ago that Representative FOWLER called attention to the fact that the amount of reserve money—gold or its equivalents—in the hands of the people was $1,206,531,184, with about $500,000,000 of banknotes. The reason and the result are equally plain. Gold does not gravitate to the banks because greenbacks and other forms of money serve equally well for reserves, and the law forbids the use of gold as a basis for banknote circulation. Gold accordingly in large degree remains in circulation, or in the Treasury, and to that extent serves no banking purpose. A gold dollar pays a dollar of debt, and no more, but taking into account the relation between the banks of the reserve cities, a dollar of gold in the bank reserves enables the payment of six dollars of debt by check, and might equally well serve the payment of debts in currency where checks are not available. But the law forbids. It not only forces Americans to the extravagant use of gold for currency—it starves the world's bank reserves, compelling them, in combination with our tariff, to pay gold for our goods, and to stop taking goods when they cannot afford to pay gold. Too large a proportion of the world's production of gold in recent years is seen to have been absorbed by the United States, and to have been withheld from banking use here by a currency system which is a grievance to civilization as well as to ourselves. The credit situation is strained, and yet there are billions of credit of the solidest sort visibly and unnecessarily wasted.

THE SOCIALIST PROPAGANDA.

The various States of the United States are invited to remark how they are sized up by the National Executive Board of the Social Democratic Party, which is now laying its plans for 1908. All effort at promoting the cause in the South is abandoned for the present, and the South is to be congratulated. One or two other States are in the hopeless class, and the residence of the Peerless and Perpetual candidate is one of them. Mr. BRYAN should see to this. New York is one of twenty-six States where it is thought worth while to sow seed, and New York also is the home of a candidate who has done his best with as little success as Mr. BRYAN. California is one of the few States where Socialism has come nearest to doing its perfect work, and where it is thought no effort is necessary. For further details we must refer those interested to Mr. VICTOR BERGER, but we cannot refrain from reproducing here Mr. BERGER'S statement of one of the chief reasons for his great hopes:

> All this recent agitation and unrest and the showing up of how corporations run things is making votes for us and swelling our membership.
>
> The people are awakening. They are becoming more liberal and beginning to understand social conditions better. Why, look at President ROOSEVELT. His agitations and exposures are helping us immensely. He is paving the way for Socialism. While he is not of our faith, nevertheless he is helping us. He is convincing the people that we know what we are talking about. Why, he has even stolen some of our ideas.

THE HAGUE PROGRAMME.

It is quite conceivable that certain of the Powers should object to the limitation of armaments, even if the Powers which are their rivals and possible enemies should consent to such a limitation. The very mutual suspicions and jealousies which have raised up and which maintain the enormous and unprecedented armaments of Europe would suffice to suggest to each of the overarmed Powers that any pretense of disarmament made by any of the others was not made in good faith. Probably that consideration will prevent, for a long time to come, any diminution of armaments, whether by "horizontal reduction" or otherwise. And in the improbable event of the adoption of any scheme of proportionate reduction it seems safe to say that every one of the military Powers would add to the burden under which it labors, in order to increase the amount from which the reduction would have to be made.

But, granting that there is not much likelihood that the conference will do or recommend anything to the purpose about the limitation of armaments, there does not seem to be any good reason why any of them should refuse to talk about it. Nevertheless, the reservations which Baron ROSEN has notified to our Government on the part of other Governments, including his own, doubtless indicate a disinclination to talk about disarmament, and to preserve "liberty of action" by abstaining from freedom of speech. While the United States and Spain have intimated a desire to discuss disarmament, Germany, Austria, and Russia have marked their reservation of their right to abstain from the discussion of any subject not included in the original Russian programme.

It is true that this programme deals with some subjects of high international importance. The most important of them, perhaps, is the "framing of a convention relating to the laws and customs of maritime warfare" and including the respective rights of neutrals and belligerents. This is a subject which has never been brought to a real adjudication. Internationally, the decisions of the International Conference of Paris in 1856 are practically in force to-day. And the Russo-Japanese war has shown how greatly those decisions are in need of explanation as well as of amplification. The subject is really of the first magnitude, and would of itself be worth a conference of the nations. Any satisfactory conclusion upon it which should really safeguard the rights of neutrals as against belligerents would be a distinct victory for civilization. But it seems very unlikely that either of the two subjects which our own Government has signified a desire to discuss, the limitation of armaments and the limitation in the use of public force to collect ordinary public debts accruing from contracts, will be added to the programme for the conference.

INSPECTORS AND "JOBS."

Some time ago, when a Superintendent of Highways was indicted in Brooklyn for selling appointments as Corporation Inspectors, it was found that there were something like 1:2 of these appointments in force. This is more than five times as many as there were three years previously. Clearly they furnished a pretty good commodity for the market and their sale may easily have been a source of much profit.

On the other hand, they offered a really tempting purchase whether money was paid for them or they were taken as compensation for "political" services. Let us glance at the work involved and the opportunities for graft presented. These Inspectors are supposed to inspect all openings in the streets of the city made by corporations for laying wires or pipes or for building vaults, &c. They are paid nominally $4 a day by the corporation whose work is inspected, and their certificate is necessary to secure release from obligation by the corporation. The Inspectors are not carried on the roll of city employés, are not paid by the city, are not themselves inspected or their work in any official way controlled. Of course it is not impossible under these conditions that Inspectors may be honest and competent, but equally it is extremely difficult to detect and punish dishonesty or incompetency, while the chances for blackmail on the one hand or for shirking work on the other are numerous and constant. When we remember that a good part of the difficulty of cleaning the streets and therefore a good part of the disease-breeding conditions existing in our streets are due to openings in the pavement and to the bad way in which they are reclosed, we can see how much mischief corrupt or lazy or unfit Inspectors can and do bring about. For every tainted dollar paid to the politicians through these appointments, the people of the city directly or indirectly suffer hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of damage.

The Grand Jury that indicted the Brooklyn Superintendent of Highways recommended that all Inspectors charged with this kind of duty should be appointed under the civil service rules, so that the city could secure capable men and they could be held to decent accountability. A bill to that effect is before the Senate committee, with fair prospects for passage. A final hearing on it will be held on next Tuesday. We really cannot see how any one can reasonably oppose it. The present system is a rank nuisance, costly and disgraceful to the people of the city and of no good to any one but corrupt officials and corporations ready to profit by their corruption. The bill is Senate Bill 665, commonly known as the Fuller bill, as Senator FULLER is sponsor for it in its present form, though it was originally proposed by Senator SAXE and Assemblyman STANLEY. It ought to pass.

A DIFFERENCE ABOUT DIFFERENTIALS.

"Thorough" is President ROOSEVELT'S maxim. He stands pat even upon his errors. For example, in his latest statement that his railway policy is unchangeable, he repeats what he said in 1905, thus: "In two recent cases affecting great corporations the complaints have been made to me that they [the rates] are too low as regards certain big shippers; the complaint in both of these cases is about the differential, the difference of treatment of two sets of users of the railroads, the difference in favor of one set of shippers as against another set of shippers." The labored effort to tell the inexpert exactly what differentials are is apparent.

Now discriminatory rates between rival shippers are as different from differentials between ports as rates are different from rebates. Yet in both cases Mr. ROOSEVELT not only uses the words inexactly—which is a slight matter—but proposes legislation on the theory that regulating rates will amend rebating evils, and that what will cure discriminatory rates—which all condemn—will also cure differentials, which are so far from being generally condemned that the differentials which our Chamber of Commerce has criticised as injurious to New York were established upon an award of the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

It would facilitate understanding if Mr. ROOSEVELT would be at pains to set forth his opinions with greater precision. If he persists in using a language of his own, misunderstandings and cross-purposes are inevitable.

The prevailing craze for mauling the corporations, continually fed and added to by the ceaseless uproar at Washington, is well exemplified in the bills pending in certain State Legislatures to limit the salaries of the officers of life insurance companies permitted to do business in those States. Ex-President CLEVELAND, as counsel for the Association of Life Insurance Presidents, has prepared a brief pointing out that these bills are uncalled for and devoid of all reason, that they have no relation to questions of solvency or prudent management, and that in addition to being senseless they are probably unconstitutional, for the reason that they infringe the liberties of the citizen. Such measures are the natural expression of the Populistic spirit that has overrun the country, and in his brief Mr. CLEVELAND enters a very timely remonstrance.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Oculists and Opticians.

Some recent remarks in this column on the way in which, and the persons by whom, the eyes of the public school children should be examined and tested if those who need and cannot buy glasses at their own expense are to be supplied at the expense of the city, seem to have excited rather fierce disapproval among those extremely useful artisans and tradesmen, the opticians.

To be quite frank, we expected the disapproval and were prepared to endure it, for the opticians, admirable and useful as are the skill and knowledge exercised by many of them, to the incalculable benefit of humanity, are not content to remain in their own domain, but constantly show an inclination to edge their way into that of the medical specialist who is known as an oculist. That is a tendency which should be repressed—and will be, so far as we and others of like mind can do it, whether it appears at Albany, in the guise of a lobby fighting for an improper extension or against a proper restriction of their legal activities, or whether it shows up as a claim that they are as competent to examine the eyes of school children as they are to make the glasses prescribed by a qualified oculist.

We would not undertake, of course, to disprove the assertion made in a letter we printed the other day that some opticians are more successful than some oculists in fitting glasses to eyes. We are, indeed, well aware of that fact, for there are incompetent oculists, just as there are incompetent doctors and surgeons, but the fact remains that the optician, as such, has not even begun to prepare himself for the examination of eyes that should precede every prescription of glasses, exactly as there remains the fact that the oculist, if worthy of the name, and not the victim, as not a few of them are, of a blind prejudice which prevents him from seeing the value of new ideas, has, "by definition," so prepared himself for the exercise of a highly important social function.

If an optician chooses also to acquire the wholly different training and education of an oculist, that is his privilege, but, almost of necessity, if he does so he will abandon the hope of superiority in either line and will condemn himself to mediocrity in both—which is highly unwise.

Mr. Carnegie and His Guest.

Notable even in such an assemblage of notabilities as that at the house of Mr. CARNEGIE Friday evening was the stalwart figure of WILLIAM E. WEIHE, the man who led, and to success, the great Homestead strike of 1892. That was one of the most famous of "labor troubles," not only because of the bloodshed that marked its progress, but because of the particularly intense bitterness of determination manifested by both sides. Mention of it is still frequent whenever the relations of labor and capital are under discussion, and not yet are the references by any means all of the forgive-and-forget sort, and yet Mr. WEIHE was singled out for special honor and attention, not only by his host, but by the other guests, many of whom have not yet devoted quite all their time to getting rid of their fortunes.

Nothing could be further from our purpose than to demand astonishment that a representative of organized workers should meet as on a level the representatives of actively employed wealth and of the learned professions; that is an old story now, and no longer astonishes anybody. The remarkable—and highly promising—thing is that Mr. CARNEGIE and Mr. WEIHE were the two who could meet in this way, their old overt antagonisms all abandoned, and each, in a new comprehension of acts and purposes, praising his former foe. Of course labor and capital are not yet at peace, and the significance of this particular meeting could easily be exaggerated, but the new comprehension is on the way, in some instances has arrived. It is only when labor in its less intelligent forms tries conclusions with exponents of capital who are equally behind the times that nowadays they settle their differences of opinion by brute force, as at Homestead.

The better way was brilliantly illustrated only last week on the Western railways, where, by the utilization of a law long held to be too vague and idealistic for practical application, conditions that formerly would have been almost sure to flame into something much like civil war, with enormous losses of property certain and some loss of life probable, were argued to a conclusion apparently satisfactory to both employers and employed. Indeed, war of any kind is becoming so distinctly old-fashioned! Not many of us believe, or even hope, that the era of universal peace will begin next year or the year after, and the impression that most people will stand a good deal of careful watching is still too widely prevalent to permit of really serious talk about the general disarmament of either nations or individuals, but so-called "natural enemies" can and do now get together like reasoning, if not like loving, beings. So, though the optimist has not yet come into his own, the meliorist has no cause for complaint.

Literature and Heredity

So sure are we that many—most—of our readers must have shared our own enthusiastic approval of the little essays recently contributed to our SATURDAY REVIEW by Miss HILDEGARDE HAWTHORNE that with equal confidence of not offending we set down here the opinion that these articles are, if not literary criticism of the very highest quality, something else so particularly charming that there can be no regret because of what they lack. "Reviews," as that word is commonly understood, they have not always been, or often, but Miss HAWTHORNE can so easily be pardoned for sometimes giving us her own thoughts and fancies about an author's subject or story instead of telling us what he has had to say about it!

There are, according to report, people who deny humor to women. They should read Miss HAWTHORNE. Others question the possibility that women can reason. They should read Miss HAWTHORNE, for she can be logical without being dull. Also, she seems to know a good deal about a good many things—a merely incidental merit, of course, but not therefore one to be entirely ignored. We suspect, from her last effort, that there are few subjects which Miss HAWTHORNE would not have the courage to discuss if necessity presented itself, or even if opportunity arose. This is a somewhat alarming trait, but there is joy in the thrill of terror—when one knows that nobody is going to be hurt. And nobody is.

It may safely be assumed that heredity has something to do with this young women's—talent. (Not being particularly courageous ourselves, we will not use a word of the same length but much larger size.) Just what heredity has to do with it, however, it would be hard to tell; for in the granddaughter's writing there is no recognizable trace of the grandfather's style, of his turn of mind, of his way of looking at life. Miss HAWTHORNE does not dream, beautifully or otherwise. She is particularly wide-awake and of her age; not tender, even a little cruel, perhaps, but most judicious in eclecting victims upon whom to inflict pain.

"Worrying About Transportation."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Under the above heading you comment upon the inadequacy of transportation in New York and the excellent work performed by the Dry Goods Association in making a protest against the evils connected therewith. The report of the association's committee deals fully with the subject, but its suggestions are somewhat academic. It seems to me that no good can be done by the putting together of heads, except in the way of wooden pavements. For the purpose of improving its transportation, New York will have to take a leaf from the books of European cities. We can be eclectic in our practical life as well as in literature and in art. Let us have in New York a cheap and effective cab service. London has just inaugurated a motor cab service, which does the business at 16 cents a mile. Much traffic could be diverted from Broadway by the introduction of numerous omnibus routes on avenues running parallel with the Great White Way, and in the Summer time there is no earthly reason why small and speedy little river steamers should not sail from the Battery to say 129th Street, and even higher up the Hudson. New York is the only big city in the world which does not utilize its river facilities for passenger traffic except in the way of pleasure. Get cabs, omnibuses, and river steamers and the eternal "kicker" on the "L" in the "hole" will lie down in peace with the owners of railroad franchises. GOTHAMITE.

METHODIST PARSONS CHOSEN

Ordained at the Newark Conference Held in Morristown.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 7.—A discussion of the difference between the Christian faith and fanaticism opened the morning session of the Newark Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church here this morning. A dozen or more clergymen spoke upon the subject, including Bishop Daniel Ayers Goodsell, who is presiding over the conference. He quoted the late Rev. W. Robertson of England, who said the difference between faith and fanaticism is that in fanaticism the idea possesses the man, while with faith, the man possesses the idea. "A fanatic," said the Bishop, "is characterized by the spirit of criticism, of sourness, of acidity," and he told of several periods of fanaticism, including the Millerites, the "come-outs," and the "holy rollers." But these movements subsided, and the Church abided, and if there is anything in these beliefs God will adjust them to His general plan of salvation," he said.

The conference then went into executive session. After the doors were again opened to the public the second-year probationers were called before the conference. On the motion of the respective Presiding Elders from whose districts the men came they were admitted by the conference and will be ordained to-morrow.

WHAT "ANGLO-SAXON" MEANS.

Mr. Allen Says it Refers to Our Tongue and Defends its Use for Catholics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with interest the editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES of April 3 entitled "Anglo-Saxon Catholics." The cavilling at the term "Anglo-Saxon" in this instance indicates a decided bias and narrowness which in these enlightened times is regrettable to see.

"Iveragh," whoever he may be, must know full well that the term "Anglo-Saxon" is rarely used specifically on this side of the Atlantic, it being ordinarily employed to define the difference between a people who speak the Anglo-Saxon tongue and those of other tongues.

We Americans speak the English language and are frequently alluded to, here and everywhere, in the broader sense as Anglo-Saxons. Under these circumstances I fail to see the "reductio ad absurdum" of this "hyphenated" appellation.

Germs in Hudson River Ice.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that so eminent a patriot as Mr. Surrogate Van Derzee of Albany has pronounced himself on the subject of pure ice before so impartial a body as the Hudson River Ice Association, pray permit me to quote from your report of his astonishing speech these words: "I never read of a single case of sickness caused by the existence of disease germs in ice gathered from any stream * * * in this State!"

This is meant to be reassuring; it proves that Mr. Van Derzee's devotion to the duties of his high office prevent him from reading about germs which we drink with our ice in New York.

At Catskill is a chronic condition of typhoid fever owing to water pollution, yet we are using ice from that neighborhood in our drinking water.

Not many years ago the Hudson River Captains of sailing craft filled their casks with fresh water for drinking purposes anywhere on the river above Poughkeepsie.

To-day the most reckless bargee would hesitate to drink this water at any point.

Would Surrogate Van Derzee recommend us to cool our drinking water with ice taken from a river which is but a glorified sewer?

We don't ask Mr. Van Derzee to read up on bacteriology; we love him too much for that.

But be practical, dear Surrogate. Come and drink of our Hudson sewer and then say that it's fit for ice! POULTNEY BIGELOW.

Better Transit Facilities.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A communication signed "Subway" has recently appeared in your paper concerning additional stairways to the elevated stations at Houston, Ninth, and Eighteenth Streets on the Third Avenue line, and being interested in this matter I thought I would answer the writer to explain what the Citizens' Civic Club had done toward securing this much necessary relief and how difficult it is for the public to secure an improvement at times.

The hostile attitude of the property owners in these vicinities has retarded everything that might be done to relieve the congestion at these points, and it is through the constant "dogging" of he Citizens' Civic Club that the Interborough Rapid Transit Company has finally been forced to condemn the properties at these points. This was the only way in which relief could be had in a lawful way, and it is our hope that with the vigilance of the Utilities Committee of the Citizens' Civic Club soon to be able to have adequate transit facilities at congested stations, especially these in question.

It is a remarkable fact that the owners of the properties at Houston Street and Third Avenue are a well-known wealthy American family, namely, the Astor Estate, and that they have steadfastly refused to give permission to the Interborough for these stairways. If the person signing "Subway" desiree to co-operate with the Citizens' Civic Club in this matter we would be pleased to hear from him. Our address is 8 West 125th Street. I. IRVING FATE.

Voting Women of Australia.

From The London Chronicle.

The female suffragists may be interested to learn that the precise number of their enfranchised sisters in the Australian Commonwealth is 995,375. The males are not very much to the good—1,114,189. The figures are taken from a return just presented to the Commonwealth Parliament in reference to the general election of last December. Victoria is the only one of the six States in which the ladies have a majority. They beat the males by 282 on an aggregate voting register of 672,054. Out of the two millions entitled to vote last December only 1,059,186 took the trouble to exercise the franchise.

NEW YORK'S NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.

(With apologies to Mr. Kipling.)

When New York's greatest picture is painted and the tubes are twisted and dried,
When the oldest judges have faded,
and the youngest kickers have died,
There'll be rest, and faith, 'twill be needed,
for now it can never be,
And the Master of all Good Workmen will ask: "What's the N. A. D.?"

And those that were good shall be happy;
they shall sit in a golden chair;
They shall splash at a ten-league canvas
with brushes of comet's hair;
They shall find real judges to judge them;
they shall answer their conecience' call;
They shall paint as it pleases their fancy,
and their pictures shall hang on the wall.

For only the Master shall praise them,
and only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for the hanging,
but he'll get there just the same;
They shall work for the joy of working,
and each in his separate star
Shall turn out his own kind of picture and not give the others a jar.

TIME OF DISTRESS COMING, SAYS SCHIFF

He Warns the Charitable of the Approaching End of Our Prosperity.

PERIL IN FOREIGN INFLUX

Louis Stern, Answering, Says He Has No Fears—Jewish Charity Dedication.

At the dedicatory exercises of the new home of the Sisterhood of the Temple Beth-El at 329 East Sixty-second Street yesterday, Jacob H. Schiff predicted an era of great suffering among the poor in the congested districts, which is to come when the wave of prosperity recedes. He lamented the fact that the projected Federation of Contributors to Jewish Communal Institutions in New York City has not yet been perfected to fight coming distress. Mr. Schiff's remarks were answered by Louis Stern, President of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, who said he saw no trouble ahead that could not be satisfactorily met.

"What is to become of the enormous population that is coming to our shores from everywhere?" asked Mr. Schiff. "What is to be its fate when this wave of prosperity begins to recede? Are we not inviting suffering, and how are we going to relieve it? The charitable institutions should stand together. Those who have opposed the federation of charities have for the moment gained the day. I do not doubt the charity of these persons. But I for one believe that the federation is the only institution that can combat the era of suffering that is upon us.

A Grave Problem Ahead, Says Schiff.

"I am not a pessimist. Nor am I an alarmist. But I want to say, we have a grave undertaking on our hands. The time is coming when we will have to support charities in a much larger way than we are doing now. What are we doing in the way of relieving the sufferings of mankind that entitles us to sit in our palatial mansions? Are we going out to relieve the suffering around us? These are the questions we should ask ourselves at this time."

The plan of the federation to which Mr. Schiff referred was that it should act as a "clearing house" for all donations and distribute the money where most needed. When the proposition was referred to the committee appointed to control the fund the Directors of most of the large Jewish charitable institutions sanctioned it and accepted an invitation to become members of the federation. Three institutions, however, did not take this attitude toward the proposition. They were the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, Mount Sinai Hospital, and the Hebrew Home for the Aged. Their Directors declared that they believed that more good could be accomplished through individual effort than through a "clearing house," which to a certain extent, they argued, would deprive the individual of interest in his gift. A conference committee, with Justice Greenbaum as its Chairman, was appointed to confer with the Directors who opposed the federation. These conferences are now being held.

Louis Stern Has no Fears.

"The older institutions of the city studied this proposition," said Mr. Stern, who followed Mr. Schiff. "The majority concluded that it would be unwise to collect the funds according to the plan proposed. I question whether this very building would be in existence were it not for the individual effort of the men and women of Beth-El. When you take away that incentive, what remains? If we were to adopt the scheme proposed, I am sure we would be put back ten or fifteen years in our work. It having been demonstrated here what can be accomplished by individual effort, with all due respect for my friend Mr. Schiff, I have no fears for the future."

Joseph L. Buttenwieser of the Hebrew Technical School for Boys also discussed the question. All this was merely incidental to the dedication. The exercises were opened by Mrs. Lazarus Kohns, President of the Sisterhood. Mrs. Kohns told how the work of the association was started in 1890 in a private house on Second Avenue.

$10,000 Subscribed on the Spot.

Mrs. Kohns then told of the efforts made by the sisterhood to get a house, where the work could be conducted more efficiently. This was a big undertaking, so the sisterhood appealed to the congregation of Temple Beth-El for aid. Contributions included $2,000 in memory of Lazarus Straus, $1,500 from Temple Beth-El, and $1,000 each from Jacob H. Schiff and Adolph Lewisohn. The building cost $65,000. It was found necessary to mortgage the home for $25,000. When the guests left the synagogue yesterday in which the exercises were held they were asked to register. Here are some of the entries: "The children of Lazarus and Laura Straus, $5,000"; "In memory of Leopold Erlanger and his wife, Regina Erlanger, $1,000." Soon $10,000 was subscribed. It was learned that $10,000 more has been pledged. These funds will be devoted principally to raising the mortgage.

In addition to the addresses mentioned, the exercises included a short speech by Solomon Sulzberger, President of the temple. Mr. Sulzberger complimented the sisterhood on the work it had done, and then presented to it the Sefa Torah (five books of Moses) for its synagogue. The members of the sisterhood presented a loving cup to Mrs. Kohns. Mrs. Ferdinand Sulzberger, the First Vice President, made the presentation speech. The Rev. Samuel Schulman, D. D., rabbi of Temple Beth-El, made the dedication address.

The building is a three-story structure. Its chief feature is a synagogue, where the poor of the neighborhood will have an opportunity to worship. There are numerous classrooms, where the kindergarten and other educational work of the sisterhood will be carried on. There are also several large rooms, where societies connected with the sisterhood will hold their meetings.

LEAVES 34-YEAR PASTORATE.

The Rev. Dr. Erdman Resigns Morristown Charge—Made Pastor Emeritus.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 7.—After thirty-four years of service as the pastor of the South Street Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Dr. Albert Erdman closed his work here to-day. Dr. Erdman resigned some months ago. He believed that he was too far along in years to give the church, which is a large one, the attention it should receive, and stepped out in favor of a younger man.

The church, while feeling deeply his resignation, respected his wishes in the matter, and has made him Pastor Emeritus. At the communion service this morning, Dr. Erdman alluded briefly to the parting and told the congregation it had the heart-felt gratitude if himself and his family, for its loyalty and affection.

Dr. Erdman took up the pastorate of the church in March, 1869, and since his incumbency the beautiful edifice now occupied by the congregation was erected.

MODJESKA TALKS OF STAGE CHANGES

Thinks Nazimova a Wonderful Artist to be Classed with Duse.

NEW YORK THE CHANGEFUL

Never Stands Still, She Says, and Changes Are for the Better—She Won't Act Again.

Mme. Modjeska, who for so long was famous on the American stage, left town for Chicago yesterday, after a visit of about two weeks here. In Chicago she will visit her son, Ralph Modjeski—the final letter of his name in Polish changes from "a" to "i" with the sex of the individual. Then she will go still further West.

In her visit here Mme. Modjeska made many trips to the theatre with her husband, Charles Bozenta, and with such old friends as William Archer, the English dramatic critic. She has been especially interested in the work of Alla Nazimova, the Russian actress now appearing at the Bijou, for in spite of a certain difference in race she naturally feels a certain kinship for another Slavonic actress rising to prominence on the stage here.

In her rooms at the Hotel Astor yesterday Mme. Modjeska offered some comments on current theatrical events. Though 63 years old, she is no less spirited than of yore. She has the charm of a brilliant woman and her opinions are those of one long expert in her profession.

"One of the most refreshing things about America is the way it is always changing so much," said Mme. Modjeska, speaking with that slight foreign accent which has become almost part of her personality. "In New York I see that the musical and theatrical taste is changing all the time, and it is refreshing, whether it is for better or worse. The taste for music has changed so much and improved so much. When my husband and I first came to this country twenty-five years ago all the music one heard anywhere was such pieces as 'The Maiden's Prayer' and 'The Battle of Prague.' That was what the young girls played and what you heard, even at the concerts. Now it is so different. Even when the young girls play the piano very badly, most of them play, or try to play, good music; and the operas and concerts are wonderful.

Cosmopolitan New York.

"It is the same way with plays. I notice it more every time I visit New York. New York is all the time growing more cosmopolitan. When I first came to this country I played Ibsen's 'A Doll's House,' as I had done in Poland. But I only played it once, and never in New York City, because the people didn't like it. They didn't like the idea of a woman leaving her husband. I had almost the same experience when I played 'Magda'—the first Sudermann performance ever given in America. Though the critics were very kind in what they had to say about my work, they didn't like that kind of a play.

"The New York public is now certainly more appreciative of foreign plays. When my husband translated 'Magda' he put Sudermann's name on the programme, but most of the foriegn plays used to be adaptations, such as Augustin Daly made. In the old days they used to have to give the characters English names or the audience didn't like it. Now, the works of the foreign dramatists are presented as they have really been written."

Menus the Good-bye, She Said.

When Mme. Modjeska was asked if she expected to continue playing and more particularly if she expected to be seen again in New York she answered in the negative. She spoke very positively—and sadly.

"I have been so long on the stage that I think it is time for me to stop," she said. "I said good-bye to New York two years ago at my testimonial, and I hope to appear no more."

When her husband remarked that several managers were desirous of having her appear next year, Mme. Modjeska shook her head and repeated that she hoped she would not again be obliged to appear on the stage. She added that, if she did appear again, it would be only for a few performances and far from New York.

"I have left the stage," she continued, "and now I am writing my memoirs. I don't see how any one can write of his or her career while still before the public. I first tried to write in English, but I found that difficult. Of course, I can say what I want to say, but somehow the ideas seem to slip away from me. It is easier for me to write in Polish, and even after so many years it would be much simpler for me to play in Polish. I have finally decided to write my memoirs in my native language and have them translated. A large part of the work is already done.

Won't Let Her Back to Poland.

"I should love to go back to Poland again, but the Government has always refused me permission since the time when I made a certain speech at the World's Fair in 1893. Only last year, when we asked to be allowed to enter the country the authorities replied: 'Wait. Not yet.'

"When we first left Poland it was because we were practically driven out by the Government; and so it has always been.

"I could go to Europe and appear in the Polish theatres; but the only two large ones outside of Poland are in Austria, and they would not bring me money enough to pay for the venture. The rival Governments have divided Poland into three parts, like a cake, but the only part really worth playing in is Russian Poland, where I can no longer go."

Admires Ethel Barrymore.

Mme. Modjeska had much to say of the actresses now appearing in New York. She spoke in the kindest terms of Annie Russell, who is an old friend, and Ethel Barrymore, who is the god-child of her husband, Count Bozenta.

"I hope Ethel will soon have a chance to play the parts she really wants to play, like Rosalind and Viola," she said. "I think she will probably be seen in a Shakespearean rôle next season. Yesterday, when I saw her in 'His Excellency the Governor,' with her beautiful face and her beautiful arms raised above her head, she looked the picture of Miranda—so like a fairy creature. To play Shakespeare is so different from playing anything else. You never get tired of the lines, as you get tired of almost any other play after doing it thirty or forty times."

Mme. Modjeska recalled the time when Forbes Robertson, a young man of 28, was her leading man in London and played such rôles as Armand and Romeo.

"He was most handsome," she said. "He was a very romantic actor in those days, and I always think of him as a romantic actor even now. I have always wanted to see him play 'Hamlet.'"

But Nazimova Has Genius.

She spoke with especial interest of her own countrywoman, Bertha Kalich, whom she has seen here in "Monna Vanna" and "The Kreutzer Sonata." Then she spoke of Alla Nazimova, the subject of all subjects in which she is apparently the most interested.

"Mme. Nazimova is a Russian and I am a Pole," she said, "and of course that is not quite the same thing. But there is great sympathy between the Russians and the Poles, for they both have the Slavonic nature, and it is only the Government which separates us.

"I consider Mme. Nazimova a most wonderful artist, and I am especially struck by the difference in two such characterizations as her 'Hedda Gabler' and 'Nora.' I do not consider her as an American actress, but as a great foreign actress playing in English. I do not compare her with the American actresses, but I do seriously think she belongs in the class with Bernhardt and Duse. She is one of those wonderful actresses able to keep down their own personality and play a character as the author has conceived it."

ST. LOUIS GIRL MISSING.

Miss Irene Campbell Left Home a Fortnight Ago to Visit Her Aunt.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, April 7.—The mysterious disappearance of Irene Campbell, 16 years old, daughter of Mrs. Jane B. Campbell of 4,107 Laclede Avenue, and niece of Chief of Detectives James H. Smith, has puzzled the police of two cities for a week. She will soon come into an inheritance through her maternal grandmother.

The girl left the home of her mother on the afternoon of Friday, March 29. Mrs. Campbell believes she is with her father in New York City. Mrs. Campbell procured a divorce from Dr. Jesse A. Campbell in the St. Louis Circuit Court thirteen years ago. The custody of Irene, then 3 years old, their only child, was awarded to her. No mention of her father was ever made to Irene by her mother. Despite this reticence, she has learned since her daughter's disappearance that Irene had corresponded with her father.

"I cannot imagine what induced her to leave me. On the afternoon she went away she asked me if I would mind if she went to my sister's for dinner. I told her I would not. She said good-bye, and that was the last word I heard from her."

Mrs. Campbell believes her daughter has been taken away or induced to leave by her father, or that she has joined some musical organization. She is an accomplished musician and is understood to have been answering "want ads."

TORPEDOES UNDER THE CAR.

Broke Windows and Cut Passengers—Somebody to be Spanked.

The explosion under a Hamburg Avenue trolley car at Suydam Street, Williamsburg, on Saturday night, which broke all the windows, cutting several passengers, and to excited bystanders seemed to lift the car off the tracks, was caused, the police of the Hamburg Avenue Station discovered yesterday, by one or more railroad torpedoes put on the tracks. Capt. O'Brien and Detectives Meyers and Grossman came to the conclusion that boys were the culprits, and that they were evidently not aware of the damage that could be done by the explosives they used.

"I have men on the watch," said Capt. O'Brien last night. "We want to know what boys have the explosives. There have been a number of such explosions around here, though not with the disastrous result of that of Saturday night.

"If we catch any small boy acting suspiciously or having torpedoes in his possession we will—well, we'll spank him anyway."

ENGAGED ON SHIPBOARD.

Miss Hall and Mr. Robbins Fell in Love on the Bluecher.

The engagement is announced of Miss Jane Hall, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Hall of this city, to Reginald Robbins of Boston. Mr. Robbins is the son of the manager of the Waltham Watch Works. Miss Hall and he were on board the Hamburg-American steamship Bluecher, which has just returned from a thirty days' trip to Panama and the West Indies. Speaker Cannnn and the Congressional party were on bonrd and heartily congratulated the pair when the engagement was made known.

Miss Ida Reid to Wed Actor John Blair

John Blair, the English actor, who appeared earlier in the season with Lena Ashwell in "The Shulamite," and is now with Alla Nazimova at the Bijou Theatre, is soon to be married to Miss Ida Chester Reid. Miss Reid is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. A. Bertrand Reid of New York and Peekskill, and is well known in society. She has recently been living with Virginia Potter, daughter of Bishop Potter, at 114 East Seventy-sixth Street.

Wisconsin Society to Honor Spooner.

Arrangements were completed yesterday for the annual dinner of the Wisconsin Society of New York at the Waldorf-Astoria next Wednesday evening, at which Senator John C. Spooner of Wisconsin will be the guest of honor. Sir Thomas G. Shaughnessy, President of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, sent word that he would attend and speak. The list of speakers includes Senator Knox, Speaker Joseph W. Cannon, and ex-Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw.

Euchre to Aid Crippled Children.

There will be a progressive euchre party for the benefit of the Crippled Children's Home at the Hotel Latham, 4, 6, and 8 East Twenty-eighth Street, on Thursday afternoon.

POOLROOM SYNDICATE HUNT.

Four Arrests of Principals Likely This Week—After "Sen. G." Too.

The John Doe proceedings in the case of the downtown poolroom syndicate will be continued before Magistrate Barlow this morning. Several well-known men are likely to appear on subpoenas during the session this week. Four warrants for men mentioned in yesterday's TIMES are likely to be the result of these sessions.

The interesting feature of the case is likely to develop later in the week, when District Attorney Jerome will have finished with the Thaw trial. His efforts will be directed toward proving the connection of "Sen. G.," otherwise known as "T. Grady," "C. R.," and "M. J. R." with the syndicate. In the evidence against "Sen. G." the little telephone conversation which a man of the name of "Grady" in Albany had with County Detective Liebner will play an important part.

MISS ABOTT DENIES DODGING SUMMONS

Her Counsel, However, Tells Conried Lawyers They Have No Right to Sue.

HER ACTION BEGUN FIRST

Singer Asks $50,000 Damages for Breach of Contract—Ill in Her Apartments Here and Won't Sing.

In spite of the fact that Bessie Abott, through her counsel, Clifford W. Hartridge, served Heinrich Conried with a summons on March 25 and began a suit for damages on April 1, Mr. Conried, through his lawyers, ex-Judge Dittenhoefer and Frederick W. Sperling, has attempted to begin another suit against the soprano. After making many attempts to serve Miss Abott with a summons, this letter was finally sent to her in care of her attorney.

April 6, 1907.

Miss Bessie Abott:

Dear Madam: Repeated attempts have been made to serve a summons on you in a case to be brought by the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company against you, without avail. As you are evidently trying to avoid this service, this is to notify you that a process server will call on Monday, April 8, at 12 o'clock, at your place of residence, for the purpose of serving the said summons. If you fail or refuse to permit the service to be made then, we shall apply to the court for an order permitting substituted service of the summons. Very truly yours,

A. J. DITTENHOEFER,
FREDERICK W. SPERLING.

In reply Mr. Hartridge sent the following:

April 6, 1907.

Dear Judge Dittenhoefer: I received your New York City:

Dear Judge Dittenhoefer: I received your letter of April 6, inclosing a copy of a letter which you write that you have mailed to Miss Bessie Abott, and which, in substance, states that Miss Abott is trying to avoid service of some papers in an action between her and the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company.

It is absurd to say that Miss Abott is avoiding any service. On the contrary, Miss Abott has begun an action against the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company, and Mr. Frederick W. Sperling, who signed the letter you sent Miss Abott, is the attorney who has appeared for that corporation, and who, therefore, could well inform you of that fact.

Miss Abott has recently been annoyed by people sending word to her that they came from my office, when she knew, and the persons who sent them knew that this was absolutely false.

This whole treatment of Miss Abott, however, is on a par with the character of those who have been annoying her. So far, on my advice, she has refrained from making any comments on her treatment, but I give you notice that she will not tolerate further any such methods.

Yours very truly,
CLIFFORD W. HARTRIDGE.

"It is manifestly impossible," said Mr. Hartridge yesterday, "for Mr. Conried to start a suit now. He was summoned on March 25, and as nothing resulted from that, I started a suit for damages, asking for $50,000, on April 2. After this Mr. Sperling filed a notice of appearance. It is absurd for them to talk of starting a suit now, and they are only doing it to frighten my client. If they take any further step in this direction, I shall take some decided action myself."

In her bill of complaint, filed in the New York Supreme Court, Miss Abott contends that she signed a contract with Mr. Conried in December, 1905, whereby she consented to sing at the Metropolitan Opera House at a low figure for a period of five years, in consideration for which Mr. Conried was to advertise her as a prima donna and give her a chance to appear many times in the course of the season.

She was to sing, according to the bill of complaint in her suit, whenever the operas were presented, Martha in "Martha," Mimi in "La Bohème," Gilda in "Rigoletto," Lucia in "Lucia," Violetta in "Traviata," Ardina in "L'Elisir d'Amore," Susanna in "The Marriage of Figaro," the Queen in "The Huguenots," Marguerite in "Faust," and Juliette in "Romeo et Juliette."

She started to fulfill her contract in February, 1906, and instead of the twenty-five performances which it is alleged Mr. Conried had promised her for that season, she appeared only thirteen times, and many of these occasions were on Saturday nights. Mr. Conried, however, the bill says, explained that she had come so late in the season that he found it difficult to make better arrangements, and made promises for the following year.

In the season which has just closed Miss Abott has appeared only seven times, according to her complaint, at four operas and three concerts. Three of the operas were popular Saturday night performances, and at only two of them had she been billed to appear. In other cases she was substituted at the last moment for another singer, who was unable to appear.

Mr. Hartridge alleges that he attempted to arrange matters amicably with Mr. Conried, but finding this impossible he filed the bill of complaint. Miss Abott is ill in her apartments in the Hotel Belleclaire.

In the meantime "Martha" was given in Boston on Thursday evening. Miss Abott had been announced to sing, but as she had filed this suit she refused to appear, and Louise Homer's illness caused the substitution of Josephine Jacoby in the rôle of Nancy. Miss Mattfeld appeared in Miss Abott's part.

800 SING "THE MESSIAH."

People's Choral Union Draws a Crowd to the Hippodrome.

The People's Choral Union, Frank Damrosch conductor, sang "The Messiah" in the Hippodrome last night to an audience which almost completely filled that auditorium. The vast chorus of 800 voices does its best work in the Haendel oratorio.

Genevieve Clark Wilson, who sang the soprano parts in the score, was the most successful of the four soloists. She sang "Rejoice Grently" not only with brilliancy, but also with a sense of the finer feeling expressed in the text. Frank Ormsby was the tenor and William Harper the bass.

To Give "Aida" for Garibaldi Fund.

A special performance of "Aida" will be given to-morrow evening at the Manhattan Opera House in aid of the Garibaldi Memorial Fund. Between the second and third acts the overture to "William Tell" will be played. The proceeds of the performance will be devoted to the completion of the Garibaldi memorial, which will be dedicated July 4.

IRISH SONG FESTIVAL.

3,000 Cheer for Freedom for Ireland at Gaelic Society's Meeting.

Oh! Irishmen, nevsr forget
'Tis a foreigner's farm your own little isle;
Oh! Irishmen, when will you get
Soms life in your hearts for your own little Isle? —From Our Own Little Isle.

Songs that are dear to the hearts of Irishmen were sung last night in Carnegie Hall by members of the Gaelic Society. It was the twenty-eighth annual literary and musical festival of the society and in Gaelic was known as the "Feis-Ceoil Agus Seanachas."

Three thousand Irishmen and Irishwomen applauded as the well remembered folk songs echoed through the hall. Some of them appeared in new guise to music arranged for the occasion by Victor Herbert and other composers.

Mr. Herbert's great-uncle, Samuel Lover, also appeared on the programme as composer of several of the selections. A new arrangement of "God Save Ireland" was written by Mr. Herbert and sung by the Buidhean Cheoil, a choir of 60 voices.

The hit of the evening was made by Miss Maggie McCann, who after singing "Rory O'Morc," was encored, and gave "Barney O'Hea" with much expression. A burst of applause greeted the well-known lines,

Impudent Barney
None of your blarney,
Impudent Barney O'Hea!

Ireland's hymn of freedom, "Colmh-Scheinm," was rendered by the choir under the direction of Henry Magee. Bernard O'Donnell was the accompanist.

The "Gaelic Rally" was the first musical number on the programme, and aroused an enthusiasm in the audience which continued until the last number had been sung. "Our Own Little Isle," a war song, was sung by Edward O'Mahony, and "Mhailin" by Mrs. Helen O'Donnell, both of which were favorably received. John Cheshire, a harpist, called forth applause by playing several old Irish melodies, the music of which was arranged by himself. Other soloists who sung were Miss Kate A. Mulholland, Miss Genevieve C. Horan, and Lloyd Rand, a tenor. All were encored.

The address of the evening was made by the Chairman, John D. Crimmins, who after telling of the aims and ideals of the Gaelic Society, prophesied that Ireland would "some day take her seat among the nations of the world."

"The Irish language has a hold which all the machinations and influences of England can never shake free from Irishmen who love and venerate the language of their ancestors," said the chairman. "Its beauty of expression is far too sacred a thing for us to let drift into obscurity." He paid a tribute to Dr. Douglas Hyde for the work he had done in resuscitating the language in Ireland.

Mr. Crimmins told of a recent visit to several Irish schools, where he was surprised at the fluency and ease with which the pupils conversed in their beautiful but long-neglected mother tongue. He also commented upon their proficiency in the old Irish dances.

Major Edward T. McCrystal addressed the audience in Gaelic, and Patrick F. Hogarty, President of the Gaelic Society of Springfield, Mnss., spoke in Irish. Dr. Joseph Dunn, Professor of Irish in the Catholic University of Washington, made an address on "Gaelic in the United States."

BLOCK PLAYS ATTACHED.

Managers Sued by Mrs. King for Alleged Breach of Contract.

At the New York Theatre on Saturday night Henry J. Goldsmith, counsel for Will J. Block & Co., theatrical managers, was served with a writ of attachment by Deputy Sheriff Rinn, on the complaint of Alice Fischer Harcourt King of 1 West 103d Street. Paul M. Turner of 68 William Street is named as attorney for the plaintiff. The action is brought against the Will J. Block Company and M. S. Largey, who is reported to be the capitalist behind the concern. The production of "The Land of Nod" at the New York Theatre is under the direction of the Block Company.

A similar writ was served at the Manhattan Theatre, where "The Mills of the Gods," by George Broadhurst, is being presented by the Will J. Block Company as managers. The company playing a musical piece, "Coming Thro' the Rye," under the same management, and now in Concord, Mass., was also attached. Mr. Goldsmith, acting for Mr. Largey and Mr. Block, gave a bond for the "Coming Thro' the Rye" company, which will open at the Boston Theatre to-night.

At the Manhattan Theatre the Deputy Sheriff took $852 in cash, the company's share of the receipts in the box office. He also attached the scenery and costumes. At the New York Theatre there was a scene when the Sheriff found that the house Treasurer had handed over all the funds to Block about two minutes earlier. Here also the scenery and costumes were attached.

None of the shows will discontinue because of the attachments. Mr. Goldsmith will go before the court to-day and give a bond; and the performances will proceed as if nothing had happened. The writ of attachment was signed by Justice McLean of the Supreme Court.

Mrs. Alice Fischer Harcourt King alleges that she signed a contract with the Block Amusement Company on Jan. 26, 1906, whereby the firm agreed to star her in a play by Livingston Furniss, to be produced before Sept. 15, 1906. She brings suit for the sum of $8,400 damages for breach of contract. She was to have received a salary of $200 a week and a percentage if the receipts were over $3,000.

Mr. Block in reply states that he was unable to find bookings for Alice Fischer Harcourt King. In one of the letters submitted he asserts that managers have refused to accept her as a star. Mr. Block contends that the men whom the plaintiff represented as willing to give her time were unwilling to entertain any such proposal.

PLEA BY MISS BINGHAM.

For Bigness in Her Playgoers—Club Election Upholds Her.

The subject supposed to be under discussion when the American Playgoers met at the Hotel Astor last night was "Everyman." As a matter of fact one woman held the centre of the stage. She was Amelia Bingham, President of the club, fresh from the scene of her oratorical efforts at Weber's Theatre.

Miss Bingham opened the exercises by pouring an oratorical broadside into her own society. She told how she had been playing in Texas and other distant parts where things are "big," and she urged that the association acquire a little bigness of its own.

"Do get big! Do get broad!" exclaimed Miss Bingham. "When I founded this society, I had something fine and generous in mind and was very much in earnest. I do not believe in all this bickering. If I do resign I'll do it so quick you won't know what has happened."

Miss Bingham thrice repeated that she could not be at the head of a society which had the name of antagonizing the very factions it was meant to unite. At the end she recalled a poem about ambition and such things. Miss Bingham recited the poem.

When the election ballots were counted it was discovered that the official ballot had been sustained by a majority of about ten. This means that the present governing element will remain in power and their opponents must continue to grit their teeth.

MERIDEN BRITA CO.

NEW BRADY THEATRE NEAR TIMES SQUARE

Plans Nearly Complete for a Playhouse in Forty-fourth Street.

GIVES UP THE MANHATTAN

J. R. Grismer Associated with New Enterprise Near Lambs Club.

Plans for new theatres in the Times Square district continue to multiply. William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer, the theatrical managers, are contemplating the erection of a theatre in Forty-fourth Street, about opposite the new Stuyvesant Theatre, which Myer E. Bimberg is now building for David Belasco, and next to the Lambs Club. Though Mr. Brady states that the property has not been definitely acquired he admits that negotiations are in progress, and that the scheme of a New York home for his productions has already been carefully outlined.

Until within the last few weeks Mr. Brady held the lease of the Manhattan Theatre. He gave the house up only because the building is soon to be restroyed by the Pennsylvania road for its new construction work. When "The Man of the Hour" was first produced he was unable to get a New York theatre for the piece, and formulated a scheme, later abandoned, of giving a series of matinee performances. The play proved to be an out-of-town success, and was moved into the Savoy Theatre, which Mr. Brady now holds for the remainder of the season. Grace George, Mr. Brady's wife, is to return to the city in another week and will play at Wallack's.

Besides managing Miss George, for whom it may be supposed that the home theatre is specially planned, Mr. Brady and Mr. Grismer have under their direction such offerings as Wilton Lackaye, "The Man of the Hour," and Robert Mantell in his repertoire. He also still controls "Way Down East." The new theatre will be used for the plays presented by these stars.

Though no deeds have yet been passed the bargain for the site of the new theatre will probably be closed in the next few days. The four buildings just east of the Lambs Club on the south side of Forty-fourth Street are owned by the Medcef Eden Realty Company of 40 Wall Street, and the three next adjoining buildings in the same direction are controlled by ex-Judge William N. Cohen.

It is understood that the building is to be erected by Myer E. Bimberg, who is now building the Stuyvesant Theatre and the new Belasco house in the Bronx, and who built the Astor Theatre, first opened to the public last Autumn.

WATCH FOR CAMPANINI.

Given to Manhattan Opera Leader After Last Night's Concert.

A watch and chain was presented to Cleofonte Campanini last night after the first half of the Sunday night concert at the Manhattan Opera House by the members of the orchestra. The presentation was made on the stage by Max Bendix, who in a few words described the affection the orchestra had for their leader, and thanked Oscar Hammerstein for bringing so great a man to America. Later Mr. Campanini thanked the orchestra in the wings in a few Italian phrases and some English ones.

"I am overcome," he said, "but I appreciate the gift. I can say nothing. I can only feel my thanks."

"THE LILAC ROOM" ENDS.

Taken Off at Weber's—Miss Bingham Is Going to St. Louis.

Amelia Bingham and her managerial advisers held a conference with Joe Weber yesterday, with the result that "The Lilac Room" will be seen no more at Weber's Theatre. The production is declared discontinued forever. The condemnation of the press and the legal threats of the authors combined were too much to be borne. Miss Bingham is going to St. Louis, where she is to play a stock engagement at the Olympic.

White Rats Give a Charity Show.

The White Rats of America, the largest of the vaudeville associations, gave a performance last night at the New York Theatre for the benefit of the association's Charity Fund. The total receipts were about $3,000. During the evening "Big Tim" Sullivan sent a messenger to the theatre with a $100 bill. Contributions of like amounts were received from John Considine, Corse Payton, and Tony Pastor.

Augusta Glose Weds a Westerner.

Augusta Glose, the actress, well known in vaudeville, and whose last engagement was in one of the leading rôles of "The White Chrysanthemum," was married last Tuesday in Philadelphia to Charles S. Leeds of Kansas City, who is in the cement business and wealthy. They first met three years ago. They are now living at the Holland House.

"The Three of Us" to Close on April 27

Walter N. Lawrence announces the last three weeks of "The Three of Us" at the Madison Square Theatre, the New York run to end on Saturday night, April 27, completing a season of 227 consecutive performances. The piece will be presented in other cities, beginning May 1, including a long engagement in Chicago.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

Margaret Crawford, a contralto, with Savage's English Grand Opera Company is going to Germany to fill engagements in Frankfort-on-Main and Berlin.

A smoker and vaudeville show was held last night at Weber's Theatre as a testimonial to Mr. Hilliard, Trueasurer of the house. Several members of the Weber company came from Boston especially for the occasion. Vesta Victoria headed the list of volunteer performers.

Walter N. Lawrence will present Cyril Scott in a revival of "The Prince Chap" at the Majestic Theatre on Monday night, April 15. This will be Mr. Scott's last appearance in the play here.

TO STOP TENEMENT BUREAU.

Plumber Applies to Have Butler Restrained from Hindering His Work.

An application to make permanent the temporary injunction restraining Commissioner E. J. Better of the Tenement House Department from interfering with the work of William F. Conran & Son, plumbers, on a tenement house at 348 East Houston Street was made on Saturday to Justice Crain in the Supreme Court. In the application Eugene Conran, counsel for William F. Conran & Son, set forth that the power of the Commissioner only extends to the sanitary features of plumbing. Furthermore, as the law affecting plumbing has not been changed since the original plans were accepted in May, 1905, it was asserted that there was no necessity for filing new plans. Justice Crain reserved decision.

ALFRED DE CORDOVA BURIED.

Many Stock Exchange Members Attend Services in Temple Emanu-El.

The funeral services of Alfred De Cordova, who died on Wednesday last, were held yesterday morning in his apartments, at the Spencer Arms, Sixty-ninth Street and Broadway. The Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, officiated. Some of those who attended, including many members of the Stock and Cotton Exchanges, were:

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Herender, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Ballard, Richard H. Halstead, Chauncey Floyd-Jones, Aaron Wolff, Jr., James Spaulding, Albert Hendricks, S. I. Cohen, Mrs. Dyer Pearl, Mrs. Hillary Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sweeney, of Albany, and William H. Cutler of Chicago.

The interment was in Cypress Hills Cemetery.

THEO. D. BUHL DROPS DEAD.

Detroit Hardware Man and Banker Stricken While Out Walking.

Theodore D. Buhl, a prominent manufacturer and capitalist of Detroit, dropped dead shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon in front of the Astor National Bank in West Thirty-fourth Street, adjoining the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, at which Mr. Buhl was a guest. Several physicians who examined the body gave the cause of death as apoplexy, a diagnosis afterward confirmed by the Coroner.

Mr. Buhl, with his wife and granddaughter and his brother-in-law, F. H. Walker, and the latter's wife, arrived on Saturday night from Boston, where he had chartered a steam yacht for a long cruise. The Buhls went to the Waldorf and the Walkers to the Holland House. Mr. Buhl was in apparent good health during the day, and after taking luncheon with his family at the hotel started out for a walk about 3 o'clock. He had hardly gone 100 paces when he fell dead. The body was taken into the hotel and Mr. Walker was summoned from the Grand Central Station, where he was about to take a train for the West.

He took charge of his brother-in-law's body, which was prepared for burial and sent to Detroit on a late train last night. Mrs. Buhl was prostrated. Mr. Buhl was President of the Buhl Malleable Iron Works of Detroit, President of the Detroit National Bank, and also of Parke, Davis & Co., drug manufacturers.

COL. I. R. MOISE DEAD.

Confederate Veteran Said He Fired the First Gun on Fort Sumter.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 7.—Col. Isaac R. Moise, a veteran of the Confederate Army, who averred that he fired the first gun on Fort Sumter, died suddenly last evening just outside this city while en route here from Cleveland. Col. Moise had been visiting relatives in Cleveland, and was coming here to visit his son, B. Caldwell Moise, auditor of the National Tube Company. His death was due to heart disease.

Col. Moise had been engaged in many battles and was several times wounded. For some time past he has made his home in Wheeling, West Va., to which place the body was taken to-day.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Mrs. Mary De Long.

Mrs. Mary De Long, a member of an old and prominent Williamsburg family, died on Saturday at her home, 62 Devoe Street, in eighty-eighth year. Had Mrs. De Long lived until October, she and her husband, who is in his ninety-fourth year, would have celebrated the seventieth anniversary of their wedding.

Mrs. De Long came of a long-lived family. She was born in 1819 in the family home in the Bowery. She lived there until she was 26 years old, when she married, and with her husband, Joseph De Long, she moved to Williamsburg, settling in a house in Marcy Avenue, where they lived for forty years. She had lived in the house in which she died since 1885.

A conspicuous member of her family was a nephew, George W. De Long, who commanded the ill-fated Arctic exploring ship Jeannette, which was lost with nearly all on board in 1879.

She leaves four sons, two daughters, and fifty-grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Joseph W. St. John.

TORONTO, Ontario, April 7.—Joseph Wesley St. John, Speaker of the Ontario Legislature, died to-day, following an operation for appendicitis. Mr. St. John was born at Brock, Ontario, July 17, 1854. He was educated at the Victoria University and admitted to the bar in 1884. He had been a member of the Legislature since 1894.

Obituary Notes.

Mrs. W. ANCISEA REINSCH, 64 years old, dropped dead in the street in Elizabeth, N. J., yesterday morning, near St. Patrick's Church, where she had attended mass. She was on her way to the Convent of St. Joseph, where she had been living for a time. Her sister, Sister Mary Benedicta, is Superior of the convent. Mrs. Reinsch leaves a son, who is a priest in Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. AMELIA JANE LOCKWOOD, daughter of the late Robert Havell, the well-known artist and engraver of "Audubon's Birds of America," and widow of Brig. Gen. Munson Lockwood of the National Guard of this State, died of pneumonia on Saturday, in her 82d year, after an illness of a few days. She retained her remarkable vitality until her death, in spite of her great age. She will be buried in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery.

HENRY A. OAKLEY, ex-President of the Harvard Insurance Company, died last Saturday at his home in Nyack, N. Y. He was 82 years old. Mr. Oakley was the organizer of the Continental Trust Company, now known as the New York Trust Company, and for some time acted as its President. Ten years ago he retired from active business.

Salvation Army Robbed of $160.

TRENTON, April 7.—Some one robbed the Salvation Army here of $160 yesterday. The police are looking for Herbert C. Banden, formerly of New York, who was in charge of the Enterprise Hotel, which is run by the Salvation Army. Capt. Schlenfelett left Banden in charge this morning, and when he returned the keys to the cash drawer, the cash, and Banden were gone. Banden had been at the hotel for three weeks.

DR. PARKHURST ON TRAGEDY.

There's No Need to Pay $2.50 a Seat to See It in Theatres, He Says.

"Scarcely a week goes by," said the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst in his sermon yesterday in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, "without my getting on the inside of some real tragery. That is why I do not feel that it is necessary for me to go to the theatre and to pay $2.50 for a seat in order to witness imaginary tragedies.

"There is more tragedy than comedy in life. For myself, I do not need to see a fictitious woman shed fictitious tears over fictitious troubles. I am not berating the theatre, but I am much more intensely interested in the real tragedies that are all around us.

"To shed copious tears over the imaginary woes portrayed on the stage and then to come out of the theatre and to walk by on the other side, with glances carefully averted from those suffering the real tragedies of life, is to cultivate a sort of sentiment that is very poor and cheap."

The Stearns
Best of America

STEARNS SUPREMACY.

WHY THE STEARNS?

Our experience with Foreign cars, covering years of careful study, made us exceedingly reluctant to look to an American manufacturer for a product comparing favorably with the work of experienced firms abroad.

Our faith in American genius and skill, coupled with a strong desire to find an American automobile builder with a record for rapid progress toward perfection led us to make an exhaustive search.

The decision to apply to the Stearns automobile the name of "Best of America" was arrived at only after we became convinced that its record entitled it to such distinction.

The engineers connected with our firm spent months at the factory in Cleveland assisting in the perfection of the various refinements embodied in the 1907 Stearns. Here was a firm which had spent 11 years in progressive work, gradually developing a car which is not equalled to-day by that of any other American manufacturer.

We unqualifiedly recommend the Stearns in every point which goes to make a perfect motor car.

Call on us for an actual demonstration of what the Stearns will do. Let us show you how the Stearns double carburetor places at your command a wealth of reserve power for rough road and hill work.

The best of Europe and America has been embodied in the 1907Stearns.

Atlantic City.

Marlborough-Blenheim Atlantic City, N. J. April

The ending of Lent this year coincides with the beginning of April, the gayest and most distinguished month in Atlantic City's famous Spring season. During this month more eminent visitors and "nice people" are to be found in the great hotels than in any other month of the year, and the absence of the Easter Sunday "INTERRUPTION" enables guests to completely enjoy all the attractions of climate and artificial entertainment of this festive season with entire satisfaction.

The hotels claims distinction for its location, its ample public space devoted to its guests, its high-class music every night throughout the year, but particularly attractive with solo singers at the week-ends during the Spring season and its ownership management.

All the four dining rooms (two American plan, with the excellent cooking heretofore so popular, and two a la carte, with esparate kitchens and French cooks) have white service throughout, and in one of the American rooms, called the "American Palm Room," and in the a la carte rooms smoking is permitted. These are particularly attractive. Ocean and suites with large rooms 34 by 20 feet and a private bath (supplied with both sea water and fresh water and with running ice water) is with every attempt room in the Marlborough and with every room in the Blenheim, which in construction is reputed to be the most completely fireproof hotel in the world. Golf privileges.

PUBLIC NOTICES.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT, Third Judicial District, Ulster County. ASHOKAN RESERVOIR. Section No. 4. NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS OF APPRAISAL.

Public notice is hereby given that it is the intention of the Corporation Counsel of the City of New York to make application to the Supreme Court of the State of New York for the appointment of Commissioners of Appraisal under Chapter 724 of the Laws of 1905, as amended. Such application will be made at a Special Term of the Supreme Court to be held in and for the Third Judicial District, AT THE COURT HOUSE, IN THE CITY OF KINGSTON, ULSTER COUNTY, N. Y., ON MAY 18TH, 1907, AT 10 O'CLOCK in the forenoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard. The object of such application is to obtain an order of the court appointing three disinterested and competent freeholders, one of whom shall reside in the County of New York, and at least one of whom shall reside in the county where the real estate hereinafter described is situated, to act as Commissioners of Appraisal under said act, and discharge all the duties conferred by the said law and the acts amendatory thereof, upon such Commissioners of Appraisal, for the purpose of providing an additional supply of pure and wholesome water for the City of New York.

The real estate to be acquired herein is situated in the Town of Olive, and is to be acquired in fee for the purpose of furnishing an additional supply of pure and wholesome water to the City of New York.

The following is a statement of the boundaries of the lands to be acquired herein, with a reference to the date and place of filing of the map.

All the parcels herein described are to be acquired in fee and are colored pink on the map hereinafter referred to.

All those certain pieces or parcels of real estate situated in the Town of Olive, County of Ulster, and State of New York, shown on a map entitled "Reservoir Department, Section No. 4, Board of Water Supply of the City of New York, Map of real estate, situated in the Town of Olive, County of Ulster, and State of New York, to be acquired by The City of New York under the provisions of Chapter 724 of the Laws of 1905, as amended, for the construction of Ashokan Reservoir and appurtenances, in the vicinity of Olive City and Brodhead," which map was filed in the office of the County Clerk of the County of Ulster at Kingston, New York, on the 4th day of March, 1907, and is bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at the junction of the centre lines of the Tongore and Samsonville Roads, said point being the southeast corner of parcel No. 145, and running thence along the centre line of the said Samsonville Road and the southerly line of said parcel No. 145, S. 67° 18' W. 195.4 feet to the southeast corner of parcel No. 143; Bonds

In times of great prosperity the high rates for money cause bonds to sell at prices considerably below intrinsic values.

During periods of reaction in general business, however, large corporations are not heavy borrowers; consequently, capital turns to bonds for investment, the demand usually causing an advance in prices.

In view of the fact that capital is afforded its greatest protection when invested in sound bonds, the present low prices seem to offer exceptional opportunities to discriminating investors.

We shall be glad to furnish copies of our circular describing about 55 well-known listed Railroad Bonds.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION — THE MARKETS OF EUROPE

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Improvement in Money Markets Due to Treasury Measures.

So remarkable has been the change wrought in the money markets within the past fortnight that, recalling the stringency which existed so short a time ago, it is difficult for the casual observer of financial affairs to believe that the present ease is anything but artificial, and that sooner or later there must be a return to former conditions. Such a judgment of the situation, however, is ill-founded. Stripped of all technicalities, the reversal of conditions has been due simply to the restoration to banking vaults of funds which the Government had for months been locking up in its own coffers, thus depriving all markets, commercial as well as financial, of the sustenance absolutely essential to their progress. Our imports for a year and more have been on a practically unprecedented scale, and these have been subject to a tax in the way of customs, which has correspondingly swelled the Government's receipts. Until the Aldrich bill was passed there was no sure way by which these receipts could be again released into trade channels, but this measure devised such a way, and Secretary Cortelyou, with a promptness which has called forth the unstinted praise of all those engaged in finance, put it into effect. The result has been witnessed here in New York in the addition of over $17,000,000 to the resources of the banks, and when it is recalled that each dollar thus provided supplies the basis for loans amounting to $4, the real magnitude of the relief afforded is at once evident. In addition to this, however, the Secretary of the Treasury has devised a method of caring for the 4 per cent. Government bonds which mature in July, which meets with similar approval from all those interested in this operation, and the result here, too, will inure to the benefit of money markets. So great has been the change in this aspect of the situation that a banking house which at the opening of last week engaged $2,250,000 gold in London found it possible at the close of the week to dispose of this gold in the English capital at a profit, the necessity for its actual transportation to this side having entirely passed. This shows very clearly, what is the fact, that at the moment the money markets here are in decidedly better shape than they are in Europe.

This suggests two matters which may well be kept in mind. The first is that the scarcity of money in London and on the Continent is very real, as was shown both by the returns of the great Government banks of England, France, and Germany, and by the interest rates which are still kept in force by these institutions, so that a permanent relaxation of money here might conceivably lead to exports of gold. The violent rise in foreign exchange rates last week suggested the possibility of such a movement very clearly, and the foreign situation will therefore bear careful watching. Again, the rebound from the feeling of extreme pessimism, so general a fortnight ago to that of almost universal optimism now obtaining, this having been due almost wholly to the change in the money outlook, invites the production on the part of railroads and industrial corporations of the plans for raising new capital which they were forced to shelve upon the eve of the disturbances through which Wall Street has just passed. These plans were ambitious, as is sufficiently attested by Mr. Harriman's statement that the Union Pacific system a month ago had practically completed negotiations for a loan of $50,000,000 in Paris, and their simultaneous descent upon the money market would very quickly place us in the position which we occupied before the Treasury's measures brought relief. The same result would follow an outburst of speculation in the securities market. It is obvious, therefore, that while the financial situation is immeasurably improved, there is still required of those in control of affairs exceptionally careful handling of it if we are not to be thrown back into the old condition of distress. In the meantime there is encouraging news from the business world; a spirit of conservatism has been instilled into those conducting corporations of all kinds, and it is one of the financial axioms that a business depression foreseen is one to all intents averted. During the week the Steel Corporation announced its intention of constructing a new plant of large capacity at the head of Lake Superior, and expressions of confidence in the future of trade were likewise to be found in the increase in the dividend upon Atchison common shares and the initial dividend upon the preferred stock of the Kansas City Southern Railroad. The threatened strike upon Western railroads was successfully averted, and ceases, therefore, to be a source of anxiety. This week there will be published the first of the season's monthly reports on the condition of the growing crops, and if this is favorable and is followed by a series of cheerful statements of the same kind, and, finally, by a harvest at all comparable to that of last year, the situation will be sound indeed.

It is difficult to define the exact influence which last week's unfortunate controversy between President Roosevelt and Mr. Harriman will have upon the railroad situation, and upon the financial situation as a whole. If it were conceivable that this dispute should influence the Nation's Executive to unwarranted harshness in his dealings with the delicate railroad position generally from this time on to the close of his term of office, the results might well be extremely serious. Previous to the outcropping of this matter affairs were progressing in such shape that confidence in the integrity and soundness of the great majority of the country's railroads was returning, and the feeling was becoming general that there must be careful discrimination between the good and the bad. The results of the municipal elections in Chicago and in Baltimore, where the question of the conduct of public utility corporations by the municipality itself was directly at issue, indicate very clearly the thoughtfulness with which people of all classes are approaching the solution of such problems. It is not impossible, therefore, that the Roosevelt-Harriman controversy will be weighed with equal care, and end, so far as the investing public is concerned, in a refusal to find in so personal an encounter anything permanently disturbing to the progress of industry in this country.

THE OUTLOOK IN LONDON.

Gold Shipments to the United States No Longer Apprehended.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES

LONDON, April 7.—The Times's financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"It is satisfactory to observe that the New York exchange at last has shown an upward tendency and risen a point further. Gold shipments to the United States are no longer apprehended.

"The monetary conditions in America are evidently easier, and time money, lately almost unobtainable, has been offered at reasonable rates there. Thus there seems hope that New York will be in the position to liquidate gradually the credits raised in London and at least leave our bullion market alone so that the Bank may obtain all arrivals undisturbed.

"Much depends, of course, upon the movement of securities, and if there should be an outbreak here of purchases of American shares the recovery in exchange would be checked. So far the boot is on the other leg.

"On the Continent the outlook is less favorable, and while as a whole the situation is certainly clearer and there is good reason to hope that the Bank of England may get gold rapidly, the position of Berlin and Paris makes caution desirable until London's reserve actually has been raised to a more satisfactory level."

ACTIVITY IN BERLIN.

Public Buys Industrials, but Money Stringency Causes Reaction.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.

BERLIN, April 7.—The low level of quotations on the Boerse last week attracted buyers, and the general public was especially active in picking up industrial stocks. This feature of the revival of business after the panic was due to increased optimism in regard to the industrial situation.

The reports from the industrial centres apparently warrant this optimism, especially in respect to mining, electric, and textile activities. The improvement of the New York Stock Exchange also exercised a favorable influence here. The monetary situation, however, was such as to cause a reaction in the latter days of the week.

The extremely strained condition of the Imperial Bank is of course the chief cause of the money stringency. The Bank's position at this period of the year was never before so unfavorable. The Bank is earnestly endeavoring to avoid an increase in its discount rate, which its Directors are satisfied would be a serious blow to business of all sorts.

PARIS BOURSE IRREGULAR.

Heavy Gambling in New Ventures on the Outside Market.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 7.—The Bourse was very irregular last week, being dominated by the fluctuations in the price of copper, which is now the pivot of this market. Apart from the direct influence of Rio Tintos and other copper mining shares, the price of metal is watched anxiously as reflecting in a great measure the industrial situation.

The improvement in monetary conditions in the United States favorably affected this market and caused a general rise under the lead of French rentes. The Government stocks advanced materially, as also did the Bank shares.

Spanish rails moved up a few points. South Africans were dull, but improved slightly in sympathy with the rest of the market.

No large issues are announced for the present, but on the Outside Market are almost daily introductions of new mining or industrial shares, patronized by third-rate banking houses and dealt in only for cash. Speculation in these ventures has assumed large proportions and is the cause of anxiety in financial circles, for any losses will fall on the people of small means who have sold good securities in order to pay for doubtful ones.

THE PRICE OF SILVER.

Trade Authorities Find No Special Significance in Wednesday's Break

Though the drop in the price of bar silver in the London market last Wednesday to 30 pence per ounce brought the price 7/8 pence below the average for the year 1906, authorities on the silver market here in New York were not inclined to place any special significance on the break. It was pointed out by Edward Brush of the American Smelting and Refining Company, which is the world's largest producer of the white metal, that a reduction in the price of silver occurs every Spring and that the decline this year is therefore no more remarkable than has frequently occurred at the same season in previous years. At the close of 1906 silver was quoted in London at 32 5-16 pence and in the New York market at 69¾ cents. In the previous year the decline was from 30 1-16 pence at the opening to 29¾ in April.

The greater decline this Spring is attributed by Mr. Brush to the heavy indebtedness of China to Europe. Being a silver standard country, exchange operations are conducted in silver, and the white metal shipped from China to cover her bills in Europe comes on the London market as a commodity.

China's payments to European bankers are larger than normal this year because of the great amount of goods which have been carried in warehouse during the past two seasons of business depression in the empire. Loans at heavy rates of interest have been made on the warehouse receipts by British and Continental bankers who are now receiving principal and interest as the goods are distributed. The arrival of these silver payments at a time when India is temporarily out of the market and buying from other sources is at its lowest ebb was bound to have its effect in a recession in the current price.

Mr. Brush ridiculed the idea that the decline was the result of short selling by a bear element. He said that there were practically only three brokers in the London silver market, which makes the price for the world, and that this fact, in conjunction with the absence of stocks of silver anywhere, made profitable bear operations impossible. All of the silver that is produced or that comes into the market from the hands of bankers who conduct exchange operations with silver standard countries is sold as soon as it comes to hand, Mr. Brush explained. The loss of interest would make it impossible to carry it at a profit. Even the large users of silver in the arts do not, he said, carry stocks larger than demanded by their immediate needs, though prices are sometimes as much as 2 or 3 pence per pound lower in the Spring than the Fall, when the great holiday demand for manufactured silver articles begins. In the months of November and December, when silver reaches its highest quotation, the call for silver from the big manufacturers is double that of any other month in the twelve. Last year silver bars in London went as high as 33⅛ pence in London during the height of the Fall demand, which was the highest price touched since 1893. The lowest figure for the year had been 29 pence.

The price made by the American Smelting and Refining Company is based on the London quotations, with deductions made for the advantage of position, that silver sold in New York is at the London price, less cost of shipment to London, insurance, &c. On that sold in Denver an additional deduction is made for transcontinental freight.

Truce in Oil War.

Standard Oil officials in New York, while professing to be ignorant of the details, admit that a compromise has been arrived at between the company's European agents and its great rivals in the foreign field which three months ago formed the European Petroleum Union to fight the Standard. It was said at the time that this combination of European oil producers had been instigated by the Deutsche Bank of Germany, which is the dominating influence in the Continental oil interests, with the idea of forcing American oil out of the markets of Germany and other European countries. The fighting organization then formed took in German, Russian, Roumanian, Dutch, and British groups of capitalists and oil-field owners.

That the Standard regarded its unified rivals as most formidable was indicated in a public appeal made about that time by F. D. Asche of the Standard's export department, who sent an interview broadcast through the press of the United States, complaining that the company's foreign trade was being ruined by the attacks on the corporation at home. The Standard's foreign rivals, he said, were using the stories in the American press to bolster up an attack on the quality of the Standard's product.

Dispatches from the other side have said that by the compromise the Standard gets large oil storage plants at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Antwerp, and other ports. This fact, coupled with hints dropped at 26 Broadway, would indicate that the truce declared is in the nature of a division of territory. One official of the company said that the truce had been brought about chiefly because the European companies were loath to begin a war in which heavy rate cutting would be inevitable. The same official is authority for the statement that, though the compromise was to prevent rate cutting, no jump in prices would follow the peace. "The rate of production and consumption are nicely balanced now," he said, "and any upward movement in oil would have the double tendency of increasing the production of petroleum and of reducing the consumption of the final products."

The Rothschilds and the Nobels, who were parties in the formation of the European Petroleum Union, are credited with having been the peacemakers in the adjustment.

This is the third diplomatic success that has been achieved by the Standard in Europe. The first was in 1900, when it effected an amalgamation of a number of powerful oil companies and got control of some eighteen or twenty European-owned tank steamers engaged in the transatlantic oil trade.

Four years ago it entered the oil fields of Roumania, and started to produce oil for the first time in Europe, after a long struggle with the Liberal Government, supported by numerous influential oil men who were strongly opposed to the employment of foreign capital in the development of their leading industry. To-day the Standard has huge refinery undertakings and employs hundreds of American drillers in these fields.

THE RECOVERY IN STOCKS.

Twenty-eight Active Issues Show an Average Gain of 15 Points.

The extent of the recovery made in last week's upward-moving market from the low prices of the March collapse is best realized from a tabular comparison of the prices made on the days of lowest ebb with the highest points touched in the last six days of trading. In twenty-eight of the active stocks which were the chief sufferers in the break, an average recovery of 15 points is shown from the low prices of a last month. The appended table, which sets forth the movement of the stocks individually, uses the lowest prices made during the break, whether reached on March 15 or 25. How far the stocks have still to travel before again touching the high quotations of last Fall may be seen by comparing the column showing the high prices since the decline with the high prices of 1906 given in the first column of figures.

INLAND BANK RESERVES.

Show Decreases from a Year Ago, Though Loans Have Increased.

The returns of the National banks in the interior, which are now coming to hand in response to the March 22 call, indicate that in a majority of cases loans have increased, while reserves, with equal unanimity, have fallen off, compared with the corresponding date a year ago. This showing is in keeping with the known fact that the business of the country has outstripped the facilities of the banks to finance it, and that the increased volume of business that was handled last year was being done only at the expense of increasing bank credits, without correspondingly increasing the cash resources of the banks.

The following figures show the present volume of loans at a number of cities in various parts of the country, and also the percentage of reserves now and at this time a year ago:

	Loans	Reserve Percentage. Mar. 22, 1907.	Apr. 6, 1906.
Philadelphia	$172,072,541	22.41	22.46
Baltimore	57,722,804	22.47	22.63
Savannah, Ga.	2,403,811	26.32	27.51
New Orleans	25,689,259	25.20	25.74
Kansas City, Kan.	7,048,006	27.73	23.48
Columbus, Ohio	17,373,702	25.19	27.50
Indianapolis	24,304,070	25.59	28.80
Detroit	22,515,406	22.49	24.37
St. Paul	23,377,574	22.56	23.33
Dubuque	2,515,650	25.25	23.83
Waco, Texas	4,027,752	26.58	27.23

It will be noted that only in one of these places does the reserve show any increase, although all reported increases in loans except Savannah, Ga.

TOLD ROUND THE TICKER.

STEPHEN V. WHITE, whose resignation from the Produce Exchange was announced last week, was better known among old-timers in the Street as "Deacon" White. Though he occasionally made himself felt as a power in the speculative grain market in the old days when New York was the centre of the grain trade, it was for his bold operations on the Stock Exchange that he will be remembered in the history of Wall Street. "Deacon" White was one of the big men of the financial district in the late seventies and early eighties, when manipulation was a cruder art than it has since become. White was one of the first of the adepts at the game, and to his work has always been attributed the famous corner in Lackawwanna, which remained a sensation in the Street for a generation. Mr. White was active in church affairs, and got his name of "Deacon" from his connection with Plymouth Church in Brooklyn, of which he was one of the pillars during Henry Ward Beecher's prime.

THOMAS F. RYAN and James J. Hill, both called enemies of E. H. Harriman, are also alike in having each been the chief contributor to the building of a cathedral in his home city. Mr. Ryan, who is an ardent Catholic, practically built the cathedral of that faith in Richmond. Mr. Hill, though a Protestant, contributed $500,000 to the endowment of a Catholic cathedral in St. Paul.

The fabulous profits of the minority who took the bear side before the market took the path toward the collapse of last month are indicated by stories that come from the Fifth Avenue jewelers, who report that they have made larger sales during the past few weeks than ever before, except at the Christmas season. Most of the lavish purchasers have been men who are entirely unknown to the dealers. Tiffany & Co. are said to have made more sales of $100,000 and over during the last week in March than ever before in the Spring season in the history of the house. It is told of one Wall Street man that he appeared at a large Fifth Avenue jewelry house after the crash of March 15 and spent $80,000 in half an hour for various precious stone ornaments. When the second slump came ten days later he was back again. This time he put $125,000 into a pearl necklace.

THE ERIE NOTES.

Unusual Form of Road's Latest Financiering—Pays 8 Per Cent. for Its Money.

A novel feature of the $5,500,000 note issue put out by the Erie Railroad last week was the fact that the notes bore no fixed rate of interest, but were discounted by the road's bankers very much as commercial paper is discounted. It appears that this variation from the usual form of railroad note issues was decided upon at the suggestion of bankers who had handled a large amount of railroad note issues, including some recent issues of the Erie Railroad. It was considered that it had several advantages over one-year notes carrying interest.

To begin with, the notes issued in this way carry on their face no indication of the interest rate paid by the road, and again, many banks prefer to discount such a note rather than buy an ordinary note and collect interest at half-yearly periods. It was pointed out that a bank in buying a note discounted in this way would be in a position to credit itself immediately with a year's interest.

The $5,500,000 borrowed by the Erie was raised for the purpose of paying off the $3,000,000 of 6 per cent. six months' notes which mature to-day, and $2,000,000 additional of similar notes which fall due at subsequent dates up to July 1, next. They were discounted on an 8 per cent. basis, or on a 6 per cent. basis with a commission of 2 per cent. The price at which the notes were offered by brokers to investors showed a yield of about 7½ per cent. The difference between this figure and that at which the company placed the notes represented the bankers' commission.

RECORD FREIGHT TRAFFIC.

Pennsylvania's March Movement Heaviest in Company's History.

Figures just reported by the Pennsylvania Railroad indicate that in spite of the fact that in March heavy snows and floods at Pittsburg rendered railroading exceptionally difficult, the Pennsylvania Railroad's freight car movement was the largest in the company's history.

In March 118,134 loaded and 82,849 empty cars—a total of 200,983—passed Mifflin, whereas during March a year ago, an open mouth, the total was 194,376. In spite of this extraordinary movement there has been no congestion of cars at any point.

The steadily increasing volume of business in the last six years has made necessary an increase in the number of officers and employes from 115,725 to 198,030. Since 1900 two advances of 10 per cent. each have been made in the pay of all employes whose monthly wages are less than $200. The payroll of the system will be $12,000,000 greater in 1907 than in 1906.

The aggregate cost for the six and a half years ended June 30, 1906, of all material and supplies was $412,499,698.62. These unexampled expenditures have added very greatly to the company's earning power as well as its ability to properly serve the public. The Pennsylvania Railroad still has extensive work under way, especially the New York terminal. The Board of Directors, however, has announced the company's policy of improvements for the immediate future as follows:

"The demand for increased capital from other railways, and substantially from all branches of industry, has made the present rates for money exceptionally high. This, together with the increased cost of labor and material; the legislation, both State and municipal, to increase taxes, reduce rates and fares, and force upon the railways large expenditures that yield no direct return, would seem to make it a wise policy on the part of your company to reduce its capital expenditures to a minimum, avoid new undertakings, and restrict its expenditure, for the present, to such work as is now under way and must be completed."

MILL STOCKS RISE.

New Bedford Auction Shows Record Prices in Some Shares.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., April 7.—Record prices and an unprecedented demand for local mill stocks marked the weekly auction sale yesterday.

Acushnet and Wamsutta were the leaders. The former showed sales of three shares at 331 and three at 335. Wamsutta last quoted at 128, sold at 150½. Sixty shares of Potomska brought 123¼. Pierce Mill stock brought 307, a gain of seven over the last previous bid. Rumors of an extra dividend on Wamsutta stock were responsible in some degree for the demand.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Metal Prices Affect Stocks—Heavy Production in Lake District.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 6.—Fluctuations in the price of copper abroad have disturbed the market for stocks somewhat, despite the belief among producers that the movement has been purely manipulative. One of the largest producers, presumably a Calumet and Hecla official, is quoted as saying: "The trade has yet to receive its first warning that consumption has been or is to be checked. It looks as though any possible decline is still months ahead of us."

Importers are evidently making hay while the sun shines upon a difference of 5 cents a pound in London and New York quotations, but it is apparent that this difference cannot be long maintained. If American mine owners are making abnormal profits (some say from 15 to 19 cents per pound produced) there seems to be no way to get the market down to a healthy basis without destroying confidence, and therefore things are allowed to take their own course.

An alliance between Balakiala and Trinity is gossiped to follow the listing this week of the former stock. A sharp advance in price has already occurred without any open aid from Mr. Lawson. Meanwhile Trinity has been soft.

Greene-Cananea made its how on the Exchange on Thursday, but was not very active to begin with.

Butte Central and Superior and Pittsburg announce this week new ore bodies. The former strike is on the third level in Shaft No. 1 and is said to run above 4 per cent. copper and very high in silver. The latter is in the tunnel on the Black Oxide claim at a vertical depth of 500 feet.

The Centennial was transferred to Calumet and Hecla at the annual meeting on Monday. The balance for the year was reported as $340,310, a slight increase over the previous year. The year's production was 2,253,015 pounds of copper, sold at 19.5078 cents per pound.

Superior and Pittsburg's annual report also came out this week. The refined copper product was 9,084,875 pounds, which was sold at an average of 17.97 cents. The cash surplus Dec. 31 was $551,703.

The Calumet and Arizona report says that the company mined 238,341 tons of ore during the year and developed 14,818 feet.

Stockholders of Raven are called to meet in Butte May 15 to vote upon the issue of 500,000 more shares, part of the money to be used in developing the Raven lode and deepening the Raven shaft, which is now down 700 feet. The general manager states that with the money in hand with which to resume work immediately he can be shipping ore in a very short time.

Calumet correspondence states that Mass Consolidated earned $10,000 net in February on shipments of 700 tons of rock daily, and has bright prospects ahead in the Riddle property.

Production figures for March from the lake indicate a considerable increase over March, 1906, but as some reports come in tons of copper and others in tons of rock it is not possible to figure the totals exactly. The Butte district is said to have mined in March 361,690 tons of ore, from which 26,550,690 pounds of copper were produced. For the three months ended April 1 Calumet and Hecla turned out 12,440 tons of copper, which is 1,600 more than in the corresponding period of last year. Greene-Cananea's output in March was 4,250,000 pounds of refined copper; Old Dominion's 3,428,000 pounds, Shannon's 1,470,000 pounds, Calumet and Arizona's 4,112,000 pounds, Boston Consolidated's 19,600,000 pounds. In several instances these figures constitute new records, notably in that of Shannon.

Arizona Commercial shipped during March 4,600 tons of ore, which netted in excess of $10 per ton.

MONEY MARKET CONTRADICTIONS

Interest Rates Recede, Though New Capital Is Still Scarce.

CALL MONEY 1 PER CENT.

Lowest Rate at This Date Since 1894—Cancellation of Gold Engaged Abroad.

One of the anomalies in money market movements which occasionally present themselves is the prevalence of low interest rates at a time when business activity is being halted because of a lack of funds. Such was the interesting conjuncture of events which was presented in this market last week. Only two weeks ago the Erie Railroad indefinitely postponed important improvement work because new capital could not be raised advantageously, and the same road last week paid about 8 per cent. to renew the loans made to cover such portion of this work as had already been completed. On the very day the Erie Railroad was completing arrangements for this loan at about 8 per cent. call money on the Stock Exchange loaned at 1 per cent., the lowest rate quoted at the corresponding date in any year back to 1894. Time loans, too, on stock collateral eased off sharply last week, the sixty-day rate dropping from 6 per cent. to 4½ per cent.

Only one explanation is possible of such contrary indications of the state of the money market. This is the fact that there is much money available for time loans on Stock Exchange collateral, and a still larger amount available for call loans, which cannot be obtained by corporations for improvement or other purposes, even though the borrowing be in the shape of short-time obligations. Thus it happens that the railroads are postponing improvement work because of lack of capital at a time when call and time money rates are showing sharp recessions and in the case of the former receding to the lowest figure in more than a decade for this season of the year.

Two important factors, one following closely upon the other, are generally recognized as the causes for the present decline in interest rates. The first of these was the release of a large amount of funds which for a long period had been tied up in the stock market. The liquidation that was forced by the decline in prices which occurred during the month of March restored to general money market use a large sum that had been previously devoted to the efforts of various pools to carry large lines of stock until such time as the public could be induced to buy. The collapse came before the public had been led into the market, and both call and time loans were sold out in large volume.

Immediately following the collapse in the stock market accompanied by this release of market funds the banks' supply of cash was greatly augmented by the redemption in advance of maturity of many millions of Government bonds and by the deposit in the National banks of New York City alone of more than $17,000,000 of customs money. Much of this money immediately sought employment in short-time loans and in the call money market, with the result that rates fell off sharply.

The suddenness with which this change in the money market occurred is well indicated by the resale in London on Friday of $2,250,000 which on Tuesday had been engaged in that city for import to New York by Lazard Frères. The ease in money here by midweek had caused a sharp advance in foreign exchange, and it became more profitable to resell the exchange than it would have been to import the gold. Instead of importing gold this market purchased sterling exchange in large volume to pay off money that had been borrowed abroad, and the suggestion of the possibility of gold exports in connection with the repayment of foreign loans was advanced while yet it was undecided whether or not the gold that had been engaged early in the week would or would not be brought to this country. Demand sterling, which on Monday last was quoted at $4.8305, by Thursday had risen to $4.8520, and on Saturday went to $4.8570, an advance of 205 points in five days.

These unusual movements in money and exchange rates add interest to a comparison of the past week's money market with those of the corresponding week in previous years. The low rate of 1 per cent. for call loans had not previously been recorded since the Spring of 1904, and in the same week had not been recorded since 1894. This table shows the high, low, and average rate for call loans, and the sixty days and six months rates in the first week of April in each year back to 1893:

MONEY RATES—FIRST WEEK OF APRIL.

	Call. High.	Low.	Av.	60 Days.	6 Mos.
1907	4½	1	2¾	4½@4⅝	5¼@6
1906	60	5¾	15	5 @6	5 @5½
1905	4½	2½	3½	3¾@3½	3¾@3¾
1904	1¾	1½	1⅝	2½@3	3¾@4
1903	15	5½	8	5½@5½	5½@5½
1902	4½	2½	3½	4	4
1901	6	2	3	3½	3½@4
1900	5	3	3½	4	4
1899	10	3	7	4	4 @4½
1898	4½	1½	2¾	4½	5 @5
1897	2	1½	1⅝	2½	3½
1896	4½	2	3½	4	4½@5
1895	5	2	2½	3½@4	4 @5
1894	1½	1	1⅛	2½	3
1893	7	3	5	6	6

It will be noted that while it is necessary to go back to 1894 to find as low a rate as the minimum of last week, the average rate for call loans this past week was higher than the average rate in several intervening years. The time rates also, while showing declines, were still above the average for the corresponding dates in previous years.

Temporarily, at least, the Secretary of the Treasury appears to have adopted the policy of currently returning to the banks at least a portion of the money absorbed by the Government in the shape of customs receipts. This is indicated by the fact that the deposit of custom moneys in the National banks of New York City the past two weeks was not limited to $15,000,000 named in the order issued by Secretary Cortelyou a week ago last Tuesday. The interesting question now arises how far this increase in cash due to additional public deposits will be augmented in the near future by the normal increase in the cash holdings of the banks at this season. The figures below show what the cash holdings of the New York City Associated Banks have been in the first week of April and in the last week of June in each of the past seven years and the increases during this period:

NEW YORK CITY BANKS—CASH HOLDINGS

	First Week April.	Last Week June.	Increase.
1907	$276,019,500
1906	248,266,700	$274,440,640	$26,160,300
1905	250,777,700	297,168,800	12,466,900
1904	295,097,400	224,281,200	20,187,800
1903	224,721,400	238,853,800	14,532,400
1902	247,804,100	261,935,700	18,131,600
1901	252,205,200	251,329,700	*933,600
1900	223,528,700	238,021,700	15,393,000

*Decrease.

There was a substantial gain during this ninety-day period in every year, with the exception of 1901, when there was a small decrease, due probably to the retention at the interior of funds which usually find their way to New York during the Spring months. This may have been due in 1901 to the unusual commercial and industrial activity of that year.

The ninety-day period reviewed in these figures will bring the banks up to the 1st of July next, when, in addition to the usual interest and dividend disbursements, which reach a large total at that date, provision will have to be made for the operations connected with the paying off of the balance of the 4 per cent. Government bonds of 1907. This will also be the period of preparation for the Fall outflow of money for crop purposes, the extent of which will, of course, depend on the success of the crops and on the general business conditions which prevail by the time the harvesting of the crops begins.

ATCHISON'S DIVIDEND.

Road Expects This Year to Earn 14 Per Cent. on Its Common Stock.

Officials of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé, whose common stock dividend was raised the past week from 5 per cent. a year to 6 per cent., estimate that the net earnings of the road for the year ending June 30 next will amount to between 14 per cent. and 15 per cent. on the common stock after the payment of all charges and the dividend on the preferred stock. All that is needed to make such a showing is to have net earnings from this time on equal to those that were recorded last year.

For the year ended June 30, 1906, the Atchison showed net income after the payment of charges of $17,733,209. Adding $526,569 of undivided surplus income of subsidiary companies the earnings amounted to 5 per cent. on the road's preferred stock and 12.31 per cent. on the common stock. For the eight months ended with February the Atchison reported gross earnings of $60,624,013 compared with $53,345,200 for the corresponding period in 1905 and net earnings of $22,657,011 compared with $20,508,068. This was an increase of $2,148,843 in net for the eight months. This is the equivalent of 2.10 per cent. on the $102,000,000 of Atchison common stock. Adding this to the 12.31 per cent. earned on the stock last year the earnings on the common stock this year would amount to 14.41 per cent.

In February, however, there was a falling off of nearly $300,000 in net earnings compared with February a year ago. If this rate of decrease in net earnings tention at the interior of funds which were to continue for the remaining four months of the fiscal year the amount of earnings available for common stock dividends would be larger this year than last by only $900,000, or about six-tenths of 1 per cent. The Atchison management expects, however, that no such unfavorable showing will be made during the balance of this fiscal year.

Foreign Travel

The Guaranty Trust Company issues travellers' letters of credit and travellers' cheques available in all parts of the world. A special telegraphic code for the use of travellers is provided. The London Office, conveniently situated near the Bank of England, receives and forwards travellers' mail and is thoroughly equipped to transact any business of the Company.

The Guaranty Trust Company's enormous business in foreign exchange and commercial credits—nearly one thousand million dollars in 1906—has made its name thoroughly familiar in Great Britain and on the Continent and should recommend its letters of credit to intending travellers.

The Guaranty Trust Company desires to increase the volume of its travellers' credits and invites correspondence upon the subject.

"HOW THEY GOT RICH,"

revised and improved. This booklet, the subtitle of which is "Real Estate Facts," is something every one who wants to get ahead on sound principles should read and study. DO not wait for it if you are one of those that think to plant to-day and reap to-morrow; if you want to get rich as rapidly as that you can generally find a kindly poolroom to take your money and place it on a sure thing, or you can go to the tracks yourself shortly. But if you want to take advantage of a sound principle, a principle as sound as the growth of crops, I mean the increase of real estate values in Greater New York, send your name and address and let us show you what you can do for as little as $60 or $70 down and $12 or $15 monthly.
